This we can prove refers to the Roman Catholic Church. The great tribulation on the church of God, "such as was not from the creation of God to that same time; no, nor ever shall be," spoken of by our Lord in the thirteenth of Mark and twenty-fourth of Matthew, was to be under "the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet." And all know the papacy has filled the picture. It was to stand "in the holy place," or "where it ought not." The holy place was in the temple of God. The Roman army never stood in the holy place; the temple was burned while they were breaking up the city. And more than that, there was no holy place in the temple at that time, for God had left their house desolate long before Jerusalem was destroyed. Then, again, the Romans did not put to death the "elect"; they had all fled from the city; hence the days might have been "shortened" or lengthened, without affecting them. The greater tribulation on the disciples of Christ, i. e., his people to whom he was talking, was under the Roman Catholic Church. Hence the abomination must refer to that. Papacy did get into the "holy place," that is, the Church, or temple of God. "Know ye not that ye are the temple of the living God?"

"SET UP."

"I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet-colored beast." Rev. 17:3. This woman, or church, drunken with the blood of saints, is the papacy, which we have proven to be "the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet." She was "set up" when she took her seat on the beast, or civil power. And we understand the papacy was to maintain its seat or hold "times and laws" for 1260 years, and that the dragon was to give him his seat—Rome. Hence if we can learn when the papal church was supported for an unbroken term of 1260 years by the civil power in Rome and Italy, we shall certainly have learned when the abomination of desolation was "set up."

Some have supposed we must find where the papacy plucked up three horns or divisions of the empire. This, however, does not follow. It says (Dan. 7:24)—"He shall subdue three kings; and he shall speak great words against the Most High; and shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws." Here are four things this horn is said to do; and it must exist before it does either of them. What right, then, have we to fix upon any one thing it was to do, in preference to another, to mark its setting up? Certainly not because of their chronological order in the prophecy; for things are often mentioned first which occur last. See Micah 5:1, 2, where Christ's death and being smitten on the cheek are mentioned before his birth. No one supposes these things occurred chronologically; that he first subdued three kings, then spake great words, then wore out the saints, and last of all thought to change times and laws.

To fix on the overthrow of these three horns as the time when the 1260 years began, is not only arbitrary, but impossible. The prophecy does not inform us whether the days should begin before, or after, or during the time they were being plucked up; and to guess that it was when the third one was plucked up, would savor too much of the way prophecy has been applied during all these years in which the virgins have been slumbering and sleeping. And what is more, expositors do not even agree on which three were plucked up. We do know the papacy wears a triple crown, as a sign of three kingdoms plucked up, and also that he has spoken "great words." But God has given a much more simple way to determine when the abomination of desolation was set up, than by arbitrarily fixing on some one thing that horn was to do; viz., finding when the woman took her seat on the beast. In other words, when the church was first supported by the civil power, as per conditions. It must be in Rome, the seat of the dragon; and for an unbroken term of 1260 years. On this point history is so clear that the question becomes one of the simplest of all historical facts. Both the beginning and end are clearly marked, and the end of that period is within the memory of some now living.

This horn—papacy—does not come up until after the ten divisions of the empire were complete. See Dan. 7:24. And Rome was not so divided until about the fourth century; then we find it in the possession of the Goths for nearly a century more. During this Gothic reign thirteen popes lived and exercised their priestly functions by permission of these non-Catholic powers, or barbarians, as they called them. Hence the papal church was not yet set up, or supported by the civil power; for she only existed in Rome by sufferance.

In A. D. 538, Rome and Italy were freed from the control of these barbarians, and the provinces of Italy embraced the part of Justinian, the Catholic emperor. See Gibbon, Lon. ed., p. 707, from which I will quote—"Belisarius entered Rome Dec. 10th, 536, and the city after sixty years servitude was delivered from the yoke of the barbarians. The Goths, however, assembled in vast numbers for the defense of their country, and besieged the city; which siege was maintained for one year and nine days. . . . The Goths raised the siege of Rome, March, 538; and the Gothic army, lately so strong, was now reduced to the walls of Ravenna and a few fortresses destitute of natural support, and the provinces of Italy embraced the part of the emperor."

Now in 538 the civil power has embraced the part of the emperor and become Catholic. And the Catholic arms, which had long been trying to establish the papacy as head of Rome, were successful. Justinian had issued a decree to that effect some years before, it is true; but here is where it goes into effect. The prophecy does not imply that the church would receive any accessions of power at this time, nor did it. "They," the same dragon power who took away the "daily," have now by force of arms "set up the abomination that maketh desolate." Maketh desolate is in the present tense, when set up. The papacy had desolated God's people before it was set up as head of Rome, and was to continue that work after it loses its seat. "I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints and prevailed against them, until the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." It was to occupy the dragon's seat, and sway "times and laws" for 1260 years. Papacy was supported by the civil power, or people of Rome and Italy, the heart and centre of the Roman empire, from A. D. 538 to 1798; just 1260 years. This fact remains unquestioned by all the world.

It is true the Goths were not entirely expelled from their last stronghold in Italy until the next year; that they invaded the city a number of times after that, in the next few years; and popes were taken prisoners and put to death time and time again during the 1260 years of papal rule. But the people, or civil power, remained true to the papacy (not to individual popes) until 1798. Then, when the beast had carried the woman until God's words—"time, times and a half"—were fulfilled, he let them throw her off and establish a republic. "The judgment sat, and they took away its dominion"; viz., the same "they," the people, who set it up. See French Revolution, by Christopher Kelly, Lon. ed., p. 243—"The Roman republic was proclaimed Feb. 15th, 1798. The arrival of the French army, and the proclamation of the general, had given the fatal blow to the papal sovereignty."

This is the argument, and these are the dates, 538 and 1798, given to the world in the 1843 movement, for the setting up of the abomination of desolation, and the taking away of its dominion. Thus we find ourselves back on the old platform where the virgins stood before they went to sleep. Nor can we preach 1873 from any other stand-point. Our mistake in 1843, and the only one we made in all the prophecies, was in calling the "daily" some pagan institution, taken away as we thought some thirty years before the abomination of desolation was set up, in 508; and began the "thousand" there. If we had begun to reckon from the time the abomination was set up, it would have come to 1873 instead of 1843. The "virgins" would not have gone forth at that time, and Christ's words would have failed. But it is all coming out right, thank God! He had this trial for us, and some of us, by the grace of God, will stand the test and not "draw back."

Having learned that the abomination was set up in 538, we can easily add up the numbers given by the angel. "A thousand two hundred and ninety days. Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days." This thousand evidently belongs to both periods. In other words, it is a single period with two extremities; one reaching forty-five years beyond the other, and given in answer to a single question—"What shall be the end of these things?" I answer, the end of these things was to be the Advent movement, which covers all the wonders Daniel and the angels had been talking about,—the running to and fro, the increase of knowledge, the many being tried and purified and made white, the wise understanding, and the resurrection of many who are sleeping in the dust of the earth. The period had been given for us Adventists, and we alone can understand it. This final answer was given in such a way as to measure this movement. The shorter extremity ended in 1828, where the Advent movement began; and the longer one will end in 1873, where the movement will end.

Who can doubt that God has given his waiting people a place in prophecy as well as an Alexander or Napoleon? From A. D. 538 "there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days. Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh" to the end of the longer period. No political event so much as hinted at. Nothing but a waiting. Why not be satisfied with what God has given? There are those even among Adventists who think this "Millerite" movement, or waiting time, was too small in its beginning to be noticed in prophecy. The gospel itself began too small to suit some people. But God's ways are not our ways.

The answer given to Daniel in these last periods refers solely to God's waiting people; therefore the wicked cannot understand them. They must admit this movement to be of God if they would understand. This they cannot do. They do not believe it. Other prophetic periods they understand. They know the dominion was taken from papacy in 1798, just as well as God's people know it. But here is something they cannot comprehend. The Millerite movement to have a place in prophecy; away with such nonsense! Not one of them can understand, or admit it. But "the wise shall understand."

THE SHORTENING OF THE DAYS.

"And except those days should be shortened there should no flesh be saved; but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened." Matt. 24:22. It has been thought by some that the thousand two hundred and ninety days were shortened to 1260; but there is no Bible or fact in history to support this idea. The days of tribulation under the Catholic church were shortened by the Lutheran Reformation, as all men know. One prophetic period was not shortened into another. No prophetic period had ever been fixed upon during which the papacy should make war on and persecute the elect of God. "I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints and prevailed against them until the Ancient of days came; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." Dan. 7:21, 22. Times and laws were given into his hands for 1260 years, it is true; but the 1290 days of the twelfth chapter had nothing to do with measuring papacy; the only measure put upon it was already determined here in the seventh chapter; while the 1290 days were given to measure quite another thing. "From the time the abomination was set up," there would be 1290 days to the waiting time.

But it is said Christ connects the shortening of these days with the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet. Then why not go to where Daniel speaks of this abomination, and connects it with a shortening or reducing of the tribulation? In Dan. 11:31, this abomination of desolation is first spoken of; and certainly we ought to first look here for the application of Christ's words; and here we find there is a real shortening of the days of tribulation, answering perfectly to what our Savior said. "They shall place the abomination that maketh desolate; and they that understand among the people shall instruct many; yet they shall fall by the sword, and by flame, and by captivity, and by spoil, many days. Now when they shall fall, they shall be holpen with a little help. . . And some of them of understanding shall fall even to the time of the end; because it is yet for a time appointed." Dan. 11:31-35. Here we find a parallel to Christ's words. Under this papal power there was a tribulation on his elect, such as was not from the creation of God unto that same time. It continued until his church, the elect, were almost extinct. Then by the Lutheran Reformation God did help his people, and shorten the days of persecution. And yet some "continue to fall even to the time of the end"; for the Scriptures could not be broken. It was not the taking away of the dominion of papacy in 1798, but the Lutheran Reformation, which saved the "elect" from becoming extinct. Supposing the papal dominion had not been taken away for thirty years after, or not until 1828, the end of the 1290 days; what then? It would not have affected the elect, God's church, one particle. Persecution had already practically ceased before the 1260 expired. Then how were the 1290 shortened to 1260 to save God's elect? But by the Lutheran Reformation the days of tribulation were shortened, and for a purpose; to save his church. "For the elect's sake those days shall be shortened," said Christ. This application means something. There is a ring about it, and common sense, facts, and Bible, to support it. Christ's words and Daniel's and history synchronize.

THE THOUSAND YEARS.

This thousand is mentioned twice, and in a way to give it significance. It is the thousand from which most of God's martyrs will date their experience. From A. D. 538 a thousand years bring us to 1538, where seven of the powers of Europe form the holy league, for the protection of the seed of the woman, or true church, which had fled into the wilderness. "The earth opened her mouth and helped the woman." And thus it was that God "helped his people with a little help." See Church History by Charles Hose, p. 391. "The holy league between the Archbishop of Mentz, the Archbishop of Strasbourg, the Duke of Bavaria, George of Saxony, Henry of Brunswick, Francis of France, Henry the VIII. of England, and other northern powers, was formed in 1538, to stay the papal persecution, and protect the Reformation." Thus were the days of tribulation shortened to one thousand years. (This thousand has nothing in common with that of Rev. 20, which is still in the future.)

DARKENING OF THE SUN.

"In those days," viz., the 1260 set apart for the papacy, or the abomination of desolation, "and after that tribulation, shall the sun be darkened." Mark 13:24. The sun was darkened May 19th, 1780, or eighteen years before the 1260 ended. Thus it was in those days, and yet after the tribulation. Matthew says—"Immediately after the tribulation of those days"; thus making the tribulation something distinct from the days. Immediately means soon after; the next thing in order.

We have proven by facts which no one can question, that the papacy, or abomination of desolation, was set up in A. D. 538. From which date 1260 years bring us to 1798, where all men know "its dominion was taken away." That a "thousand" years from the time it was set up brings us to 1538, where God did help his people, and shorten the days of tribulation. That the "two hundred and ninety" end in 1828, where the Advent movement, or waiting time, began. That the waiting is all God has given to mark the end of those days. "Blessed is he that waiteth and cometh." The thousand, from 538, ended in 1538; the three hundred in 1838; the five in 1843, and the thirty in 1873. Not one of these landmarks—538, 1538, 1798, 1828, or 1873—can be moved, without moving all the rest. They are joined together in history and in prophecy. Each point is supported by facts, not theory. And these facts harmonize exactly with what God had said should mark each date.

What do you think of it? Was "the daily sacrifice" taken away by Roman armies? Did "they," the Roman arms, set up the abomination of desolation? Did it continue as head of Rome for 1260 years, or until 1798? Was its dominion taken away at the appointed time? Has it been undergoing a gradual consumption since then? Did God shorten the days of tribulation on his people by means of the Lutheran Reformation? Was the sun darkened "in those days," and yet after that tribulation? Did papacy, notwithstanding the shortening of the days, maintain its seat, and some continue to fall, even to the time of the end? Did God continue to call out this waiting people, who are to say, "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him," in 1828, at the time appointed? If these all have come at their appointed time, and in their place, have you not faith to believe the one event still future will come true? If so, you must admit that we have but a few short months to settle the question with ourselves and others, of eternal life or eternal death.

God help us to redeem the time, for at the end the vision will speak, and not lie. Amen.

PURE IN HEART.

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."—MATT. 5: 8.

The statement in this Scripture is very plain and positive. It is a saying of Jesus, and it teaches just as truly that the impure in heart shall not see God. When is a heart pure? When it is free from sin, and consequently is impure when it contains sin. The Scriptures say—"He that sinneth is of the devil." Christ "was manifested to take away our sins, and in him is no sin." Sin produces condemnation. Says Paul—"There is, therefore, now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh but after the Spirit." Rom. 8: 1. Then it follows, when we are in Christ, we are where there is no sin; and therefore "no condemnation." We cannot be in sin without being in a state of condemnation; neither can we be in Christ and at the same time be in sin; because there "is no sin" in him. "Whosoever abideth in him, sinneth not." 1 John 3: 6. Hence the only way to be free from sin is to be in Christ. He invites all to come into him, and thus be free from sin. Let us all accept his kind offer, and be "pure in heart."

BUCHANAN.—Our meetings in Buchanan, Mich., continued to increase in interest till their close, Oct. 13th. Many became deeply interested in the subject of Bible holiness as a necessary preparation for the coming of Christ; and a goodly number received special blessings in consequence of their consecration to the Lord. They see the importance of having a pure heart more clearly than ever. The Spirit of God impressed it deeply on their hearts and they feel resolved to be all ready for the glorious day about to dawn, when all the saints will be gathered to the marriage of the Lamb.

There is one noticeable sad fact connected with the present time, and that is the difficulty of persuading the unconverted to come to Christ. They seem to be very indifferent to all entreaties to leave the broad road, and pursue their sinful pleasures with increased greediness. All things indicate that this dispensation is very near its end. It is a solemn hour in which we are living; and yet how few seem to realize it.

POLITICAL EXCITEMENT.—The excitement in political matters is at a high pitch, and daily increasing. If people were as anxious for salvation as they are for the success of their political party, and would make as much effort to secure eternal life as they do the election of the presidential candidates, we think but few would be lost. But all this political strife is opposed to the true spirit of christianity. The followers of Jesus should keep out of this political whirlpool, lest they grieve the Holy Spirit. The political spirit of these days and the Spirit of Christ are opposed to each other. Let us keep unspotted from the world.

WESTERN CROPS.—The corn and wheat crop is excellent in the west this year. There is also plenty of fruit, all of which is as cheap as it is abundant, so that the farmer does not increase his fortune but little more than when he raises not more than half as much, and the prices are higher. The corn stalks vary from five to ten feet in height. The frost has been delayed till the crops are secure. The western farmer has abundant cause this year for thanksgiving for the bountiful gifts of Providence.

FIRST SNOW STORM.—When in Michigan Oct. 14th, we experienced our first snow storm. It came quite unexpectedly, and gave a very wintry look to the face of nature. No doubt it will have a tendency to hurry up the farmers in their fall work. The winters in Michigan are not usually as long as they are in New England. It is an excellent State for fruits and grains, and a nice place for farming.

SACRAMENTO.—Bro. Truesdell, whom we left to look after the flock in Sacramento, Cal., writes that "our dear brothers and sisters have nearly every one remained firm in the liberty of the gospel." They have had precious meetings. Dr. Truesdell is a noble, unsectarian man, who exerts a christian influence wherever he goes. He is a true lover of Jesus.

BEST TRUNKS.—When in Buchanan, Mich., we were shown a new style of trunk, patented July 23d, 1872, by Daniel J. Clark. It is called "Clark's Bent-wood Trunk." We think there is no doubt but that it is the most durable wood trunk ever made. Those who travel on railroads know the value of a trunk that will stand the hard treatment of baggage-men. It is said that trunk dealers complain that they cannot sell but one of these to a man, because it will last a life-time. The bottom and ends are composed of one board bent, and the top and sides are made of bent boards, put together in a very substantial manner. It costs about one-third less than the Saratoga trunk. Mr. Clark has also invented a bent casket or coffin, which is put together without glue, thus preventing the coffin from dropping to pieces as in the common ones, in consequence of the softening of the glue in a little while after it is put into the grave. Mr. Clark's trunks and coffins are taking the premiums, and bid fair to become very popular, because of their durability.

A FEW QUESTIONS.

BRO. GRANT:—Permit me to ask you a few questions, and oblige me by answering them in the Crisis.

1. If sin is a transgression of the law, and the wages of sin death, how can those that perished in the deluge have a resurrection?

2. Where in the Bible do we find that it is appointed unto men to die twice? or rather, is not the destruction of the living wicked at the coming of Christ by fire, the second death in opposition to the deluge?

3. As the devil will be destroyed at the same time, and also death, is not the millennium in the past?

4. Did not the harvest and judicial judgment of the world commence at Christ's ascension?

5. Was not the judicial judgment of the world and evil angels given to the living saints, judging by his words as recorded in the New Testament? and did not the day which God appointed to judge the world in righteousness (as to what is right—works), commence at the same time? Is there any thing before us but for Christ (as executive Judge) to carry out their decision by fire on the living wicked? As it was in the days of Sodom, God rained fire and brimstone, and destroyed them all, even thus shall it be when the Son of man is revealed.

Your Bro. in the gospel hope,
A. K. P. BURGESS.

1. It is certain the Bible teaches that "sin is the transgression of the law," and that "the wages of sin is death"; but do the Scriptures teach anywhere that the first death is the wages of sin, excepting in Adam's case? If the first death is the penalty, then those who are pardoned should not have the penalty. Freedom from sin does not exempt one from the first death, unless he lives till Christ comes. It would be a strange law that had a penalty fall alike on the innocent and the guilty. No matter how well a man lives, he cannot escape the first death. The final penalty for sin is eternal death. Adam's penalty for his first sin was not eternal death; at least there is no such intimation in the Bible. When he was dead, the law was honored and satisfied. If brought to life after that, the law would not be dishonored. It is said of Christ, "that he by the grace of God should taste of death for every man" (Heb. 2: 9); "for as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." 1 Cor. 15: 22. "Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth, they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." John 5: 28, 28.

Those who perished in the deluge are just as truly in their graves as is Korah and his company, who were swallowed up by an earthquake; or any others who were prematuerly cut off by the judgments of the Lord. In all such cases, their lives were only cut short for a few days, weeks, months, or years; but this was not their final punishment, which cannot take place till after the judgment; and the judgment is not till after Christ comes. After the seventh angel sounds, which is certainly a future event, the time will come to bring up the dead for judgment, and to reward the saints "small and great." Rev. 11: 15, 18. "The sea gave up the dead which were in it, and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them, and they were judged, every man according to their works; . . . and whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire." Rev. 20: 13, 15. Here we find that the resurrection of the dead must precede the judgment; and it is certain that judgment must precede punishment; consequently, the first death cannot be the penalty for sin; then it follows that the deluge was not the final punishment for the wickedness of the antediluvians.

2. We see no reason for saying that those destroyed at the deluge were all who died the first death, and that the wicked who are alive at the coming of Christ are all who will die "the second death." If this were true, that none die but once, no person will die the second death. Said Jesus—"He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death." Rev. 2: 11. Does he mean to say that all who overcome shall not be among the living wicked at the time of his second advent? When he says, "He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death," he refers to the entire period during the Christian dispensation, and not merely to those living at the time of his coming; hence it follows that all who have not overcome must be raised from the dead, be judged, and die "the second death."

3. We read—"Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years." Rev. 20: 6. Does the Savior here intend to teach that those who have part in the first resurrection (which took place more than a thousand years ago, if "the millennium is in the past)," shall not be among the living wicked at the time when he appears to set up his kingdom, and therefore cannot die the second death with them? We think no one would advocate such a position. It should be remembered that the first resurrection must precede the millennium. We have yet to learn that any one has "reigned with Christ" a thousand years in the past. Christ has not yet commenced his reign on the earth. Now, then, could those who lived ten centuries ago reign "with him" a thousand years before his own reign commenced? When we reign "with him," that reign is to be "on the earth." Rev. 5: 10. We can find no such reign in past.

4. We are not aware that there is any Scripture to show that "the harvest and judicial judgment of the world commenced at Christ's ascension." He says, "The harvest is the end of the world." Matt. 13: 39. According to Rev. 14: 15, when we arrive at the period when the "third angel's" message is being given, it is proper to proclaim "the hour of his judgment is come;" then we are at the time when it will do to say, "the harvest of the earth is ripe." This could not have been at the time Christ ascended. The time of judgment is at the personal coming of Christ. Says Paul—"Judge nothing before the time, until the Lord come." 1 Cor. 4: 5. As the Lord has not yet come, it follows that the time has not come to judge; therefore it did not commence at the ascension.

5. Our answer to number four also answers the question in number five.

REPENTANCE OF GOD.

BRO. GRANT:—Permit me to ask a few questions. How shall we harmonize Gen. 6: 6 with Num. 23: 19? We read in Gen. 6: 6—"And it repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart." In Num. 23: 19, we read—"God is not a man, that he should lie; neither the Son of man, that he should repent; hath he said, and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good"?

WM. MILES.

The passage in Genesis expresses the feelings of God when he saw the wickedness of man just before the flood. The literal rendering of the Hebrew signifies that the Lord was sorry at heart that he had made man.

The case in Lev. 23: 19 relates to what Balaam was instructed to say to Balak concerning what the Lord had required to have done; and he would not repent, or change from his purpose. He had declared his purpose, and he was determined to adhere to it against all entreaties of Balak. We are not aware that the Lord has anywhere said that he will never be turned from his purpose in relation to any thing; but the Bible gives many examples to the contrary. He says—"At what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom, to pluck up, and to pull down, and to destroy it; if that nation, against whom I have pronounced, turn from their evil, I will repent of the evil that I thought to do unto them. And at what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom, to build and to plant it; if it do evil in my sight, that it obey not my voice, then I will repent of the good wherewith I said I would benefit it." Jer. 18: 7-10.

NON-RESISTANCE.

BRO. GRANT:—Will you please explain Matt. 5: 39-40 in the Crisis?

Yours truly, J. W. KENISTON.

The verses read as follows—"But I say unto you, That ye resist not evil; but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. And if any man will sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also."

The spirit of this teaching seems to be clearly expressed. In no case does it allow any retaliation for evil. If we are wronged, we must bear it patiently. If insulted, we must not return an insult; but on the contrary, good for evil; blessing for cursing. Christianity allows no other way to treat evil.

CORRECTION.—In the last Crisis, by mistake we are made to say—"On the 26th of Sept., 1870, the Italians entered Rome, and deprived the Pope of the last vestige of his temporal power." It should read, the 20th of Sept.

CHRIST'S CONFIRMATION OF "THE PROMISES MADE UNTO THE FATHERS."

"Now I say that Jesus Christ was a minister of the circumcision for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the fathers."—ROM. 15: 8.

This affirmation gives rise to several questions:—

I. In what sense was Christ a "minister of the circumcision"? Certainly not in the sense of being a minister to perform the rite of circumcision, for that work belonged exclusively to the priesthood from the tribe of Levi; and Christ did not belong to this priesthood; "for it is evident that our Lord sprang out of Juda; of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood." Heb. 7: 14. Paul here speaks of the Jewish people as "the Circumcision," in contradistinction to the Gentiles whom he often refers to as "the uncircumcision": and he here gives us the assurance that "Christ was a minister of the Jewish people, for the truth of God, to confirm the promises made unto the fathers." As Christ's ministry was to enforce "the truth of God," and to "confirm" certain promises, the question arises—

II. What promises were confirmed by Christ? And the reply is at hand in Scripture language—"The promises made unto the fathers." Then comes the question, What were "the promises made unto the fathers"? Here we enter a rich field to survey, for God's promises are both "exceeding great" and "precious."

1st. God made Abraham the promise of a certain "land" which he should possess jointly with his "seed," even "forever"—not of a "spirit land" above the skies, but a "land" situated to the "northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward"; "land" that Abraham could "see," and "walk through" (Gen. 13: 14-17); "land" that Abraham actually "sojourned in" for a time (Heb. 11: 9); "land" that Abraham received "no inheritance in" during his life-time, as a gift from God, "no, not so much as to set his foot on," even though God had "promised that he would give it to him for a possession, and to his seed after him" (Acts 9: 5)—"Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ. . . . And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Gal. 3: 16, 29. The "promise" runs not only to Abraham, but to Christ, and to all who are Christ's; and the promise embraces "land" for a "possession"; and as that promise has never been fulfilled, Abraham now being dead, in order to its fulfillment there must be a resurrection; and as a resurrection cannot take place till "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and with the trump of God," that event involves the coming of Christ. The "land" referred to has often been confounded with Canaan, which was promised to Abraham's posterity upon another occasion for a temporal inheritance. This mistake has confused many. Canaan was promised to the natural seed, and that promise was fulfilled.

2nd. God renewed this promise of "land" to Isaac, instead of promising him a sky-realm as a home. "Sojourn in this land, and I will be with thee, and I will bless thee; for unto thee, and unto thy seed, I will give all these countries, and I will perform the oath which I sware unto Abraham thy father; and I will make thy seed to multiply as the stars of heaven, and I will give unto thy seed all these countries; and in thy seed [Christ] shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." Gen. 26: 3, 4.

Notice the following items in this language. (1) Isaac was to "sojourn" in the land, or have it as a temporary residence; (2) ultimately God should "give all these countries," as he had covenanted with Abraham, to be possessed "forever" by him and his great seed (Christ]; which seed should, on the principle of faith, become a multitudinous seed, including some accessions from all the nations of the earth; being blessed through Christ in this life by being made "joint heirs," this being a guarantee that they shall hereafter be joint possessors; and this matter is thus explained by Paul—"Know ye therefore that they which are of faith, the same are the children of Abraham. And the Scripture, foreseeing that God would justify the heathen through faith, preached before the gospel unto Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed. So, then, they which be of faith are blessed with faithful Abraham. . . . That the blessing might come on the Gentiles, through Jesus Christ; that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith. . . . There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Gal. 3: 7-9, 14, 28, 29.

Thus God has promised to give to all the followers of Christ the land which Isaac once "sojourned in"; and that certainly was not the "spirit land" so much talked about by theologians; and while Isaac sojourned in "the land of promise," he was there as an "heir," and not as a possessor (Heb. 11: 9); hence, this promise was not fulfilled during the temporal life-time of these patriarchs, for all that time they were simply "heirs," though they were sojourning "in the land of promise."

3d. The same promise of "land" is renewed to Jacob also, and in such language as to forbid an application of the promise to the "spirit land." "And he dreamed, and behold a ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven; and behold, the angels of God ascending and descending on it. And, behold, the Lord stood above it, and said, I am the Lord God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Isaac; the land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed; and thy seed shall be as the dust of the earth, and thou shalt spread abroad to the west, and to the east, and to the north, and to the south; and in thee, and in thy seed [Christ] shall all the families of the earth be blessed." Gen. 28: 12-14.

Jacob was then reposing on literal "land," not on "spirit land"; and God said to him, "The land whereon thou liest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed." Sky territory will not fill the contract. The "seed" here mentioned is the same seed referred to in the previous promises to Isaac and to Abraham; and Paul affirms that Christ is that "seed"; and on the principle of faith, as already noticed, that seed is multiplied, including accessions to the Abrahamic household from all the national "families of the earth"—some of all these families being blessed with a present heirship to the great promise, which will ultimately secure a possession in the promised "land," when death shall be chased into oblivion, and Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all their fellow-heirs, be waked up to die no more. God's promises to the fathers embrace just such an era of blessedness as this, on this very earth, beyond the reign of death.

4th. David remembered and reiterated these promises. "For evil doers shall be cut off; but those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth. . . . . But the meek shall inherit the earth; and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace. . . . The Lord knoweth the days of the upright; and their inheritance shall be for ever; . . . . for such as be blessed of him shall inherit the earth; and they that be cursed of him shall be cut off. . . . . Wait on the Lord, and keep his way, and he shall exalt thee to inherit the land; when the wicked are cut off, thou shalt see it." Ps. 37: 9, 11, 18, 22, 29, 34.

Here David makes the promised "land" refer to the "earth," and that too after the wicked are "cut off"; then the saints will be "exalted to inherit the land," though they may have previously slumbered long in the dust of the earth. David was also favored with an oath from the God of heaven that he would ultimately place an heir on David's throne, in this very land of promise, to occupy it as long "as the days of heaven"; and Peter in commenting on this oath affirms that Christ is the heir alluded to. Acts 2: 30.

5th. Isaiah, too, had his mind enlightened with the same truth. "Violence shall no more be heard in thy land, . . . and the days of thy mourning shall be ended. Thy people shall be all righteous; they shall inherit the land forever." Isa. 60: 18, 20, 21. Here allusion is made to a land once filled with "violence" and "mourning," which cannot signify a "spirit land"; and we are told of a time to come when its inhabitants shall all be righteous—no sinners left then—thenceforth the saints "shall inherit the land forever."

God also said to the same prophet—"Behold, I create new heavens, and a new earth. . . . For as the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain." Isa. 65: 17, and 66: 22. This same new earth is located by Peter after "the day of the Lord shall come," and "the elements shall melt with fervent heat"; then "we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." 2 Pet. 3: 13. And the Revelator describes the same new earth, and tells us that then "the tabernacle of God is with men," and that from that time onward "there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away." These are among the things promised to the fathers,—a land free from death and sin.

6th. Jeremiah adds his testimony to inform us of God's promise through him—"Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely; and this is his name whereby he shall be called, The Lord our Righteousness." And Paul affirms concerning this same personage—"Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Heb. 9: 29. Then God's Israel, freed from carnality and mortality, will "dwell safely" in the promised land.

7th. Ezekiel thus reports God's promise through him—"Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel. And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you out of your graves, and shall put my spirit in you, and ye shall live, and I shall place you in your own land." Ezek. 37: 12-14. Here is the promise of a landed inheritance for God's people after their deliverance from the grave; and Abraham belongs to the class here referred to: he will then come from the grave to possess the promised land, together with all the sleeping saints.

8th. Daniel reports a promise that God made to him through an angel.—"But the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom forever, even forever and ever. . . . And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." Dan. 7: 18, 27. This kingdom which is to be possessed by the saints, "even forever and ever," instead of being above the skies, is to be "under the whole heaven." That is a plain promise surely, and one which God made to the fathers through an angel of heaven.

9th. God said to Moses—"But as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." Num. 14: 21. That is a glorious promise, and a strong one.

10th. Through Micah we have the following promise,—"In that day, saith the Lord, will I assemble her that halteth, and I will gather her that is driven out, and her that I have afflicted; and I will make her that halted a remnant, and her that was cast far off a strong nation; and the Lord shall reign over them in Mount Zion from henceforth, even forever. And thou, O tower of the flock, the stronghold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion; the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem." Micah 4: 6-8. The Lord who is to be the ruler of this promised kingdom is thus referred to in the same Book,—"But thou Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall come forth unto me that is to be Ruler in Israel; whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting." Micah 5: 2. The Evangelist applies this to Jesus Christ. So here is a cheering promise of a divine kingdom on earth, to endure forever, as the home of God's people of all past generations—a promise worthy of a God. And these are samples of the "promises made unto the fathers." Now we are told that Jesus Christ was a minister "to confirm" these promises. This leads to another question:—

III. How did Christ "confirm the promises made unto the fathers"? We are told by Matthew that "Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom" (Matt. 4: 23); or, as Mark affirms—"Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God." Mark 1: 14. In other words, Jesus confirmed "the promises made unto the fathers," by preaching a coming kingdom in which all these promises should be fulfilled. In preaching the "gospel of the kingdom," Jesus sometimes alluded to its territory, sometimes to its subjects, and sometimes to the King. When referring to its territory, he always alluded to the "land" which God has promised to the fathers, and never to a sky territory. In preaching about the subjects, he always alluded to literal men to be released from the bondage of mortality, as God has promised the fathers, and never to disembodied souls. In preaching about its King, he always admitted that he, as the promised Messiah, should reign in fulfillment of the "promises made unto the fathers;" thus in these different ways did Christ "confirm" these God-given promises. Let us briefly notice the Savior's preaching on each of these points pertaining to the kingdom.

1st. The territory. Jesus in preaching about the coming kingdom, after saying, "The Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him." adds—"Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Matt. 25: 31, 34. Reference is here made to the territorial kingdom—our globe—and is in agreement with another statement made by Christ—"Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth." Matt. 5: 5. Thus Christ has twice told us what realm the saints shall inherit"; and as he does not clash with himself, he must mean by "inherit the kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world," just what he meant by "inherit the earth." And this is in agreement with the prayer Jesus taught us to offer—"Thy kingdom come; thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." Matt. 6: 10. Christ refers to the same territory of the kingdom in the following statement—"So shall it be in the end of this world. The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them that do iniquity. . . . . Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." Matt. 13: 40-43. Thus the very land promised to the fathers will be taken from the wicked, and given to the righteous; and Christ confirmed the promises by preaching a kingdom to come, the territory of which should be the earth.

2nd. The subjects. Instead of preaching that the occupants of the kingdom should be immaterial shades, Jesus preached that physical men would be released from death, and enter the kingdom, in agreement with the promises made to the fathers. "But they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage, neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." Luke 20: 35, 36. The world to come, and the kingdom to come, are but two names for the one home of the saints. Here we learn that men once dead are to be raised, and made deathless, before entering the world to come; hence, literal, material men are referred to, just such men as Jesus alludes to in these words—"This is the will of him that sent me; that every one that seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at at the last day." John 6: 40. Such men "shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven. But the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness." Matt. 8: 11, 12. Literal sinners will be dispossessed, and literal saints take possession of the kingdom. This is a confirmation of God's promise to the fathers that he would open their graves, and cause them to live, and place them in the promised land.

3rd. The King. Christ preached that he himself was to be the King of this kingdom—"I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me; that ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom" (Luke 22: 29, 30); and he confessed to Pilate that he was born to be King. "To this end was I born." John 18: 37. And this was a clear confirmation of a promise made to the fathers, that he should be born in "Bethlehem," and be a "branch" of David, and "reign" in the "earth," even "on the throne of David," as long as "the days of heaven" should last. The kingdom preached by Christ embodied or involved the fulfillment of all the "promises made to the fathers," whether of landed territory, resurrected occupants, or a King to reign on earth forever. The kingdom preached by Christ could not exist without the "land" promised to Abraham for its territory, not without the sleeping patriarchs and prophets for occupants; nor yet without a King on David's throne, whose birth-place must be Bethlehem. All that Christ proclaimed about the kingdom to come, was a confirmation of some of the "promises made to the fathers." Glorious promises, glorious the confirmation of them by Christ, and still more glorious will be the kingdom in which they shall all be fulfilled.

SQUANDERING GOD'S MONEY.

As stewards of Jehovah, we have no moral right to squander his money which is needed for the advancement of his cause. And yet professors of religion, by the hundreds, as well as non-professors, are wasting money every day in the use of tobacco. To say nothing of the detrimental effects produced by its use, is it not robbing the Lord's treasury of funds that the cause of Christ is suffering for? Facts and figures presented in the following extract from a secular paper are too nearly correct to be ignored:—

"The present annual production of tobacco has been estimated by an eminent English writer at 4,000,000,000 pounds! Suppose it all made into cigars, one hundred to the pound, it would produce 400,000,000,000; four hundred billions of cigars!

Allowing this tobacco, unmanufactured, to cost, on the average, ten cents a pound, we have $400,000,000 expended every year in producing a noxious, deleterious weed. At least one and a half times as much more is required to manufacture it into a marketable form, and dispose of it to the consumer. If this be so, then the human family expend, every year, one thousand millions of dollars in the gratification of an acquired habit, or one dollar for every man, woman and child upon the earth!

This sum would build two railroads around the earth, at a cost of twenty thousand dollars per mile, or sixteen railroads from the Atlantic to the Pacific! It would build one hundred thousand churches, costing $10,000 each; or half a million of school-houses, costing $2000 each; or one million of dwellings, costing $1000 each! It would employ one million of preachers and one million of teachers, giving each a salary of $500! It would support three and one-third millions of young men at college, giving each $300 per annum for expenses!"

It is true that only a part of this enormous sum is spent by professors, and a much smaller part by our people, but is not that part too large? "Will a man rob God" of funds to waste in tobacco?

REVIVAL MEETINGS.—At this leisure season of the year, when the attendance and attention of the people can be more easily secured, our people ought to be specially active in holding protracted meetings in every part of the country, to induce unready ones to prepare for the coming of the Lord, as well as to enlighten the error-beclouded intellects of men.

Satan is awake and at work, and the planters and waterers of error are active; why should we witness the activity of the agents of darkness and error, and not be moved with a zeal for God's cause? Let us get a new baptism of love divine, and strike for God without delay. If we cannot do great things, let us do what we can, and do it without delay. If your labors are not blest, pray more, and get your heart right; then "from the abundance of the heart the mouth will speak"—speak of personal enjoyment and inward peace—and others will be electrified more than by cold theorizing from an unsanctified heart.

Let us get men converted to God, as well as to his truth. To this end, let us go out with our hearts full of his love. Then our meetings will not be void of interest. Shall we hear of protracted meetings everywhere in which theology shall not totally overshadow experimental religion? Revivals will follow. "Go work."

W. S.

LAY MEETINGS.—Lay members, as well as preachers, can do a vast amount of good in holding protracted meetings, if properly conducted, in destitute localities. The following is the best method. Let four or five lay brethren, who love to pray and exhort, go together into some new neighborhood, appoint a prayer and social meeting for every evening in the week, and visit from house to house during the day, conversing mainly on experimental religion, and praying with the people, each one taking different roads, and coming round to the meeting at night. Let all speak and pray without being tedious, and give others an opportunity.

This will not be repeated long without a stir in the camp. I have known the best results from such earnest efforts of lay brethren. But let not such brethren enter the field as theological combatants, either in the meetings, or in their visits from house to house. Better get the iron hot before trying to bend it. Better remember that Jesus acted upon the right principle when he said, "I have many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now." So, as men cannot digest every thing at once in our day more than then, we should be "wise as serpents"—charm first, then catch men—present the truth as men can appreciate it, and spice it with true devotion. Try it.

THE duties of holiness are very irksome to men who are not in the element of holiness.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, Aug. 23d, 1872, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord has set the door, and what we do must be done quickly. FINDING FAULT WITH GOD.

A. DEVEREUX.

There is a great deal of finding fault in the world among all classes. But with none is there so much fault found as with God, our great Creator. Fault is found with his existence, his works, word, justice, mercy, foreknowledge, election, etc. Almost all find fault when they read that for his good pleasure we are created. But let us reason together and see if there is any occasion for finding fault with a perfect being. This passage just named gives rise to a query in the minds of many, and even christians, how God can take pleasure in his works, where there is so much suffering, sorrow and death connected with them. Let us consider ourselves a moment, not that we can measure our pleasures by God's to any great extent, but only in a small degree. Do not we take pleasure in some of our works though there may be suffering connected with them? Does the King, Emperor or President stop to consider the suffering and death there will be connected with calling out soldiers to battle, when events of great importance are to be accomplished, and when victory is gained even with much loss of life? Is there not rejoicing amid all this suffering and death? No one would consider this inconsistent; yet the ruler does not take pleasure in the suffering or death, but in the accomplishment of a design which he considers will be for the good of his country, and the increase of prosperity and happiness among his subjects. Neither hath God any pleasure in the death of the wicked, so saith his word. But he designs to insure eternal happiness to those who will accept it. Yet how many consider him unjust and inconsistent.

The ruler of a country has a right to call out soldiers; the laws he has made gives him that right. So God by the laws he has made has a right to create a world and people it. Suppose we could perform all the great and wonderful works which God has wrought, should we not take pleasure in them, feel interested in them? The artist or sculptor take great interest in his skill. But how small are man's works compared with the making of a world and all the planets.

Our God is a God of order or system. His laws are laws of order, right and justice. All his works are systematical and in perfect order originally, from the grass and flowers to the planets and seasons. Then he has perfect knowledge and foreknowledge, and can plan and carry out his plans. The politician who can see years ahead and judge of the future by the present, is a greater man than those who have not such conception and judgment. Who of us would hire a carpenter to build a house for us who did not plan ahead of his work, who did not calculate the length of every beam, and know just as well before it was built how it would look as afterwards? We would think a man who could not do this would not amount to much. Yet how much fault is found with God's foreknowledge and election, and the prevailing idea is if I am elected I shall be saved, let me do as I may; and those who continue in this way we may be sure were never elected.

A little thought on this subject will convince us that God's foreknowledge does not change our course in the least, or lessen the necessity of our making some effort on our own part. God will never drive us to be saved. He prefers volunteers.

Fault is found because God created us as we are. If we consider this matter with an unprejudiced mind, we shall see that God made us the best he could. Had we been left out creation would have been imperfect, and his laws of order been broken. We read he made the angels first, then after the world was made he commenced with the creeping things, and so on to the highest order of animals; and we must necessarily infer that he graded them perfectly, both physically and mentally. Hence we see a vacancy left between them and the angels when we compare ourselves with the highest order of animals, and we see no other being could possibly fill that place but man, according to God's laws of order, then deals with him fairly and justly as he does in all cases. He has given him faculties that must be exercised in order that he may be properly called man; then gives him a law to keep, so that his will may first be called into action. Had we not the power to choose for ourselves, we should not be above the beast in that respect, and could not be what God designed us to be without that power.

Then the question arises, why put Adam on trial when he knew what he would choose? God wished to teach him his responsibility, and that he was capable of making some effort on his own part towards retaining his position, or choosing another; and how many condemn Adam for his choice; but we must judge him by ourselves. No doubt he did better than any of us would have done; probably he stood his ground longer with Satan's temptations than we should, for how easily we often yield. No doubt he was many times tempted by the enemy; and when we consider how human nature likes to know something new, and how inquisitive we are concerning mysteries, we cannot wonder that he made the choice he did.

But God knew his weakness and ours, and has provided the best way, and all the way there was, by which our natures may be brought into a condition fit to live in Eden restored. Then let us cease our doubtings. We hope some one will write on this subject who can do it justice. Geologists have learned some things concerning the order of creation, which would be very beneficial and instructive to us, and show us more plainly his wonderful work, so we can love and praise him more.

True geology and the Bible agree, and because some of it conflicts with the Scripture, we must not cast away that which will enlighten us on a subject which should interest us all.

Bro. Enoch Morrill writes:—"The New Hampshire Mission Tent is still at Canterbury, and a great work is going on. Sinners are being converted, and wanderers are getting back. Our bills which we sent out inviting all classes and denominations drew forth those that we never could have reached in any other way. Scores of Shakers have attended, and we have had the privilege of preaching the gospel of the kingdom to those that have never before heard. This section has never before had such a meeting, and we must stay another week. Pray for us and the meeting."

Death of Jean Henri Merle D'Aubigne.—A despatch from Geneva states that Jean Henri Merle D'Aubigne, professor of church history in the Theological College in that city, died the 21st inst. The decease of this celebrated theologian and popular writer causes general sorrow.

HOW CAN I BECOME HOLY?

If, after a careful consideration of our condition, we find that there is an internal warfare, and that in spite of our firmest resolutions to keep ourselves in the love of God, yet there is a continual uprising of the fleshly lusts against purity, and we also find the Scriptures exhorting us to holiness and purity, and requiring it at our hand in the judgment day, then the question becomes pertinent, "how can I become holy?"

There is no use in answering this question to a person who does not long for it. I have seen some whose consciences were so defiled that they were indifferent to the whole subject, and would hardly give it a second thought. The conscience must be thoroughly aroused upon this point. This is the first thing necessary to be realized in this work. Like a man seeking to escape a burning building, so the conscience must be aroused to seek escape from the inward pollutions of sin.

A deep conviction of the necessity of deliverance must settle down in the heart to make the work thorough. A study of the Bible upon the subject by the aid of the Holy Spirit will accomplish this in most people, while others need a more complete self-examination to fully feel their need.

But when the soul agonizes for deliverance, then how can it be wrought out? I answer, there is but one way taught in the Scriptures, or known by experience, and that way is, "the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin," and, "he is faithful to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." We cannot cleanse ourselves by works or will-power. We may lop off the branches and sprouts of sin, but we cannot dig out the roots. In other words we may refrain from actually committing sin, but we cannot change our natures that continually prompt us to sin. God alone can do that. Hear the great apostle: "And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and your whole spirit, and soul, and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it." (1 Thess. 5: 23, 24.)

God alone can pardon. God alone can cleanse. Yet there are conditions laid upon us before he will accomplish the work. These should be fully understood by us. What are they? Simply an entire consecration of our bodies to God for this very purpose, and an earnest, prayerful seeking for full deliverance. This is the exercise of faith.

It is not doing, but yielding. What for? To obtain joy? No, but peace. For the fulness of Christ, instead of the fulness of Satan. Joy will come, but it is not the joy itself the soul is hungering for. A hungry man sits down to eat, not because he is sorrowful, but because he craves food; but when fully satisfied he rejoices with his friends.

Do you feel an inward lack of purity, and have you a longing to have the foe turned out of your flesh, and to "be filled with all the fulness of God"? Do you wish this civil war to cease, and your warfare henceforth to be against "foes without" instead of "foes within"? Then give yourself up to God for this purpose. Let go of the world. Let go of everything but Jesus. Do not try to get up any particular feeling, or try to manufacture more faith. Let go of all but Jesus. Never mind what your feelings are, get down. Get to the bottom of all earthly hopes and aspirations. Make an entire consecration of yourself, and all you have, to do and to suffer the will of God. Do not worry, or be particular about how God shall deal with you. Sign a blank, and let God fill it out.

Are you afraid folks will think and call you a Methodist? That is awful. Better go to ruin than to be called thus? Are you afraid you will make some demonstrations that would be ridiculous, and men will deride you? That would be terrible. Had you not better lose your life than suffer thus? No. Forget all this. Give all to Christ. Let him do as seemeth him good.

By faith alone can the work be done on our part. None can "purify himself" or "purify the heart," except by faith, and this is simply submitting to God, and refraining from our own works.

Much more might be said upon this subject with profit, but I leave it here, for my next article on "Personal Experience."—Frank Burr, in Advent Christian Times.

CHARITY AND DRESS.

Since so much has been said of the good which Christian gentlemen might do if they would give up the use of tobacco, I thought I would send you a fact which would suggest to the Christian ladies how much good might be done if they would give up, if not all superfluity of dress, yet all dress that would be hideous if it were worn by any less beautiful than they.

I have in my church two orphan sisters, who are in great affliction, and are wholly dependent on the church for support. There is also in my church a poor but plain woman, who has often lectured "us Methodists" because we do not live up to the rules with regard to dress. This sister gave the pastor's wife one dollar, the other day, for these suffering ones, and at night called to see them, and, in shaking hands with the dying girl, left a ten dollar bill in her hand. When she found out how much it was, the sister, who was able to walk, went in as great haste as her weakness would allow, to the door to call sister A. back, for she thought she had made a mistake. The girls first cried for joy, and then realized the truth of the text which saith, "So he giveth his beloved sleep," in a manner in which they had not for some time.

The difference between a two and a twelve dollar bonnet did this. We can honor sister A., after this, in all her lectures, and know they are backed by a life founded on the same principle as her words show forth. Many Christian women would deny themselves thus if they saw Christ himself in need; but inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto me," stands true to-day as when first spoken.—Christian at Work.

Obituaries.

Lamprey. Died, of typhoid fever, Sept. 6th, 1872, at his father's residence on Long Island, Lake Winnipesaukee, N. H., John C., son of B. B. and Arvilla Lamprey, aged twenty years and three months.

He was a dutiful and affectionate son, a worthy member of society, and a consistent christian, highly esteemed by all who knew him. The day was appointed for his marriage, but he died eight days before the time. May the intended bride, the parents, and the brothers and sisters of John be ready to meet him on the resurrection morning, that they may all dwell together in the kingdom of God. C. W. Sargent.

Bunker. Died in Stanstead, P. Q., July 1st, Daniel D. Bunker, in the thirty-third year of his age.

His death was caused by two logs rolling on him while peeling bark in the mill yard. After four weeks of suffering, he died in full hope of a glorious resurrection when Jesus comes. He leaves a wife and two children, besides numerous other friends to mourn his early death. An appropriate discourse was preached by Eld. David Merrill, from Job 14: 14.

Tucker. Died in Haydenville, Mass., Sept. 14th, 1872, of typhoid fever, Minnie Lois, youngest daughter of Alvin and Julia M. Tucker, aged seven years, three months, and nine days.

Our hearts are filled with grief. Words of comfort were spoken by Bro. Geo. L. Teeple, from Jer. 31: 15–17. Pray for us.

A. & J. M. Tucker.

Rowe. Died in North Norway, Me., Oct. 4th, 1872, of consumption, Sr. Roxanna, wife of Bro. Adna Rowe, aged twenty-seven years and nine months.

Sr. Rowe calmly fell asleep in Jesus. She waits for the long expected day of glorious immortality. She leaves a husband, a little daughter, and a large circle of friends, who deeply mourn her loss. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer, from 1 Cor. 15: 54.

J. Whitman.

Shade. Died in Galva, Ill., Sept. 28th, 1872, Bro. Adam Shade, aged seventy-three years.

He died on his birthday, going down like a shock of corn fully ripe, all ready for the harvest day. Services by the writer. L. F. Cole.

Eglin. Fell asleep in Jesus, at Stockbridge, Vt., Oct. 7th, 1872, Charlie W., only child of Adam and Gustie E. Eglin, of Dover, N. H., aged three years, seven months, and three days.

Charlie was a superior child. All who knew him loved him.

The hope of the gospel is the only hope of this deeply afflicted family. They sorrow not as those that have no hope, but expect to meet little Charlie in the kingdom of God when Jesus comes.

At the funeral words of comfort were spoken by the writer. O. W. Kimball.

Bartlett. Died near Moose Lake, Minn., Sept. 4th, 1872 (by the accidental discharge of a gun), Thomas J., only child of Cyrus and Martha J. Bartlett, of Buckfield, Me., aged twenty-seven years.

His loss is deeply felt by his afflicted parents. He was a young man of integrity and promise. May the Lord sustain them under this severe trial, and bring them to enjoy eternal life in the kingdom. E. M. Haggett.

FRANCE.

PLEA FOR PRINCE NAPOLEON.

Oct 16. M. Rouher has made an appeal to the permanent commission of the Assembly in behalf of Prince Napoleon. The Prince proposes to prosecute the Minister of the Interior for expelling him from France without the authority of the law. The prince and princess have left Germany for Milan.

PRINCE NAPOLEON—THIERS' THREAT.

Oct. 17. The banishment of Prince Napoleon continues to be a subject of general comment, and is actively discussed in private circles. A communication received from the Prince to-day states that, in accordance with the advice of friends, he will not as first intended prosecute Thiers in the courts for having ordered his forcible expulsion from France, but that he will bring the matter before the National Assembly. The Prince's friends are laboring zealously to secure a repeal of the order expelling him, and are confident of a vote in his favor. Great importance is attached to the action of the Assembly in the matter, and it is authoritatively announced that should that body revoke or modify the decree of banishment promulgated by Thiers, the latter will instantly retire from the executive.

THE FRANCO-AMERICAN POSTAL TREATY.

The Franco-American postal treaty has been submitted to the Minister of Finance for ratification. The treaty will be laid before the American government for final action by Minister Washburne upon his arrival at Washington.

CONFIDENCE IN THE ADMINISTRATION.

TURKEY.

AMICABLE SETTLEMENT.

Oct. 16. The difficulty between the Turks and Montenegrins, which arose a short time ago, and threatened the opening of the whole Eastern question, has been amicably settled, and official notes of a peaceful character have been exchanged by the Turkish and Montenegrin governments, and further disturbances are not anticipated.

SPAIN.

THE INSURRECTION OVERCOME.

The insurrection at Ferrol has been overcome by the government authorities and order restored. The insurgents have been dispersed, and a large number captured, including several instigators of the disturbance who will be speedily tried by court-martial.

GREAT BRITAIN.

London, Oct. 21. A Paris despatch states that a project is now on foot among the supporters of Thiers in the Assembly for the purpose of creating him President of the Republic for life. This is a subject of much anxious political discussion among all parties, and will doubtless receive the almost undivided support of the commercial community. The principal movers in the scheme are leading the members of the Right and Left Centres in the Assembly, between whom negotiations are now pending, with a view to a fusion of both centres in the interest, and for the support of Thiers. This powerful accession to the strength of Thiers' adherents will, it is considered, have the effect of securing a majority in favor of the new project of establishing the life Presidency when it comes up in the Assembly. The Bonapartists and legitimist members are bitterly opposed to the project, and are taking every means to procure its defeat. The ultra Republican members have been greatly influenced by the announcement of Gambetta's declaring his allegiance to Thiers, and will not, it is believed, offer any violent opposition to the new movement.

PRINCE NAPOLEON.

Prince Napoleon has addressed a communication to the Procureur General, Le Blond, demanding legal redress for the insult and injury put upon him by Thiers in expelling him from France. The appeal is made in accordance with the provisions of the penal code. Should it be rejected or disregarded, the prince will commence personal proceedings in the courts against the parties concerned, and will avail himself of all legal means to procure the restoration of his rights as a citizen of France, and the punishment of those who have illegally driven him from the country.

In Brief.

—— In pulling down the old mint buildings, Cowgate, Edinburgh, there has been discovered a specimen of the medal struck by Gregory XIII., to commemorate the massacre of St. Bartholomew.——The San Francisco Call says that no less than fourteen persons are lying in the cells of the prison in that city awaiting trial for murder.——Cardinal Bonnechose, who has just returned from a visit to the Holy See, assures President Thiers that the Pope will remain in Rome.——Preparations are being made for a grand mass meeting of Internationals to take place at Hyde Park next month.——Five thousand laborers on the steamship docks, in Liverpool, are on a strike.——An event which may precipitate a crisis in the East of Europe is recorded. Turkish and Montenegrin troops have come into several serious collisions, and a large amount of bloodshed on both sides is reported.——The war in Germany between Church and State seems steadily advancing by regular stages, closely resembling those which generally precede political war.——From Scotland we learn that snow was deep in some parts of Glen Tilt last month. Ben Nevis is covered half way down its side with snow.——An entirely white lion has been captured and is exhibited in Buenos Ayres, where ten thousand dollars was offered for it by an English merchant for the zoological gardens in London.——At the trial at Leipsic of Dr. Hepner, the Socialist leader, for attending the International Congress at the Hague, the Court disregarded his plea that he attended as a journalist, and sentenced him to one month's imprisonment, and debarred him from appeal to a higher Court.——It is stated that the damage done to Canterbury Cathedral by the recent fire will necessitate an expenditure on the edifice of about twenty thousand dollars.——A flying squadron of five German men-of-war is now fitting out for a cruise around the world. The fleet sails directly for the West Indies, and thence will proceed to New Orleans and other ports in the United States.——The horse epidemic has attained such alarming proportions in Montreal that the street cars of the City Passenger Railway have been withdrawn, and the carters' stands are deserted.——Geneva has concluded an eventful summer with a conference of the Evangelical Alliance, in which the venerable Merle d'Aubigne has been taking an active part. He was asked to draw up an address to the Old Catholics at Cologne.——It is now openly said that Prince Napoleon was sent into France by the ex-Emperor to get himself arrested and kicked out, so that he might have an opportunity to bring the matter before the courts, and thus endeavor to belittle and degrade the dignity of the Republic. The trial of Prince Napoleon's suit will be a very interesting one.——It was resolved almost unanimously, we are assured, at the recent Peace Congress at Lugano, that the league should support every effort made for the introduction and maintenance of arbitration in international affairs, and if it esteemed it proper, to take the initiative in the matter; but the Congress stated anew that the only actual means to abolish war, and to do away with standing armies, is the formation of a Republican federation of peoples under the name of the "United States of Europe."——The War Department has received despatches during the past week indicating that the Indians in the Northwest continued to exhibit a warlike, hostile spirit, and may give temporary trouble upon the line of the Northern Pacific railroad.——Some five thousand persons in Chicago participated in a demonstration against the enforcement of the Sunday liquor law.

It is said the Jews in this country are scarce of Rabbis. There are over two hundred synagogues, and only eight Rabbis who preach to Jewish congregations in the English language, with no young men in training to be their successors. Their theological school, Maimonides College, at Philadelphia, is very poorly sustained. This looks as if the American Hebrews were backsliding.

— A man who participated in the Communist revolt in Paris has surrendered to the custody of the police magistrate of Brussels, and made a declaration that he was an accomplice of Troppman, who murdered an entire family near Paris. An examination of the mental condition of the man, showed him to be of sound mind.

I was appointed by the Lawrence Time Conference to bring before the brethren scattered abroad in the New England States, and elsewhere, the importance of another Time Conference, to be held in some convenient locality, for the purpose of still further discussing this most important subject., viz., the definite time for the coming of our Lord from heaven, and to learn or obtain the mind of any church in a convenient locality, if such a convention is desired, or would be regarded as profitable among them. Let any church that desires such a meeting, and could accommodate the brethren that would attend, send notice to the writer of the fact, and as to when it would be convenient for them that such a meeting should be held. Let action be taken on this subject without delay. L. T. Cunningham, Sec. pro tem of the Lawrence Conference.

MY LESSON.

Down at His feet I knelt
With heavy heart and head bent low;
"If I but touch His garment's hem,
If I His love and pity claim,
For me shall healing virtue flow."

So reached I forth my hand.
Surely I touched, yet where the pow'r?
His love, his pity then I plead,
By all the blood for me he shed,
By all his suff'rings in that hour.

And yet no voice I heard,
And heavier grew my heart with fear.
"I can do nothing more, my God,"
My heart cried out, "lift thou the load,
And let me feel thee drawing near!"

Still darkness, silence all;
And then my hand relaxed its hold.
I said, "His promises do fail,
The prayer of faith does not avail!"
And then my heart grew strangely cold.

But O, what wondrous love!
He did not spurn me from his sight—
Nay, rather did his pity move;
And love and pity then to prove,
On my blind eyes he poured the light.

And then I saw it all—
He will be trusted without sight,
And though the answer be delayed,
No christian heart need be afraid;

He knows our every need,
And he in turn will give supply.
Faith's trial hath the deeper root;
He waiteth for the perfect fruit,
And then to us there comes the joy.

AN OCEAN VOYAGE.

(From our English Correspondent.)

It is Saturday, the 14th of September, and twelve of the clock. The sun has topped its highest ethereal eminence; the workmen leave their toils for their noon-day rest and refreshment; but more to your correspondent than either of the foregoing, the good ship Anglia is beginning to give signs of awaking from her temporary torpidity. Now she roils the water with her propeller. She is moving away from her wharf. Her tackling is cast off, and she has started for her transatlantic haven. Friends stand on the end of the pier, and with the waving of handkerchiefs, the swinging of hats, the falling of tears, and the laugh of the merry-hearted, we are wished a prosperous voyage and a speedy termination.

We have now fairly left our anchorage. The pier is behind us, and we are sailing out into the ocean. We mark the ranches that beautify the sea-coast, and that is about all; for there is very little of interest in to-day's voyage. The passengers all in confusion; and rather than tell you things of threadless interest, I will introduce you to our ship and line.

That she is a noble, sea-worthy vessel is an ascertained and proven fact. Month in and month out she has made the passage backward and forward. Her name is the Anglia. She is one of the "Anchor" line of steamers; is Clyde-built, and very substantial. Her deck boards, so the captain told me, are three and a half inches thick, and for greater strength are belted and screwed down. Her registered capacity is nearly fifteen hundred tons; and she may carry in all nearly seven hundred passengers. She is laden with a general cargo, but the principal part of her freight consists of between three and four thousand bushels of grain. Her engine is in the usual state of the oceanic steamers, its capacity being four hundred and fifty horse power. Her captain's name is Small, though our affable commander is neither small in bulk or geniality.

The officers and stewards are gentlemen of culture and urbanity—so different from the hard, coarse run of officers. And as for the sailors, it was a remark that we had no reason to change in all our voyage, that we did not hear an oath from any one of them. Stiffness and starchy politeness are very wisely exchanged for pliable friendliness; and though the officers do not neglect their proper duties, yet passengers and crew seem to be welded into one common brotherhood. No wonder, then, that the "Anchor" line is so popular. When officers try to engage passengers and relieve the tedium of the voyage with spicy talk and kindly usage and notice, we cannot but feel that the elements of success, because of attraction, are existing in such companies.

I see there is a book lying on the saloon table. It is elegantly bound in blue and gold, and its title is—"The Maritime Passenger's Universal Companion." It is an independent work published in the interest of passengers, so that we shall look at it with more interest. Conning it, we find it a report of all the steam lines for 1870. We learn from it that the "Anchor" line—of which our ship is a member—far outstrips its competitors, carrying in that year between the two countries no less than eighty-nine thousand six hundred and twenty-six passengers, which was twenty-four thousand one hundred and fifty-two more than the second best. The list and figures are as follows: Cunard line, fifty-five thousand one hundred and one; Inman line, sixty-five thousand four hundred and seventy-four; Williams and Guion line, thirty-four thousand nine hundred and twenty-eight; Anchor line, eighty-nine thousand six hundred and twenty-six; Hamburg-American line, twenty-eight thousand and ninety-three; General Transatlantic line, seven thousand and thirty; National line, forty-three thousand one hundred and fifty-two; North German Lloyd's line, thirty-five thousand three hundred and nineteen. Comment on these figures is unnecessary; they speak for themselves. We learn that the ramifications of this line are very wide-spread. Besides plying between the two principal continents, it runs steamers to Scandinavia, up the Mediterranean, and to India. Talking to the captain we heard the highest compliment paid to the efficiency and generosity of its princely owners, the Hendersons. The season is now far advanced, and travelers are fewer than usual; yet we have in the Anglia more than a hundred passengers; and we learn all her berths are engaged for the return trip.

Ding-a-ding! a ding-a-ding! 't is the music rung out of a bell by a steward, who stands just outside of the cabin, and dashes it backward and forward as if he meant it. And so he does, for it is his business. We go down to lunch, and after paying our respects to the edibles and drinkables, engage ourselves in various necessary or recreative occupations till four o'clock, when dinner is ready. A word for the dinner. The spread is liberal, suitable for epicure and health reformer alike. Even the dietetic might find satisfaction here. We do not see how a better table could be provided. Even our worthy Editor might, if traveling by this line, leave his oatmeal at home.

Going on the deck we see a steamer plunging her gallant front into the sea, hasting to her port. She belongs to the same company as our own vessel. Her name is the Adrian. She is in the Mediterranean and Atlantic service; has been out about twenty days, more or less. She has picked up on her voyage and is towing a vessel, said to be laden with brandy and wine. Said vessel has seen some bad weather. She has been fouled by a storm; the bulwarks of her left side, amidships, are smashed in by the battering of tons of water, and her mainmast is broken off half way down.

"Night's sable mantle falls o'er all,"

and down we go to our berths, where balmy sleep steeps our eyes and smooths our brows with delicious refreshment.

It is Sunday. Your correspondent is the only preacher on board, and is asked to address the company. Consenting to the desire he preaches on repentance, because the kingdom of heaven is at hand. To-day at twelve we are two hundred and seven miles out from Sandy Hook.

The next four or five days are grand and terrible with storm. The united fury of a wind, rain, and sea-storm, plunges against our ship and threatens to destroy us. We are confined to the cabin. The sea sweeps our decks, rushes up over the side of our vessel, and falls in watery lumps on our deck. We are fairly in a cyclone, which with restless force lashes us. The passengers are not altogether inapprehensive of the situation. Some are even anxious, inquiring almost hourly, Has the storm abated? But I fear no evil.

In the midst of the commotion Christ is my peace. Conscience is satisfied with the one and all-sufficient sacrifice and oblation made by Christ of himself on the cross. And as the war between God and myself has ended in my submission to him, it is "peace with God." Now may our faith be tested. And indeed I look on the whole scene and realize the silence and unconsciousness of death. But my heart finds rock and joy in a first resurrection and transformation to the glorious image of Messiah. 'Tis death, but 'tis life. 'Tis silence, but singing. 'T is oblivion, but eternal life. 'Tis corruption, but incorruption. I am satisfied to abide God's will, though I have no desire for death. O this is the time and situation to try a man's faith. But there is support in the "blessed hope," while the fables of creedism are moonshine and broken reeds. And I felt by operative faith the everlasting steadfastness of belief founded on God's word.

How I was sustained in this time, I have not words to say; but I have by me two hymns written in the storm, one of which I present to your readers.

The billows grandly swell,—
God doeth all things well:
Rolleth from side to side our ship,
And oft doth she the sea-wave dip;
And yet He doeth well.

Rising on crested wave,
Sinking in watery grave,
Lifting and falling with the swell,
Our steamship Anglia,—yet tell,
God doeth all things well.

Doth he not it that we Might yet more trustful be?
Yes, O my Father, 't is thy will
That we confide, and fear no ill,
For thou dost all things well.

Then fearing not the storm,
But seeing there thy form,
Radiant, and with beloved smile,
Through all this awe-inspiring while,
We sing, God doeth well.

And when all seas are past,
And we arrive, at last,
We'll join to sing forevermore,
God hath done all things well.

But lest I weary you and your readers by the detailing of a voyage of but little more than personal interest, I skip the rest of the passage, saying in a few sentences that we outrode the storm, and with calmer days and under brighter skies finished our voyage in prosperity, after having experienced nearly fourteen days of sea life.

Another day and a half's railway travel brought me to my home and beloved, and I am now here to be blessed of God, and labor in downright earnest for the conversion of men to the Lord our Righteousness. May wisdom be given and fruit be found unto his praise at his appearing. W. K.

LETTER FROM BRO. P. G. BOWMAN.

Bro. Grant:—I wish in this public manner to return my humble thanks to the great Father of love, for having blessed, sustained and comforted me during nearly three months ramble over the New England States, and for having returned me in peace and safety a few days since to the enjoyment of my family and friends. Last Sabbath I preached to a large and attentive congregation in the open air. I gave an account of my stewardship during my absence, and what I thought I had accomplished for myself and family and to assist them to build their houses of worship. They expressed their gratitude and satisfaction at the result. They have secured two lots and are making arrangements to put up two houses of worship; so I hope by the blessing of a kind Providence we shall soon have (at least at those points) some place to screen us from the weather when we meet to worship.

My trip North has been of great interest, and I trust not without profit to myself. A stranger taking a trip on the Hudson river from New York to Albany, to Troy, to Saratoga Springs, to Sandy Hill; to Castleton and Rutland, Vt.; to Keene, N. H.; to Vernon, to Worcester, to Springfield and Boston, etc., etc., is struck with wonder and delight at the mountains and valleys, the creeks and rivers, the bays and lakes; and then the outlay of millions and millions of dollars in bringing to the highest state of cultivation and production a naturally barren soil, and filling those vast regions of mountains and valleys with cities and villages, towns and hamlets, with all sorts of machinery, employing thousands upon thousands of hands in producing everything that the most cultivated civilization can desire. As all this expenditure of art and science, of toil and money, came flashing with almost overpowering grandeur upon my vision as I was dashed with railroad speed through the enchanting scene; as all these evidences of vitality, of progress and prosperity, presented themselves, I was ready to ask myself the question, Are not all these people happy? Do they not all love the Giver of all good? Do they not all love one another? Have they not a heaven upon earth? Such would seem to be the conclusion a surface view of these things would lead to.

But, alas! alas! "only man is vile," amid all his wisdom and vitality, his pomp and splendor, his hopes and fears, his fuss and fashion. The nations are angry, and God is preparing them for the great, awful and final catastrophe when he shall break them with a rod of iron and dash them in pieces as a potter's vessel. Ps. 11: 9. He shall grind them to powder, and the wind shall sweep them away like chaff. Dan. 2: 35. He shall put down all rule, and all authority and power. 1 Cor. 15: 34. O Jesus! prepare us all for thy speedy coming. Amen.

CHRISTIAN.

J. W. THOMAS.

Are you a christian? Then you are in Christ. He is the founder of Christianity. His cause, though weak in the beginning, has reached an astonishing magnitude. Other systems have come to nought. Their founders were but sinful men; they died, and their doctrines have not reformed the lives of their followers.

But Jesus lives. His cause has been a success. His teachings have reformed his followers. Though he died and was buried, yet he lives as the great Head of his church. Death hath no more dominion over him. He ever liveth and carries forward with mighty power the cause he established so long ago. All who believe in him are said to be in him. It is a peculiar expression, yet it has deep significance. It it implies a thorough change of heart, and a living, vital union with him as the holy Son of God. Many bear the name christian, and are united with the church, but they are not united to Christ.

There is a vast difference between being in a church or a conference, and being in Christ. Our union with Christ will be evinced by the effect which such a professed union produces in our lives. If there is no change for the better, then we are deceived. We had better examine ourselves and see if our faith is one that works by love and purifies the heart. Are you in Christ? or are you a christian in name only, and not in fact?

Are you a christian? Then you are not your own. You belong to Christ. What he buys and pays for belongs to him; it is his property. If you are a christian, Christ has bought you and paid for you. He has placed his seal upon you as his property. The devil has no claim on you, and you have no claim on yourself. Henceforth you are not to serve Satan or yourself. You are to serve him whose property you are. It was no mean price that was paid for your redemption. It was not silver, nor gold, nor precious stones. No, these were inadequate to meet the demands of a broken law. Had the whole earth been a solid lump of gold, it would have been insufficient for a ransom price. Something more valuable than this was required. What was it? Who can tell? Let Inspiration answer—"Ye were not redeemed with corruptible things as silver and gold, from your vain conversation, but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot." This was the price. It was blood, precious blood. O how can you serve self and the world when it cost the Savior his own precious blood to redeem you? How strange that Christians will adorn themselves in fashionable gewgaws, and yield their bodies as instruments of unrighteousness, when, if they did but consider it, they are not their own. Christ has a claim on every part of us. "What, know ye not that ye are not your own, for ye are bought with a price. Therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit, which are God's." Ye are Christ's.

Are you a christian? Then you have the Spirit of Christ. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his." Do not mistake. It is of the utmost importance that you have the Spirit, yea, it is absolutely necessary to membership in the true church. I do not mean that any particular local church is the true one, for there are many in all the local churches who have not the Spirit; but I mean that the true church is made up of all who have the Spirit of Jesus the world over. All true christians are members of the church of Christ. Do not mistake. Many will be deceived. Be sure you have the Spirit. Do not take animal emotions for the operations of the Spirit. Do not take a good natural disposition for the effects of the Spirit. Do not take up with any thing short of the real thoroughgoing fruit of the Spirit. If you have the Spirit, you are a downright good man or woman. There is no hypocrisy in the Spirit. It is in all righteousness, and goodness, and truth. Those who have it are filled with love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance.

Wherever you see this fruit, know that it does not grow in nature's garden. It is the work of grace. What the church needs is a baptism of the Holy Ghost. Sectarian walls would then tumble to the ground. Ministers would love each other. The followers of Christ would know no name but Christian, and no creed but the Bible. Converts would be multiplied on every hand.

Are you a christian? Then you are a joint heir with Christ to an incorruptible inheritance. O wonder of wonders! Can it be? A poor, sinful mortal, made a joint heir with the Son of God. Yes. "All things are yours, and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's." This world was made for man, but through transgression he lost it. God drove him out from paradise, and guarded the tree of life. Since then sin, sorrow, and death have rolled their dark waves over the human family. But Jesus came to seek and save that which was lost. Over eighteen hundred years ago he conquered the devil, and wrenched the keys of power from the hand of death. He rode triumphantly to heaven, amid clouds of glory and songs of angels.

But he is coming again clothed with celestial brightness, and wielding the sword of Almighty power. At the sound of his voice ten thousand times ten thousand graves will be opened, and the teeming multitudes of the redeemed come with angel escorts to the city of the great King. All tears will be wiped away, and the last sad trace of sorrow swept from creation's brow.

Old earth, so long a scene of mourning and woe, will be disrobed of the curse, and decked with eternal beauty. The doors of paradise will be flung wide open, and the Bride of the Lamb welcomed to her everlasting home. No more poverty, nor want, nor sorrow, for He who sits on the throne shall feed them and lead them to fountains of living water. God grant that reader and writer may share the untold delights of that beautiful world.

As Dr. Dwight once passed through a region of very poor land, he said to a farmer—

"Sir, I perceive your land here is not very productive."

"No, sir," said the honest farmer, "our land is just like self-righteousness."

"Ah! how is that?"

"Why, the more a man has of it the poorer he is."

"COME, YE BLESSED, . . . INHERIT THE KINGDOM."—Matt. 25: 34.

D. T. STETSON.

In Crisis of Sept. 4th, we endeavored to show that the word "inherit," as used in 1 Cor. 15: 50, is used strictly in a legal sense with reference to heirship or title only, and as having no reference to possession or occupancy. But we should do violence to the word of truth, injustice to ourself, and wrong our brethren, were we to leave the impression that because we had so written, therefore we held that the word inherit never meant possess, occupy, or enjoy; but such is not the case. In the passage above cited from Matt. 25: 34, it unquestionably has the signification of enjoy, or possess. But there are some points in the declaration, as it comes from the lips of the King, that demand more than a passing notice. The invitation is couched in terms full of meaning; terms suggestive of plan and purpose; terms indicative of care, labor, and watchfulness; terms full of love, faithfulness, and blessing.

You will please observe that the King says of this kingdom, it was "prepared" for them "from the foundation of the world"; the true meaning of which, I apprehend, is this: that from the time of the world's foundation, the work of preparation then inaugurated to fit up a place for an habitation for my people has gone progressively and steadily forward, until now you see my original plan and purpose consummated. The work of preparation therefore being completed, finished, done, you, the objects of my care, solicitude, labor and love, may now enter upon its full fruition.

But some little caution should be exercised in relation to the phrase—"from the foundation of the world"—lest you form an erroneous opinion and your mind be carried back to "a beginning," the generations of the heavens and of the earth when they were created, as described by Moses in Gen. 1, 2. Peter says that "the world that then was (the earth standing out of the water and in the water), being overflowed with water, perished"; and having fulfilled its destiny, an end of it was made. But the heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men"; when there shall also be an end made of the present constituted order of things. And we may not allow our minds to rest for a moment upon the foundation of the world that was, or of the one that is, for a realization of truth as being a fulfillment of the King's words in the passage under consideration; for the things that have been, and the things that are now seen, are temporary; but the things of which the King discourseth are (as yet) unseen, and are (to be) eternal. These shall be "shaken, and removed"; but those cannot be shaken, and will remain. Consequently we hear Peter exclaiming—"Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness" (the righteous). Now as the former and the present had and have a foundation, so must the future, incoming, new, or third heavens and earth have a foundation, and of that foundation the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ has discoursed largely to us in his promises by the mouth of the prophets, and we are to look to them for a solution of the King's enigma.

The prophet Isaiah (51: 16) says—"And I have put my words in thy mouth, and I have covered thee in the shadow of my hand, that I may plant the heavens, and lay the foundations of the earth, and say to Zion, Thou art my people." This promise of new heavens and earth is repeated (65: 17, and 66: 22), but in fulfillment (as a beginning) of 51: 16, we read in John 17: 8—"I have given unto them the words which thou gavest me." In 1 Cor. 3: 11 Paul says—"For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." In Eph 2: 20 he says we are "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." In Col. 1: 15, we read that "He is the first born of every creature." Not away back of Moses' time, but of the new creation, as see Col. 1: 18—"And he is the head of the body, the church; who is the beginning, the first born from the dead." From which we learn that Christ crucified and Christ risen again is or constitutes the foundation of the new heavens and a new earth, or the foundation of Paul's "world to come," mentioned in Heb. 2: 5; or the foundation of the world specified in the text, Matt. 25: 34.

Now we all understand very well that the foundation is the beginning of that superstructure of or to which it is the chief support; and this is true of the structure before us. The King says—"prepared from the foundation." Paul says Christ is that foundation, and at the time of laying the foundation, Christ himself says (John 14)—"Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God [who made the promise in Isa. 51: 16], believe also in me [concerning whom the promise was made]; I go to prepare a place for you; and if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again [when the work of preparation is done], and receive you unto myself; that where I am there ye may be also." "Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father [with immortality, Rom. 2: 7], inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Matt. 25: 34.

JUDGMENT ON BABYLON.

J. M. CLARK.

We have expressed our opinion in a previous article, that the scarlet-colored beast (Rev. 17) is a symbol of the papal civil power just prior to its final destruction, or the last form of that power. Having ascended out of the bottomless pit, it is presented in the seventeenth chapter under the seventh vial, just as the judgment is to be executed upon its rider, or the power that had managed it. The rider of this beast is described as a corrupt woman distinctly named, Babylon the great, and marked as a power that had shed the blood of the saints and of the martyrs of Jesus, and she is described in the eighteenth verse as being "that great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth," which symbolizes that great apostate power having its seat in that great city—Rome. This power is mystical Babylon, and takes its name from Babylon of the Old Testament.

We wish to make a minute inquiry as to what power is symbolized by Babylon, designated as a corrupt woman. The original word (by which this woman is called) is porne, which signifies one that prostitutes herself for gain—an idolatress; figuratively, a corrupt and idolatrous church. The first idea, therefore, in the book of Revelation is that of a corrupt and idolatrous church prostituting herself for gain; a great church worshiping idols for the sake of money and power. There is and has been but one such church, and we conclude no church can answer to the description except the Roman Catholic Church. This corrupt power is shown in Rev. 17 as a bloody persecutor, drunken with the blood of saints. Next, she is presented as conducting herself in such a manner when God's words are about to be fulfilled upon her in judgment, that she is hated by the ten horns (brought to view in this chapter), or civil powers who had given their strength and power to the beast with which she was in league, and which had carried her (verse 7), and they eat her flesh and burn her with fire—destroy her.

The eighteenth chapter gives a detailed account of the judgment upon her, the reasons given for this dreadful judgment. All this is done under the symbol of a great and prosperous city suddenly destroyed, and the consternation and terror of such an event. A great part of the scenery here is drapery, thrown in to heighten the effect of the picture; we mean that part particularly from the ninth verse onward, which describe the feelings and sayings of those in the interest of this corrupt church, or Babylon. It is said (Rev. 17: 13) that the ten horns shall give their power and strength unto the beast—scarlet-colored beast; and it is further stated that these horns shall make war with the Lamb; thus intimating that this combination with the beast at the bidding of the woman was to constitute one of those agencies that should be specially engaged in "the battle of the great day of God Almighty."

Having thrown out this hint at verse fourteen, the prophecy, before proceeding directly to an account of the battle, stops to take a particular notice of the judgment on the woman, or Babylon, which is briefly noticed in Rev. 17: 16; but given in detail in chapter eighteen, being an event of such importance a particular description is given of it by itself, and of the rejoicing at its fall, as recorded in Rev. 19: 1, and onward.

The judgment on Babylon is introduced as a special scene, and therefore an angel is represented to come down from heaven to open it and declare the reasons for this terrible judgment. He first announces that Babylon is fallen (epesen); one sense of the Greek is, to fall in judgment. She had been tried and condemned, and the sentence is now about to be executed. This judgment is righteous or just.

We think Babylon has been judged, and that the scenes brought to view in chapter nineteen are about opening, when Christ and his army will be victorious, and the battle of that great day of God Almighty will close up this age, and bring in the age of Messiah's personal reign. Most likely God's people will have need of patience, for it will be some time yet before the battle will terminate; but the Lord may take away his saints before the dreadful troubles are over.

We have need to watch; for most assuredly we are on the eve of the grandest events of this century and age of the world. A mighty conflict is at hand, both of principles and of physical force, in which conflict there will be a great call to the armies of the nations to come and gather themselves to the mighty conflict, being the final struggle and the last effort of Satan. He will most likely marshal all his forces. But in the end Christ comes off victorious, and Babylon shall be found no more at all, having been judged and executed—forever destroyed. Then John beholds a new heaven and a new earth, a new state of things; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there shall be no more civil strife or commotions.

"Then peace shall smile from shore to shore,
And nations shall learn war no more."

CENSORIOUSNESS.

C. H. SWEET.

Many professors of christianinty cripple their influence for good, and some of them entirely backslide from God, by indulging in a censorious spirit. One of the results of true conversion is a love of right and a hatred of wrong. No one with any discernment whatever can fail to see that the world to-day is filled with wickedness, and that heartlessness and inconsistency abound in the church.

It is our duty to bear witness against these evils; we shall certainly lose the witness of the Spirit if we do not. And yet in the performance of this duty lies great danger; it is very easy for us to glide from righteous opposition to what is wrong into bitter denunciation and censoriousness. We are specially liable to this when we see the professed church of Christ departing so far from the requirements of God's word as to permit themselves to be controlled by their natural or carnal love of worldly pleasures, pride, avarice, etc.

I have seen some who profess to believe that Jesus will certainly come within a few months, whose staple of conversation is the inconsistency of christian professors. Many such, I fear, notwithstanding the amount of theoretical truth they may have, have already lost much of the sweet peace they once enjoyed in believing in and laboring with Christ.

Words of censure should be few and kindly spoken. Our only object in uttering them should be to benefit those of whom we speak, or to warn others of danger. Christian professors that are censorious do not recommend the religion of Jesus Christ.

I have often heard the unconverted bring up the objection that Christians are so censorious. But, thank God, there are those against whom this objection cannot be urged, but who by the warmth and sweetness of their love drive all prejudices away.

Let us watch this enemy. The most stable and upright, the most godly need to watch at this point. When the devil finds that he cannot persuade us to conceal our light, cannot induce us to fall back into the ranks of ease-loving, pleasure-seeking, and formal professors, or give up at any other point, then he will goad us on to bitter opposition to the sins of the church.

Dear Bro. or Sr., if you desire to remain in the enjoyment of the great spiritual blessings that are now being showered upon you, and would make unbelievers feel that the solemn message you bear to them is from heaven, ever have a kind word and a kind tone for all.

Bonny Eagle, Me.

In the language of Bonar, we say—"Weary of man's rule, we long for God's." Sick at heart with this world's scenes of evil,—man spoiling man, man enslaving man, man wounding man, man defrauding man, man treading upon man,—we long for the setting up of the righteous throne. Oh, what a world will this be when man's, will as well as man's rule shall be exchanged for Christ's rule and will; when God's "will shall be done on earth, even as it is done in heaven."

Gems.

— Desire, ask, believe that you receive, and you shall have.

— Faith's eyes can see through a frown of God, and under it read God's thoughts of love and peace.

— The strength of the sinner is in his own weakness. The strength of the christian is the strength of God.

— Faint not; the miles to heaven are few and short. There are many heads lying in Christ's bosom, but there is room for yours among the rest.

— There are many people in this world who are like perfumed vases from which the perfume has fled, all the surrounding objects attracting it; and so their life is not in themselves but in their things.

— If we lived near to God, and habitually recognized that in him we live and move and have our being, we should accept everything that he spake as being true, because he spake.

— If our piety is questioned by our enemies, let us search closely, and see if we have not given occasion for it by frivolous or imprudent words, by unkind carriage, by a spirit too nearly bordering on levity on the one hand, or on moroseness on the other.

— Speak kindly in the morning; it lightens the cares of the day, and makes household and all other affairs move along more smoothly. Speak kindly at night, for it may be that before the dawn some loved one may finish his or her span of life for this world, and it will be too late to ask forgiveness.

— I wish that our thoughts were more frequently upon our country. Oh! but heaven casteth a sweet smell afar off to those who have spiritual smelling! God hath made many fair flowers, but the fairest of them all is heaven, and the flower of all flowers is Christ.

A celebrated divine who was remarkable in the first period of his ministry for a boisterous mode of preaching, suddenly changed his whole manner in the pulpit, and adopted a mild and dispassionate mode of delivery. One of his brethren then inquired of him what had induced him to make the change? He replied, "When I was young, I thought it was the thunder that killed the people; but, when I grew older and wiser, I discovered that it was the lightning, so I determined to thunder less and lighten more."

A man who can give up dreaming and go to his daily realities; who can smother down his heart, its love or woe, and take to the hard work of his hand; who defies fate, and, if he must die, dies fighting to the last—that man is life's best hero.—Miss Muloch.

"This is for your Health."—Paul.

SUNSHINE.

Never shut God's glorious sunshine from your homes. If you must have a portion of your homes too fine ever to admit his presence, in the name of pale, sickly, and withered humanity, have at least one room set apart, from which his life-giving rays are never excluded, and where you can daily resort to bask and bathe in his healthful and curative influence; for sunshine, and plenty of it, is essential to the full and healthy development of body and mind. And when we break nature's laws, and fall ill in consequence, a simple sunlight bath would do more toward restoring to health than many of the nauseous medicines that doctors prescribe in Latinized formulas, with such an air of importance and profundity as often to awe poor, ailing mortals into the belief that they have but to swallow the stuff, and be healed.

Sunlight baths may be had without money and without price. If too weak to go into the open air and take one as nature dictates, or if out-door walks and suns are not in accordance with your ideas of respectability and refinement, and you cannot get over them by indulging in a little common-sense, why, in the name of health, good looks, and sweet temper, draw your cushioned chair up to the window, and sink as gracefully and as languidly as you please into it; but don't get up until you have toasted, and roasted, and broiled yourself sufficiently to make your blood leap and bound through your veins with its revivifying and vitalizing agency.

There are a few persons and physicians among the number, who have been honest enough to prescribe sunlight as a remedial agent; but it is evident that were all ailments cured by such simple and cheap remedies as sunlight, air, water, exercise, and diet, there would be no need of drug-stores or physicians; they would be blotted out of existence, and the followers of those professions would be called to new fields to obtain a livelihood.

We hope, as the world progresses, that physicians will become enlightened and honest enough to prescribe, for the promotion of health and the prevention of disease, these simple but efficacious remedies which nature mixes and offers with her own hand, free of charge, to all who will partake thereof; and which remedies only require the sanction and recommendation of physicians to have them substituted for the nauseous, constitution-breaking, and life-destroying drugs that are constantly being consumed by invalids through ignorance of their nature and effect upon the system.

We want no Dr. Sangradoes to teach us how to live. When he was remonstrated with on the necessity of relaxing the practice of bleeding, a practice, we all know, to which thousands have fallen victims—he answered, "I believe we have carried this matter a little too far, but you must know that I have written a book on the efficacy of this practice; therefore, though every patient we have should die by it, we must continue bleeding for the good of my book!" The trouble is, we have too many Sangradoes to point out to us the path to health. It is a path beset with too many hair-breadth escapes and terrible dangers. Life and health demand a more safe and simple route, and this route can only be found by first knowing ourselves, and then making a practical use of nature's simple remedies, at the head of which stands life and health-giving sunlight; and next to which come exercise, air, diet, with a lavish sprinkling of that thing akin to godliness—cleanliness; then, instead of pale, sickly, groaning humanity, we should have robust, healthy, and happy men, women, and children, who would rise up and say, that it is more blessed to know how to run the human machine than to depend on Dr. Sangradoes and drugs to lead us nauseously down to the valley and shadow of death.—New Jersey Mechanic.

INGRATITUDE.

Physicians should not become discouraged and disgusted with sick and suffering patients. They should not lose their pity, sympathy, and patience, and feel that their life is poorly employed in being interested in those who can never appreciate the labor they receive and who will not use their strength, if they regain it, to bless society, but will pursue the same course of self-gratification, if they regain health, that they did in losing health.

Although, in many cases, the afflicted brought disease upon themselves by their sinful course in violating natural law, yet Jesus pitied their weakness, and when they came to him with disease the most loathsome, he did not stand aloof for fear of contamination; he touched them, and bade disease give back. "And as he entered into a certain village, there met him ten men that were lepers, which stood afar off. And they lifted up their voices, and said, Jesus, Master, have mercy on us. And when he saw them, he said unto them, Go, show yourselves unto the priests. And it came to pass, that as they went, they were cleansed. And one of them, when he saw that he was healed, turned back, and with a loud voice glorified God, and fell down on his face at his feet, giving him thanks; and he was a Samaritan. And Jesus answering said, Were there not ten cleansed? but where are the nine? There are not found, that returned to give glory to God, save this stranger. And he said unto him, Arise, and go thy way; thy faith hath made thee whole."

Here is a lesson for us all. These lepers were so far corrupted by disease that they had been restricted from society lest they should contaminate others. Their limits had been prescribed by the authorities. Jesus came within their sight and they, in their great suffering, cry unto him who alone had power to relieve them. Jesus bade them show themselve to the priests. They had faith to start on their way, believing in the power of Christ to heal them. As they go on their way, they realize that the horrible disease has left them. But only one feels gratitude, and his deep indebtedness to Christ for this great work wrought for him. He returned, praising God on the way, and in the greatest humiliation falls at the feet of Christ, acknowledging with thankfulness the work wrought for him. And this man was a stranger. The other nine were Jews. For the sake of this one man, who would make a good use of the blessing of health, Jesus healed the whole ten. The nine passed on without appreciating the work done, and rendered no grateful thanks to Jesus for doing the work.

Thus will physicians have their labor and efforts treated. But if, in their labor to help suffering humanity, one in ten makes a right use of the benefits received, and appreciates the efforts in his behalf, physicians should feel grateful. If one life in ten is saved, and, may be, one soul saved in the kingdom of God in one hundred, they will be amply repaid for all their efforts. All their anxiety and care are not wholly lost. If the Majesty of heaven worked for suffering humanity, and so few appreciated his divine aid, physicians should blush to complain if their feeble efforts are not appreciated by all, and seem to be thrown away on some.—E. GOOD COMPANY.

St. Paul says, "Evil communications corrupt good manners." No matter how good a boy's manners may be, if he runs with bad boys, their evil communications will corrupt his good manners. They will say bad words, talk cross, call names, and do bad things.

The boy who will tell you to swear and lie is your enemy. He will get you into trouble; he will ruin you. The boy who will teach you to disobey your parents, and conceal from them where you go and what you do, is the enemy of your father and mother, and the destroyer of your good name and character. Never go with such. Seek the company of good boys, and you will have pleasure and profit. Bad boys always love to make other boys bad.

The other day two bad boys persuaded a little fellow, who did not know the harm, to take some money out of a lady's pocket-book which they found in a drawer. He first took out a dollar bill, and they kept it for some time; but their consciences hurt them, and they put it back.

After a while they sent the little boy for the three-cent piece they saw in the pocket-book. They thought it was such a little thing, that it would not be missed; and they spent it for liquorice. These bad boys were teaching the younger one to be as bad as they are.

If you want to have good manners, good habits, a "good name,—which is rather to be chosen than great riches,"—you must keep away from bad company. When a boy does bad once, don't associate with him any more. When you find you are getting into bad habits, stop. If you want to be a good man, you must be a good boy.

Children's Advocate.

Need I go to School?—"O, father! need I go to school?" said Johnnie one morning as his mother was getting him ready. "I don't understand books; I never shall. I had rather cut wood in the forest with you, and work ever so hard."

"Johnnie, how did we fell that big tree yesterday?" asked his father.

"A stroke at a time, and keeping at it," answered the boy.

"Yes," said his father. "A word at a time, and keeping at it will make you a good reader; a syllable at a time, and keeping at it, will make you a good speller; a sum at a time, and keeping at it, will make you good in figures; an idea at a time, and keeping at it, will make you master the hardest book in the world. A patient keeping at it, Johnnie, and you will be a scholar."

"Is that all?" asked Johnnie.

"All," said his father.

"I do not know but what I can do that," said Johnnie; and before six years from that time he stood first in the highest class in school.

How to Obey.—Do it at once. Never wait to be told a second time. Do just what you are told to do. Do not try to have your own way, even in part. Do it cheerfully. Do not go about it in a surly, cross, peevish way. Don't fret, and grumble, and talk back. Only cheerful obedience can be pleasing to God and man.

The "Crisis" is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

THE JOYFUL MESSAGE.

(Being an extract from a contribution in the Rainbow for October.)

It is further joyful intelligence that the resurrection of our Lord has a bearing on the resurrection of others,—that "according to the Scriptures, he has been raised from among the dead as a first-fruit of those who have fallen asleep."

God is governing this world by the law of association. "Through a man came death; through a man also comes resurrection of the dead." It is in Christ that the believer is declared righteous, and in him that he receives the Spirit of life and holiness and power. In like manner, it is not merely by the agency of Christ, but by virtue of union with Christ that the process of recovery and glorification is carried on to its goal in our resurrection from among the dead. Christ's resurrection is a first-fruit of ours. A sheaf offered unto the Lord as a first-fruit is taken from a field where more corn of the same kind remains standing. The first-fruit is a part of the whole fruit; even as a first-born is one member of a family where there are other children. We become identified with Christ; but he has first become identified with us, even in death. Heb, 2: 14. And so his resurrecrion is constituted by God a representation, herald, and pledge of ours. Our immediate business is with the joyfulness of the prospect which this law of recovery reveals.

It is joyful because of the nature of the blessing which is thus guaranteed. That blessing is our resurrection from among the dead. The simple intimation of this is fitted to make us leap for joy. Lest any opiate of familiarity or traditionalism should obscure our perception of the charm of this prospect, let us consider what our rising from among the dead implies. It implies the triumphant attainment of everlasting life. It is characteristically a resurrection of life. John 5: 29. It is the coronation by virtue of which we are to reign in life. Rom. 5: 17. It is our final entrance into life. Mark 9: 43–45. Moreover, it is our admission, as inheritors, and as kings, into the kingdom of God. 1 Cor. 15: 50; Rev. 20: 6; Mark 9: 47. This last cited passage is valuable as showing that entrance into life and entrance into the kingdom are synonymous. Once more, our resurrection from among the dead will be the completion and proof of our being sons of God. Even we ourselves within our own selves are sighing, ardently waiting for adoption,—the redemption of our body." Rom. 8: 23. "The sons of this age are marrying and being given in marriage; but those accounted worthy to obtain that age, and the resurrection which is from among the dead, neither are marrying nor are being given in marriage; for not even to die any more are they able; for they are equal to messengers, and are sons of God, being sons of the resurrection." Luke 20: 35–36. So then, that resurrection will prove a birth into all the glories of divine sonship! that resurrection will impart an incapacity of death! that resurrection will usher into an age not otherwise to be obtained!—the kingdom, eternal life, unveiled sonship, all welded into one magnificent promise of a Christ-pledged resurrection from among the dead. No doubt others also will ultimately arise. Ere the solemn "hour" of divine dealing with the dead shall have passed away forever, all that are in their graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God and shall come forth. John 5: 28, 29. But, in the case of those who have rejected Christ as their Savior, and brought upon themselves the speedy destruction of the second death, the relation to Christ as first-fruit can only be secondary, if, as such a relation, it exist at all. They will rise, not as sons of the resurrection, but as its slaves; not to honor but to shame; not to life, but to death; to be destroyed, body and soul, in gehenna. Matt. 10: 28.

Our only promise of eternal life lies enfolded in the promise of rising in and with Christ. The popular exaggeration of the separate state, by virtue of which the glory and power of everlasting life are conceived of as entered upon as soon as death takes place, cannot be too earnestly deplored. The bright array, the imposing throng, the exulting anthems, the triumphant palms,—these have all been stolen from the final, post-resurrection state; woven into a story hopelessly inconsistent with other representations which undeniably refer to the intermediate condition. It will be time enough for the Lamb's wife to array herself with her fine linen, when, all her members having been incorporated, it is "given" her so to do. Rev. 19. Let the innumerable multitude get out of the great tribulation, before you set them waving their palm-branches. Chap. 7. God's purpose is to wait until his seventh messenger sounds his trumpet, before he will give the promised "reward to his servants the prophets." Chap. 9: 15–18; and, till then, his "mystery" remains unfinished. Chap. 10: 7. Just at the present time, it is of unspeakable moment to keep this fact steadily in view. Every great man is, now-a-days, the moment that he dies, being carried, by the messengers of the daily press, much higher than Abraham's bosom; and, to the popular eye, the unclothed spirits of veteran warrior and heroic fireman are depicted as ascending together, in articulate converse, each wearing his own appropriate crown of glory, into the third heavens. This is unbiblical. It is profane. And so the resurrection is needless, the judgment to come is never named. Men deceive themselves that death is no curse, and have no concern to be found "in him" who alone is the resurrection and the life.

Beware, reader, of this popular snare of the adversary. You have no prospect of life everlasting, except that which finds its consummation in a resurrection from among the dead. You have no prospect at all of another life, save that which Jesus Christ gives; and you can have that only in his way. To magnify the peaceful sleep, or even pleasant dreams, of hades into the wide-awake and active glories and joys of the new heaven and new earth, is, from the biblical point of view, an almost childless absurdity. Christ "abolished death and illumined life and incorruption," by himself rising from the dead, and by sending forth the joyful message that he would by and by "transfigure the body of our humbling, conformable to the body of his glory." 2 Tim. 1: 10; Phil. 3: 21. Adam the first brought death, and only death, into the world,—that is, over and above the present life. Anything beyond, for which, apart from Christ, we are entitled to hope, is merely an extension of our being unto the second death. "The wages of sin is death; but God's gift-of-favor is everlasting life in Christ Jesus our Lord." Rom. 6: 23.

EVIDENCES FOR THE SPEEDY COMING OF THE LORD.

The Commune, or International Society and "time of trouble."

BEING AN EXPOSITION OF REV. 17.

N. H. BARBOUR.

The power referred to as having "seven heads and ten horns," whether in the twelfth, thirteenth, or seventeenth of Revelation, I understand to refer, not to Constantinople, or France, or any other fractional part, but always to the whole Roman empire;—that the heads mean governments, and the horns geographical divisions. God is not a God of confusion. And to call a division of the empire a "horn" to-day, a "head" to-morrow, and the beast itself the next day, brings utter confusion. This loose way of applying prophecy which has obtained during the last few years, can only be accounted for by the fact that "while the Bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept."

Divisions of the Grecian empire were called "heads." "The beast had also four heads." Dan. 7: 6. But in that place it brought no confusion. But the heads of the Roman beast cannot be synonymous with horns, for "the beast had seven heads and ten horns." And lest we should fall into the error, God has told us that these "seven heads are seven mountains." Mountains, when used as a symbol, represent governments, and not parts of a kingdom. See Jer. 17: 2, 3, where God calls the kingdom of Israel—"O my mountain in the field," etc. In Jer. 51: 24, 25, it is said of Babylon, "O destroying mountain, I will make a burnt mountain of thee." Again in Dan. 2: 35, Christ's kingdom is called a mountain. "The stone became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth." "I will tell thee the mystery of the woman, and of the beast that carrieth her, having seven heads and ten horns. The beast that thou sawest, was, and is not, and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition." Verses 7, 8. A "beast" means, in prophecy, a political power, or earthly kingdom. "The fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth." Dan. 7: 23. The Roman beast, "having seven heads and ten horns," while under its pagan form, and called "the dragon," "was." That is, it was as a beast, or a purely political power. When the nations composing that empire passed under the dominion of the church, it "was not" as a beast simple, for it had now become an ecclesiastical power. "The bottomless pit" is a condition, and not a locality. The Saracens, who overran the Eastern empire, are said to "come out of the smoke that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit." Rev. 9. That is, they came out from an inert to an active condition. The Roman beast, viz., the "peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues," which have been under "the mother of harlots, and abominations of the earth," are to "ascend out of this bottomless pit, and go into perdition." And in ver. 11, we are told that this beast of verses 7 and 8, viz., "the beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition."

The beast had but seven heads; this "eighth," therefore, is not a head. It is the beast itself. It is the peoples and nations without a head; or, in other words, without a government.

The Commune, or International Society, answers perfectly to this prophecy. There never has existed, since the origin of civilization, so strong an organization. It already numbers many millions, reaching from one end of the earth to the other. (See "Edinburgh Review" of Oct., 1871.) It claims to be a unit; and yet it has no head. Like the sea monster of which we have heard—all lungs, all heart, all body. Its economy is perfect in every part. Cut it into a thousand pieces, and it only multiplies the parts, without hurting its vitality. This same organization, under the name of "Commune," has been developing for nearly a century. It cropped out during the French Revolution, near the close of the last century. Men wondered when they beheld this monster, even in its incipient state. Human life and property withered away before it, like stubble before the flame. Now it is coming up, not in France alone, but over the whole earth. "And they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names are not written in the book of life, when they behold the beast that was, and is not, and yet is." Ver. 8. For "there shall be a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation." And in that reign of terror "every man's hand shall be against his brother."

This last phase of the fourth empire cannot fully develop until the seventh head has had the "short space" allotted to it; then it will ascend out of this bottomless pit, or from under church-state organizations, "and go into perdition." During the French Revolution, the papal head "received a deadly wound," and the Commune, or this beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit, came to the surface and accomplished a work which God had foretold. "And the beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit shall make war against them [the two witnesses], and shall overcome them, and kill them." Rev. 11: 7. The deadly wound was healed, papacy was restored, in a new character, and the Commune, or headless beast, was not fully delivered from the pit at that time, and was soon lost sight of. It reads, "The beast that ascendeth out," shall make war on the two witnesses; clearly showing that he was only in the act of coming out at that time. But it is the same beast that "shall ascend out of the bottomless pit and go into perdition."

This war on "the two witnesses" by the Commune occurred in France; hence some have supposed that France was the beast." But when we understand that this beast that ascendeth out of the bottomless pit is the one which had "the seven heads and ten horns," France makes a poor fit, for it never had seven heads and ten horns. And nothing ever did but Rome, the fourth universal empire. The Commune, or Internationals, cropped out in 1793–5, and again in 1870, in that one division of the Roman empire. But now the seventh "head," under Victor Immanuel, as we shall show, has had its "short space," and lo! the monster is seen coming to the surface in every part of the civilized world. It may be objected that papacy itself was called "the beast" in the thirteenth chapter. Papacy was both church and state. Its power was civil and ecclesiastical; hence it was the beast. The same people and nations which composed the body of the beast under pagan Rome, became the body of the church, or papal Rome. With its change of character, there was a change of name; but it was still the Roman empire, "having seven heads and ten horns." "And there was given unto him a mouth speaking great things, and blasphemies." Here the church character is made to appear, as it is in the "mouth and eyes" of the little horn of Dan. 7.

The fourth universal empire is the only one with which the Revelator has to do; the other three having passed away before the Christian era. "That great city which reigneth over the kings of the earth" (ver. 18), as all admit, must refer to Rome. And what is true of Rome is applied to the church, or woman, while she represents Rome. Just as what is true of Babylon, literal and mystical, is applied to mystical Babylon. Babylon literal, destroyed God's ancient people, and mystical Babylon the Christian church. And while this harlot woman represents Babylon, God says, "In her was found the blood of prophets, and of saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth." Rev. 18: 24. "The seven heads," which were seven mountains, or governments, belong to the beast on which the woman sat; for it was the beast which had the seven heads. And while the woman represents Rome, she is said to sit on, or be supported by, what had supported "that great city."

How was the blood of all that had been slain upon the earth found in mystical Babylon, when there were millions slain before she existed? Simply because she was a representative character. If a building firm should send their agent to you and demand payment for a block of houses, and you reply, "Sir, that block of buildings you put up for me was not finished according to contract"; and he should answer, "I have built nothing for you," you would call him a fool: "You built no houses! you represent the firm, do you not? Then I say again, those houses you built were not according to contract."

While "the woman" represented that great city, what is true of Rome was applied to her. Thus "the seven heads are seven mountains on which the woman sitteth"; and the "woman is that great city." This is God's way, and man's way, of talking of a representative character. "And there are seven kings; five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh he must continue a short space." Ver. 10.

In order to understand this, and know what "five had fallen, and what head was present, and the one still future, we must get the true stand-point of the prophet, which is given in the first verse. "Come hither; I will show unto thee the judgment of the great harlot." Ver. 3. "So he carried me away in the spirit into the wilderness." In other words, he carried him in spirit down the stream of time, or history of the people ("wilderness" means the people; see Ezek. 20: 35), to where the papacy was to receive her judgment, or be stripped and made desolate and naked. And Daniel gives the chronology of this judgment. Speaking of the same power he says "times and laws" were given into its hands "for a time, times and the dividing of time; but the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and to destroy it unto the end." Dan. 7: 25, 26. This judgment on the papacy is prior to the end, and final judgment on the nations; for after the judgment sat on the papacy, it was to be consumed "unto the end." This judgment sat during the French Revolution, and in 1798 they took away its dominion. Papacy was soon after restored in another character, which continued from 1800 to 1870, during which time that judgment has been undergoing execution; in other words, the papacy has been undergoing its gradual consumption. "These ten kings shall hate the whore, and shall make her desolate and naked, and shall eat her flesh, and burn her with fire." Ver. 16.

Since her restoration in March, 1800, these divisions of the Roman empire—England, France, Prussia, Austria, Spain, Italy, etc., have all had a hand in humbling the papacy. They have gradually withdrawn their influence and support from that church. They have permitted her territory to be taken from her piece by piece. They have confiscated church property in the various countries, until she has indeed become "desolate and naked." It is during this time—from 1800 to 1870—the "great harlot" has been passing through her judgment; hence, this must be the standpoint of the prophet while the vision is passing before him. "Come hither; I will show unto thee the judgment of the great harlot." Vers. 9 and 10—"Here is the mind which hath wisdom. The seven heads are seven mountains on which the woman sitteth. And there are seven kings; five are fallen, and one is, and the other is not yet come; and when he cometh he must continue a short space." The Bible Union translation reads—"The seven heads are seven mountains, and they are seven kings."

That these "heads" are governments, and not literal mountains, is evident from the fact that in the twelfth chapter they are said to have "seven crowns upon them"; and in the thirteenth chapter, "one of the heads received a deadly wound." Some contend that because this is an explanation, therefore the word "mountain" must be literal. This, however, does not follow. See Rev. 11: 3, 4—"And I will give power unto my two witnesses. . . . These are the two olive trees, and the two candlesticks." This also is an explanation, and yet no one believes the two witnesses are two literal "olive trees." From the standpoint of the prophet, five of these heads were fallen, one is, and the other had not yet come. Rome has had just seven governments since the time it conquered Grecia and came into prophetic existence; and the last one, under Victor Immanuel, has been in existence a little more than two years. Rome does not take its place in prophecy until it subdued, or was subduing, the Grecian empire, no more than did Medo-Persia prior to the fall of Babylon. "Thou art this head of gold; and after thee shall arise another kingdom," said the prophet.

The last part of Alexander's divided kingdom—Egypt—was conquered by the Romans in the year 30 B. C., at which time the "head" of Rome was Consular. In about three years after, or 27 B. C., it was changed to Imperial, under Augustus Cæsar, and continued until about the fifth century, when the empire was broken up. The third head, under the Goths, who broke up the empire, was kingly, and continued nearly a century. In A. D. 538, the Goths were expelled from Italy, and from that time until 1798 the Papacy was head of Rome. Bear in mind that papacy is a double character. As a "beast," or political power, it was head of Rome; as a church, it is represented as the woman "sitting on the beast." In 1798, the papal head "received a deadly wound," and a Republic took its place as the fifth head, or government of Rome. In March, 1800, papacy was restored; but it was another and new character. The old "forty-and-two months" beast had come to its end. Papacy still survived, and must until Christ comes. "The deadly wound was healed," but "times and laws" had been taken from it, and it was only an image of its former self. Still it was the sixth head of Rome, during the seventy years that "harlot" was undergoing her judgment.

"Five have fallen," the Consular, Imperial, Kingly, Papal, and Republic. "And one is," the sixth. That one fell in September, 1870. From the stand-point of the prophet, the other had not yet come. Now it has come, under Victor Immanuel, and has continued more than two years. "And when he cometh he must continue a short space." These seven complete the number; the picture is finished. The beast has had its "ten horns," and its "seven heads." And now there remains but the closing scene, and earth's history under Gentile rule will be ended. "The beast that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, and is of the seven, and goeth into perdition." Verse 11. This is so plain as scarcely to require an explanation. This "eighth" cannot be a head, for the beast had but seven. Read the seventh and eighth verses, and you will see that "the beast that was, and is not," is the one which had the seven heads and ten horns; the one on which "the woman sat" for 1260 years; the body of which was represented by the waters, or "peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues." Ver. 15. As "the beast that was, and is not, is the eighth," and is also the "peoples, and nations," and does not come up until the seventh and last "head" has had its "short space," it follows that it must be the nations which represent the fourth universal kingdom, without a head.

"And is of the seven." The people, or body of the beast, have been "of the seven." The people have been a part of each of those heads. As one government passed away and another took its place, the people were "of" it and supported it. And now, as we approach the last act in the drama, who is so blind as not to see the gathering storm? Take a look over the world to-day and behold the Commune, or Internationals, numbering their millions, silently gathering their forces to hurl monarch and thrones into the dust; at the organizations of working men to oppose capitalists ("Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you"); at the universal determination of the people to put down despotism. And on the other hand, watch the marshaling hosts, and the accumulation of material for war, such as the past has never yet witnessed. And tell me, O man of the world, what does the immediate future promise? The weakest power in Europe is stronger to-day, in hellish inventions for destroying life, than England was fifty years ago. "Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up; beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruning-hooks into spears; let the weak say, I am strong. Assemble yourselves and come, . . . for the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision." "Knowledge is power." The press and telegraph have been doing their work, and there is a movement deep down in the hearts of the millions, before which the "divine right of kings" and their armies will reel and totter and fall. If you cannot see this, reader, may God help you, for the world see and believe. They believe this great uprising of the people is just at hand. They believe the "thrones" are about to be "cast down." And when that occurs God says the Ancient of days will sit, and the books be opened.

With the eleventh verse the vision ends; though in some sense it might be said to end with the sixth verse, where the angel begins to "show" him the "mystery." But as there was more to be revealed, it does not fully end until the "beast goes into perdition"; which, of course ends all Gentile dominion. While the prophet was having this vision he was in the spirit, and down near the end of time where the papacy was being judged. When the vision terminated, he was back again on the "isle of Patmos, on the Lord's day," A. D. 96.

Ver. 12—"The ten horns which thou sawest [in the vision] are ten kings, which have received no kingdom as yet." John was commanded to write "the things which thou hast seen, the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter." Rev. 1: 19. The beast, and its second head, were then in existence; the first head had been, but the ten horns were then among "the things which shall be hereafter." Rome was not then divided. Those "kings" he had seen in vision had "received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast."

The division of the empire was scarcely completed before they became "of one mind, and gave their power and strength unto the [papal] beast." Ver. 13. "For God had put in their hearts to fulfill his will, and to agree, and give their kingdom unto the beast, until the words of God [the 1260 years] shall be fulfilled." Ver. 17. After which they were to take it away, and make her "desolate and naked." "These [ten kings] shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them." Ver. 14. Because three of these horns were said to be "plucked up by the roots," in the symbol Dan. 7: 8, it does not follow that they were annihilated; they were simply "subdued," as the angel says in the explanation, Dan. 7: 24. Grecia subdued Medo-Persia, and was in turn subdued by the Romans, and yet they exist to-day. "Their dominion was taken away, yet their lives were prolonged for a season and time." Dan. 7: 12. And the elements of each—the mouth of the lion, the feet of the bear, and the body of the leopard—are found in the fourth empire. Rev. 13: 2. When the papacy ceases to wear the three crowns, those three horns will again appear; for neither of these ten divisions can unite permanently, "even as iron is not mixed with clay." And though some of them are now lost to sight, like the "beast that was, and is not," yet they must again appear, to finish their work on the "harlot" of Rome, and then be themselves destroyed at the hand of the King of kings.

The following facts are well known to all the world: Rome was the fourth universal empire. Early in the Christian era, it was divided into ten parts. The present government is the seventh government of Rome which has been endorsed by the people, since Rome conquered the Grecian empire. The papacy was undergoing her judgment, or being made desolate, from 1800 to 1870; at which time she constituted the sixth head of Rome. Five had fallen previous to that time. The seventh had not then come. It has now come, and continued a short space. "The eighth," viz., "the beast that was, and is not," the great "sea" of peoples and tongues, is already surging to the very bottom, with the breath of the coming storm.

Can it be true that these things happen by chance? that Rome happened to have these seven governments? that the stand-point of the prophet, which was certainly during the existence of the sixth head, happened to be the very time papacy was receiving her judgment? that the angel calling him to that position—"Come hither; I will show thee the judgment of the great harlot"—means nothing? that the five heads had fallen? that the last one which was to continue "a short space" has continued barely two years, and now a condition of things obtains which perfectly answers to the closing scene? and, last of all, that the Advent people happened, just at this time, to be looking for the end, for so many other reasons? Is it not more likely that this is the correct application of the prophecy; and if so, that the end is indeed at hand?

— It is a terrible thing for one man to speak evil of another, and I think it is worse to think it. If you speak it the man has time and opportunity to defend himself, but he cannot trace the thought. It is neither heroic nor manly to permit in yourself judgments which nobody can reverse.

THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST.

J. R. SMITH.

The gospel of Christ is a revelation of the grace of God to fallen man; which is made known unto us by the death and resurrection and promised coming of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Gospel in the original signifies good news, or glad tidings; and when a sinner who is exposed to the wrath of God is made to feel his danger and lost condition, it must be glad tidings to him to hear of a way of escape and his final salvation through the intercession of an all-sufficient Savior, who is able to save to the uttermost all who come unto God by him. Methinks this gospel of salvation must have been good news to those lowly shepherds of Bethlehem, who were watching their flocks by night upon the plains of Judea; when suddenly "the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them," and while they were amazed and sore afraid, the angel said unto them, "Fear not, for behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people; for unto you this day is born in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord. And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

That was a time of rejoicing such as this world has never witnessed, and never will again until the Son of man "shall come the second time without sin unto salvation"; which will by far eclipse his first Advent; for when he comes the second time he will come with power and great glory; and he shall then sit upon the throne of his glory. Glory to God!

> "All hail! the power of Jesus' name,
> Let angels prostrate fall;
> Bring forth the royal diadem,
> And crown him Lord of all."

We have a great deal of preaching at the present time of men's theories and opinions, which are not the gospel of Christ. Doctrines of men are substituted for the doctrine of our blessed Savior. Men draw nigh unto God with their lips, while their hearts are far from him; but their worship is vain, while they teach for doctrines the commandments of men. This is that salt which has lost its savor; there is no viride in it; it is neither fit for the land, nor yet for the dung-hill; there is no saving power in it; it leaves leanness and barrenness to all who listen to it. Not so with the gospel of Christ, for the gospel of Christ will save sinners. "It is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

Paul was not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, although some were troubled about this gospel in his day for fear; but says Paul, "Be not afraid of their terror, neither be troubled; but sanctify the Lord God in your hearts; and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, with meekness and fear"; "and to you who are troubled, rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power, when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe in that day."

Paul's charge to his son Timothy was, to preach the word. And why did Paul so earnestly require Timothy to preach the word? Let Paul answer—"Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine. For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine." We think Paul understood what he was talking about, for that time has already come, when men "heap to themselves teachers having itching ears; having the form of godliness, but denying the power thereof; whose hearts are turned away from the truth, and are turned unto fables."

In the Sunday notices for religious worship a few weeks ago in this city, was noticed a paragraph from the pastor of one of our so-called Christian churches, inquiring what should be done to increase the tone of piety in "our" churches; and it occurred to me that if they would preach the word of God, instead of fables, there would be no need of making any such inquiry. That church today is but a fair representation of the thousands scattered throughout our land, that have lost their life and power with God by rejecting the gospel of Christ. We can recall to mind places of worship that were often made glorious by the Spirit of God. We can remember places of worship that have been filled night after night to overflowing, every seat filled, and every space of standing room occupied, even to the outward entrance; sinners going forward to the anxious seat by scores, crying for mercy, and made to tremble under the Almighty power of God; while saints were made to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory. Where are those places of worship to-day? Echo answers, Where? They have a name to live, but are dead. They still keep up the form, but they deny the power. "Ichabod" stands out in bold relief upon all their movements. "Mene, tekel," is written upon their walls. They are weighed in the balance, and are found wanting. They are dead, twice dead, and plucked up by the roots.

How has this mighty change been brought about, which has caused all this barrenness and desolation? I answer, it was because those who were once flaming heralds of the gospel of Christ have rejected the truth; they have shunned to declare the whole counsel of God; they have become ashamed of the gospel of Christ; they have neglected to preach the word; they have removed the ancient landmarks which our fathers have set; and to-day they hold the truth in unrighteousness, seeking honor from men; and for that reason God has sent leanness and barrenness into their souls. "They shut up the kingdom of heaven against men; they neither go in themselves, nor suffer those that are entering to go in." They are joined with Ephraim and his idols, and their flocks are scattered.

But, blessed be God! Jesus is the Good Shepherd, and his sheep hear his voice. He calleth his own by name, and leadeth them out. Jesus goes before his flock, and his sheep follow him, for they know his voice; but a stranger they will not follow, because they know not the voice of strangers. Jesus feeds his little ones in a good pasture, and has promised to bring them out from the people, and gather them into their own land, where they shall range all over those blissful fields of Eden's fair plains, when they shall be restored again to their primeval beauty. There "they shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of them shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters." Hallelujah to Jesus! Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing; for he was slain, and hast redeemed us to God by his blood, out of every kindred, and tougue, and people, and nation, and hast made us kings and priests unto God; and we shall reign with him upon the new earth. Glory to God! Then > "Let sorrow's rudest tempest blow,

> Each cord on earth to sever;
> Our King says come, and there's our home
> Forever, oh, forever."

Glory to the Lamb! for he is our Alpha and Omega; he is King of kings, and Lord of lords. Soon the kingdoms of this world shall pass away, and shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; when "the kingdom, and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High"; and the saints of the Most High "shall take the kingdom and shall possess it forever, even forever and ever."

Hallelujah to God! for these exceeding great and precious promises, which he has revealed unto his children through the blessed gospel of Christ. This is our hope. Our hope is centred in the coming of Jesus and the resurrection. If in this life only we had hope, we should be of all men most miserable. Our loved ones that have fallen asleep in Christ will then be raised from the dead; for God will bring them with him; those who sleep in Jesus shall be raised from the dead by his own eternal power and glory. "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you, by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent [or go before] them which are asleep. For the Lord himself [not a ghost or a spirit] shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words."

Blessed assurance! sweet consolation! dear to the heart of every true believer of the glorious gospel of Christ. When all the dead are raised, then follows the judgment. "For God has appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained, whereof he hath given assurance unto all men in that he hath raised him from the dead." Then follows the triumph of the righteous, who "shall shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father," which is prepared for them. Then those who are alive and have on the robe of righteousness will be changed and made immortal; they will then be caught up together to meet the Lord in the air, until the indignation is overpast, and so shall they be forever with the Lord. The wicked will be raised in that great gathering day, for "we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ"; and these shall be destroyed, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it. "For behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch."

There is no escape from the judgment. "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive; but every man in his own order; Christ the first fruits; afterward they that are Christ's at his coming. Then cometh the end, when he shall have delivered up the kingdom to God, even the Father; when he shall have put down all rule, and all authority, and power; for he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death;" "for this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Hallelujah to God! this is the victory that overcometh the grave, even our faith in the blessed gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

New Bedford, Mass.

PEACE.—Peace is better than joy. Joy is an uneasy guest, and always on tip-toe to depart. It tires and wears us out, and yet keeps us ever fearing that the next moment it will be gone. Peace is not so. It comes more quietly, and stays more contentedly, and it never exhausts our strength, nor gives us one anxious forecasting thought. Therefore let us pray for peace. It is the gift of God, promised to all his children.

WESTERN NOTES.

Our late western trip has been one of more than ordinary interest. We have rarely seen the guiding hand of Providence more clearly manifested than during the past six weeks, for which we have great reason to praise the Lord. How blessed it is to feel that Jesus is our constant, abiding, loving friend. He is truly a strong tower, an immovable Rock, a glorious Deliverer, a sun and a shield, our all in all. Glory to his name for ever and ever.

After the close of our meetings at Buchanan, Sabbath, Oct. 13th, we returned to Chicago, and had another interesting meeting with the Church in Green street, where Bro. F. Burr is pastor. We found a keen appetite for pure religion, and all things that tend to bring us nearer to Christ. Quite a number have presented their bodies a living sacrifice to God, and have received the gift of the Holy Spirit, filling them with perfect love and peace; others are almost persuaded to sanctify themselves wholly to the Lord.

We found Bro. Burr's family quite afflicted with sickness. His eldest daughter has been sick for some weeks, and now Sr. Burr is very sick with fever. Pray for them. They need and deserve the warm sympathies of the friends of Jesus.

While in Chicago we met Bro. D. Mathewson, C. W. Smith, N. W. Spencer, Wm. Sheldon, Davis, Burrington, A. B. Mabey, O. S. Knapp, Stevens, and others, who were on their way to the annual meeting of the Western Advent Christian Association, at Norwood Park, ten miles from Chicago. We spent a few hours at the Park and were much pleased with the place. It is a new settlement, handsomely laid out into building lots, and bids fair for a rapid growth, in a little while. The Advent Christian Times office is a good-sized building, pleasantly located near the depot. While there, we went into the meeting of the Association. Some were strongly in favor of changing the Association from a money basis to a representative one by ministers and delegates, like the eastern one; but it was finally voted not to change. The objection raised to the present arrangement was the fact that a few heavy stockholders controlled the Association, preventing the body at large from being represented. This cannot well be avoided in a stock company. We were present at the choice of editor and the other officers of the Association for the ensuing year. Wm. Himes was appointed editor, and D. Mathewson President.

Returning to Chicago, we parted with our friends, who had shown us much kindness, and at 9 P. M., Wednesday evening, Oct. 16th, left the city en route for Bro. Mathewson's, at Castleton, Vt. We took our favorite route over the Michigan Central and Great Western roads, past the Niagara Falls, which are still roaring and pouring, foaming and dashing in their fruitless efforts to plunge Lake Erie over the cataract.

Leaving these wonders, we journeyed on and arrived at Castleton in time for our meeting Friday evening, and enjoyed a refreshing season from the presence of the Lord. We found Bro. and Sr. Mathewson well, and happy in the service of the Most High. Our visit was a heavenly one, and soul-cheering. The church in C. is steadfast in the Lord, looking for the blessed hope, with an earnest expectation of soon seeing Jesus. We remained over the Sabbath, and received delightful blessings from heaven. The quickening power of the Lord was specially manifested, and a large number requested prayers that they might be "filled with the Spirit." As usual, we found Bro. Mathewson a bold defender of the doctrine of Bible holiness. His whole influence is heartily thrown in that direction. He not only preaches it, but he lives it every day. He is highly esteemed in Castleton, and his faithful labors are much appreciated. When Jesus comes, there is no doubt but that Bro. and Sr. M. will be all ready to greet him joyfully. They are true lovers of the precious Lamb of God.

While at Castleton we had the privilege of meeting Bro. M. Batchelor, who has been preaching in East Poultney, in the Baptist meeting-house. His hope is bright in favor of seeing Jesus soon. His health is pretty good, and his heart is in the work of preaching the gospel of the kingdom. He needs and deserves the sympathies of the faithful in his deep affliction, caused by the loss of his beloved companion.

From Castleton we went to Rutland, and had a precious meeting Monday evening, Oct. 21st. The Spirit of the Lord rested upon us with power, producing a deep longing for purity of heart. Several resolved to make a full consecration to Christ, in order to be ready for his coming. We found Bro. Hoyt, their pastor, enjoying "perfect love, and faithfully supporting the doctrine by precept and example. In all places we find a marked increase of interest in the subject of holiness. Whenever presented in its true Scriptural light, it commends itself to every true friend of a pure christianity. Some honest souls become prejudiced by false rumors, or from misunderstanding what is said on the subject; or because some do not live up to their profession. This cannot well be avoided; but when the real Scriptural holiness is correctly set before them, they feel no further opposition, and at once become its hearty supporters.

Tuesday evening, Oct. 22nd, we were with the church at Athol, Mass., where we had an interesting meeting, in company with Bro. J. Hemenway, who is highly esteemed in that place for his consistent christian character, and faithful ministerial labors. We found his views and experience corresponding with our own on the subject of sanctification, or entire consecration to the Lord.

While at Athol we attended a conference of Congregational ministers, and found them also advocating holiness of heart. It is certain that the Spirit of the Lord is visiting all churches, more or less; especially the most devoted members, producing in their hearts a deep hungering for purity, and an entire conformity to the will of God in all things. This is a bright evidence that the coming of Christ is near at hand. Praise the Lord for the glorious prospect of speedy deliverance.

Wednesday, Oct. 2d, we left Athol and made a short call on Sr. L. B. Weaver, at North Dana. She is still suffering, but rejoicing in the Lord. It affords her much comfort to receive letters from the friends of Jesus.

We arrived home in safety, and found all prospering pleasantly. Thank the Lord.

THE INTERNATIONAL.

The great International party, scattered throughout the civilized world, is earnestly preparing for startling movements. They are very determined not to give up till they have accomplished their purpose. They aim to revolutionize society and state, and remove all religious restraint. Their leader, Karl Marx, is a noted Atheist. He commenced his operations about 1848, at the time Spiritualism first began to work. The platforms of the two systems are quite similar. The leading motto of the two is—"LIBERTY, EQUALITY, FRATERNITY." These are both of Satan's origin, and opposed to all that is Christ-like. The avowed object of the Internationals is to exalt the laboring classes, and humble the rich capitalists. If they carry out their programme, it will cause great distress among the nations. They are becoming very bold and defiant against the existing governments in the world. There is no dispute but that they have cause for complaints against the corruptions now existing in political matters; but it is equally certain that their success would introduce a worse state of things, quite like that of the French Revolution in 1793. The outlook upon coming events is truly alarming, and may well cause the christian to pray to Christ, "Let thy kingdom come." Until the return of Jesus, we may expect only an increasing state of wickedness, and indifference to sacred things on the part of the mass of mankind. The days of Sodom are upon us, with all their horrid corruptions; but deliverance is also at hand. Time is short, and the grace of God is sufficient to keep his children unharmed amid all the perils of these last days.

The International Society has recently held a Congress in Europe, called the "Congress of the Hague," at which were present "representatives from all countries." It is called a "grand, solemn, revolutionary manifestation." "War was declared against all governments, and the destruction of bourgeois of every country and sort was avowed." A French paper, when speaking of the "Congress of the Hague," says: "It is not merely a revolution, once more, of the moral or mental state of this strange world; it is the visible sign of an important crisis, near at hand, in the Internationale." There is talk of putting the society on a "purely military basis." This shows the spirit of the association. It is only French Communism, made worldwide in its influence. The London Council-General has been sent to New York, to arrange matters in this country. This society is a strong power in the United States, and said to be increasing rapidly. It is evident that a crisis is at hand of no ordinary nature. All things proclaim it. It is coming in church and state. The storm-clouds are rising in all directions. The most careless observer feels conscious of the approaching tempest. It is high time to consecrate all to Christ, if we wish to be ready for his coming. It will not do to mix up with the spirit of the world in politics, fashion, and pleasure, if we expect to dwell in Christ, and be accepted at his coming. There must be a separation from all "filthiness of the flesh and spirit," and a complete surrender to the Lord, in order to be secure in these last hours of peril. Christian soldier, arouse! The morning's dawn of glory is at hand. Christ is coming, Christ is coming.

"O hail! happy day."

In a little while the saints will be singing the song of redemption, in the presence of the Most High.

DID THEY KNOW?

BRO. GRANT:—Do you suppose the prophets and patriarchs knew anything of the resurrection? Please answer through the Crisis, and oblige J. B. DALTON.

It is certain that the prophets and patriarchs spoke of the resurrection. The prophet Isaiah says: "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust." Isa. 26: 19. The prophet Daniel says, those "that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake." Dan. 12: 2. Said the Lord, by the prophet Hosea—"I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death." Hosea 13: 14. Said David—"I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness." Ps. 17: 15. Said the patriarch Job—"O that my words were now written! oh that they were printed in a book! . . . For I know that my Redeemer liveth; . . . and though, after my skin, worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God; whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another." Job 19: 23–27.

JUSTIFICATION AND SANCTIFICATION.

What is the difference between justification and sanctification? These Bible terms are sometimes confounded, though distinct in their signification. Justification relates to the past; sanctification to the future. The first reaches only to the present; the latter, from the present onward. Justification is the work of the Lord, but sanctification is our work. Sanctification, as used in the Bible, is not applied to persons till after their conversion. In other words, when they confess and forsake their sins to obtain their first pardon, it is not called sanctification in the Bible. Sanctification, in a scriptural sense, is an act after conversion; and as the result of that act, we receive the gift of the Spirit. After we have sanctified ourselves to the Lord, then he can sanctify us, or set us apart for his service. Our sanctification must be before his sanctification. According to the plan of salvation, the Lord cannot sanctify us, or direct our steps in all things, till we fully set ourselves apart to his service, without the least possible reserve. Were it otherwise, he would interfere with our free agency. He invites all, but forces none. His language is, "Whosoever will, let him come." Whosoever will set himself apart to the Lord is the one whom he can sanctify to his service in any part of his vineyard; but so long as our will is raised against his, we are not fully sanctified, and cannot expect the gift of the Spirit, or "the blessing of sanctification."

Let us look at some examples of Bible sanctification. In 1 Thess. 4: 3, we read—"Brethren, . . . this is the will of God, even your sanctification." It will be noticed that this text is addressed to the brethren; not to unconverted persons. Says Paul, "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your reasonable service." Rom. 12: 1. If these brethren had already done this, it is not reasonable to suppose that the apostle would have given the foregoing exhortation. They were converted men, but had not presented their "bodies a living sacrifice" to the Lord; or had not sanctified themselves wholly.

So far as we can learn, those who have received the gift of the Spirit, or the blessing of perfect love, have first made a full consecration of their all to Christ, at some time subsequent to conversion. When this formal and entire surrender was made, they were not in a backslidden state, and did not feel condemnation for past sins; but instead of this, they felt an earnest longing or hungering after righteousness. This is not the feeling of a guilty sinner seeking pardon for his past sins. It is a mistake to confound the two together. Those who are first to sanctify themselves wholly are not those who had doubtful conversion; but on the contrary, as a general rule, those who had the clearest evidence of pardon when first converted. Such are more likely to seek for completeness in Christ, because they are better prepared to appreciate the importance of entire consecration, and are more easily led by the Spirit to present their "bodies a living sacrifice." Those in a lukewarm state do not step from that condition at once into the fulness there is in Christ, but must first obtain pardon for past sins, and then seek the gift of the Spirit, on condition that the Lord shall have full control of their all; mind, body, time, property, friends, reputation; every thing they have, or hope to have, now and for ever; ready to go any where, do any thing and every thing the Lord directs or allows, without a murmur.

This is what we understand to be sanctification on our part; having done this from the heart, then the Lord can sanctify us, and fill us with his Spirit, and thus abide in us continually, giving perfect peace and love, removing all doubts of our acceptance, and producing an ardent love for all pure things, and an abhorrence of all that is evil. Then we can sing, "All is well." Let each reader adopt from the heart the following:—

"Here I give my all to thee,
Friends, and time, and earthly store;
Soul and body, thine to be,
Wholly thine, forevermore."

FRANCE.—The state of things in France indicates the approach of another revolution, that will soon break forth, producing a radical change in national affairs. There are three parties in France, the Republicans, the Monarchists, and the Bonapartists. The Monarchists support the Bourbon family, called also Orleanists and Legitimists. It is thought M. Thiers is secretly favoring the restoration to power of the Bonapartists. It is understood that Louis Napoleon has many warm friends in the army, and among the wealthy classes, who believe that the restoration of Napoleon will give a firmness and permanency to the government, affording protection to trade, commerce, life and property, that cannot be secured under the present republican administration. This feeling is increasing, and bids fair to gain the ascendancy in a short time. There is much agitation in French Society on the subject; and when the French political pot begins to boil, it soon boils over.

ORDINATION.—Friday evening, Oct. 25th, Bro. S. G. Low, of Highlandville, Mass., was ordained in the chapel at Chelsea to the work of the ministry by Brn. J. Couch and M. Grant. Bro. Low is a true man, and deserves the confidence and sympathy of the church of Christ. Receive him to your hearts and homes.

HORSE DISEASE.—During the past week there has been a most remarkable horse disease spreading through the country. It is probably without a parallel in the history of the world. It has spread with wonderful rapidity, from Canada to Buffalo, Rochester, New York, Boston, and various other cities and towns, until it is said there are twenty-five thousand horses disabled in the city of New York. Horse cars, express wagons, and coaches are stopped, and even funerals are unable to get a supply of carriages. For further particulars, see news.

WE learn that Sr. Fassett is still very sick, at Santa Clara, Cal. Pray for Bro. and Sr. Fassett.

WAR ON HOLINESS.

Carnality can often recognize the beauty of revealed truth, and give it a hearty preference to tradition and error; but when the vital theme of holiness is made prominent, carnality disrelishes it, and frequently makes war on it; and that too, under the plea of reverence for the truth, forgetting that it is possible to hold "the truth in unrighteousness." The truth enlightens the intellect, and that kind of holiness that spurns this intellectual enlightenment, and prefers the darkness of tradition, and the gloom of error, is a deficient article. But true holiness, while not hostile to sacred truth, deals mainly with the affections of the heart, instead of revolutionizing the theology of the head; but when the affections are warmly enlisted for Christ, the way is well paved to present effectually the doctrines of Christ in contrast with the errors of men.

While upon one hand, holiness cannot be made a pretext for rejecting the truth, though it is possible to secure the affections of the heart for Christ, by having it imbued with perfect love before the intellect is fully enlightened on all theological points; upon the other hand, it is a fatal mistake to make holiness consist in the reception of the system of truth, or to make truth a substitute for holiness. Truth is the frame-work of the gospel structure, and holiness is its vitality. The one is not complete without the other, nor can supplant the other. Why, then, try to place them in antagonism to each other? Why try to pull down holiness under the plea of elevating truth? Let both occupy their heaven-assigned latitude. Only carnality will seek to make war on holiness, while entrenched in morality; for carnality and morality often go hand in hand. Nor are we justified in fighting true holiness simply because this theme has been carried to some fanatical extremes. If we abandon every thing that has been abused, we must abandon every thing good. W. S.

COMING LATE.

The practice of coming late to camp, conference, or special meetings, and then complaining that the right subjects are not presented, is a bad practice, and ought to be discontinued. Those who come early seldom feel thus. A judicious minister will feed the flock of God in the early stage of the meeting, when believers mostly compose the congregation; and in the latter part of the meeting, when unbelievers are numerous in the congregation, he will adapt his discourses to their wants more specially; hence, those who come late miss the feast which they should have enjoyed in the early part of the meeting, and are quite sure the minister does not begin at the right place. They are like the scholar who enters school a week too late, and is consequently behind in his class.

Again, some ministers come late, too, who ought to have been there in time to have preached; but some other talent being more suitable for the later congregations, they are not set to preaching, and deem themselves slighted; or, if informed that the brethren judge it best for the cause that another man address the large gathering, who is fully competent to set forth the truth, they wonder that they are not chosen to address the large congregation. Possibly some come late for this purpose, over-estimating their own ability. Do not make haste to be considered a big preacher, but be a good one, willing to do little duties. Be early and earnest. W. S.

HUNTING SOUR APPLES.

I once heard a friend remark that some people would hunt a forty-acre-orchard all over for the sake of finding one tree bearing sour apples, as a pretext for cursing the orchard entire. Some people go to campmeeting, and other general meetings, on the same principle. They will pass by a score of opportunities for doing and getting good, as if in search of something better; but the first exceptionable thing they find in the meeting, or in any one attending it, they are wide awake to find fault, and deal out censure. They have found the sour apples, after a diligent search, and now the orchard must be cursed. And why? Because those apples were not sweet; and yet, if they had really possessed a relish for sweet apples, they might have found all they wanted long before. But they wanted something to grumble about. We want less sour-apple-hunting. Hunt for something better. It will do you more good, and hurt others less. W. S.

"CHILDREN OF THE KINGDOM."

A sister requests an explanation of Matt. 8: 11, 12, which reads thus: "And I say unto you, that many shall come from the east and west, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven. But the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

1. Reference cannot be made to a church-kingdom set up at the first Advent, even if the Christian church were the kingdom, for (1) Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, who belong to this kingdom, never belonged to the church which Christ organized, but to the Hebrew church (2). If allusion were made to a church-kingdom, the Savior would be made to say, "The children of the church shall be cast out into outer darkness," which would prove the damnation instead of the salvation of the church.

2. Reference cannot be made to a sky-kingdom, for that would make Jesus affirm, "The children of heaven shall be cast out," which would prove the depopulation of heaven, and the damnation of its former occupants, whether angels or saints.

3. Reference must be made to the kingdom which Jesus taught his disciples to pray for—"Thy kingdom come; thy will be done in earth as it is done in heaven." The territory of that kingdom is now occupied by sinners, who are to be dispossessed preparatory to its being given to the saints: "As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire; so shall it be in the end of this world. The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; and shall cast them into a furnace of fire; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their father." (Matt. 13: 40–43.) After sinners are dispossessed, who are the present "children of the kingdom," Abraham and all the saints will possess the "kingdom under the whole heaven." (Dan. 7: 27.) The present "children of the kingdom," who are sinners, must make place for the future "children of the kingdom," who are the righteous. All the heirs will soon be waked up, and the territory be fitted up for them to spend eternity in. W. S.

"PREVENT."

Paul says—"For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep." 1 Thess. 4: 15. What does this word "prevent" mean in the text? Just what it does in several other texts, and just what it meant in ordinary talk at the time the translation was made—to go before, or precede. Said David—"In the morning shall my prayer prevent thee (Ps. 88: 13); that is, go before thee.

Again—"God is my defence. The God of my mercy shall prevent me; God shall let me see my desire upon mine enemies." Ps. 59: 10. David meant that God should go before him in battle to give victory; not that God should hinder him. The same meaning is found in several other passages. And this was Paul's meaning: The living saints will not go before the resurrected saints to meet the Lord, but they will all rise together. To make the apostle mean that the living saints should not hinder the dead saints from rising conveys the absurd idea that the living saints have power to hinder the resurrection, but will not exercise that power. W. S.

"ACTIONS SPEAK LOUDER THAN WORDS."

This old maxim has been fitly applied for thousands of times; but its application is never more appropriate than to "dandy preachers," who strut like peacocks, swell up like warty toads, and give every indication of a thirst for personal notoriety. All these things bespeak the predominance of carnality in the heart, which unfits one for the position of a minister of Jesus Christ. Such an one may be a sensationalist, provided he has talent enough, and thus get the name of a "revivalist," perhaps; but he will do no permanent good to the cause; the excitement which he may have inaugurated, he being the spring from which it proceeded, will soon pass away like morning dew, leaving desolation in its path. But the true minister of Christ will be Christ-like in his actions, which are usually the outward expressions of inward feelings; and he will manifest the lamb-like, dove-like spirit, mingled with humility. Such a minister, though he may not be very talented, will do permanent good, and will everywhere exert a hallowed influence. His actions speak for Christ. W. S.

HO! TOBACCO USERS.

Some of you may not have read the following candid reasons for refraining from tobacco using, which we clip from a secular paper:—

1. The habit is at war with temperance. Tobacco is an intoxicant. It is a part of the merchandise of dram-shops and an incentive to drunkenness.—The toper, rebuked by a professed teetotaler, with a quid or a cigar in his mouth, might pertinently respond, "Physician, heal thyself."

2. The habit is a self-indulgence in flagrant conflict with the self-denying spirit of the Divine founder of christianity. It numbers among its slaves more than one hundred and fifty millions of human beings. It hinders moral reform, and it impedes progress.

3. The habit is essentially filthy, and "cleanliness," says the proverb, "is next to godliness." Ladies of refinement involuntarily shrink from the man who chews, or snuffs, or smokes, unless custom has rendered them indifferent to these vile practices.

4. The lips of a tobacco chewer, or habitual smoker, are swelled and saturated with a disgusting poison, the gums are spongy and tender, and the whole mouth and throat affected by its use.

5. The habit of using tobacco is inconsistent with the character of a christian gentleman. "St. Paul," Bishop Hooker tells us, "was emphatically a gentleman." Would he have poisoned the air with sickening smoke, or deluged the floor with liquid filthiness? Never!

6. The habit injures the voice. The smoker articulates huskily. The chewer often croaks. The snuffer speaks through his nose.

7. The habit is costly. Official statistics show that more money was spent for tobacco in the United States during 1871, than for bread—the staff of life. $350,000,000 for tobacco in its various forms. $200,000,000 for flour within the year!

8. The habit often lowers the self-respect of those who practice it. "I love my pipe," said a clergyman, "but I despise myself for using it.

9. The habit disturbs the regular pulsation of the heart. Tobacco users are thus in constant danger. Many fall dead suddenly.

10. The habit weakens the mind. It enfeebles the memory, paralyzes the will, produces morbid irritability, diseases the imagination, deadens the moral sensibilities, and is therefore an "assault and battery" on the nervous system, the intellect and the soul.

11. The habit is a rebellion against conscience. Those who indulge in it know that it wastes time, money, strength and life, and tramples on the laws of nature, which are the laws of God. Hence it is a sin.

12. The habit is as contagious as the cholera. Every mature smoker or chewer infects dozens of youths with a desire to follow his pernicious example. Thus the evil spreads.

Bondsmen of "tobacco," break your chains. After a month of abstinence you will not care for the poison, and within a year after your self-emancipation you will loath it. It is God's command that you do yourself no wilful harm. For this reason, added to those already placed before you, give up the use of tobacco forthwith and forever!

Let christians take the lead in this reform, and let our people be first in the ranks. God was particular to have the Israelites physically clean. Would he have us less so? W. S.

UPON the occasion of the installation of Archbishop Bayley, as head of the Catholic Church in America, at Baltimore, President Grant sent from the White House conservatory a magnificent crown and cross of flowers, which was given the position of honor upon the altar in the cathedral, and was much admired.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, Aug. [illegible], 1872, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts, and earnestly invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

STRANGE THINGS.

BRO. GRANT:—This is the first time I ever saw the streets vacant of horse cars; the horses being nearly all sick with the epidemic, so general through the country. Scientific men are at a loss to know the cause and remedy. There is one fact to which I wish to call attention; i. e., every wet season there is a blue mould gathers on the bottom of clover and other grass, that salivates the horses, and causes a druling, or slobbering, as it is generally called, which causes a general weakness, loss of appetite, and a falling away of flesh. Now as this has been a very wet season, and as the old hay is nearly used up, and the horses are fed on the new hay, perhaps the scientific might find some impurities in the hay. Every effort ought to be made to ascertain and relieve these valuable servants God has made for our use. Horse radish is one of the best medicines to quicken their blood, and regulate their appetite. It is as good for a horse as catnip is for a cat. These simple remedies are safe and cheap, and have done wonderful cures for sick horses. Give two pounds a week in their feed. It would be well to try it.

But if the vial is poured out in the air, as Dr. Cumming of England thinks, there will be strange epidemics spoken of by the Revelator, visiting man and beast. We are living in strange times, all admit, with strange diseases. The curse is heavy upon the earth, and people will be more perplexed until the earth is made new, and this groaning of man and beast stopped. H. MUNGER.

"PATIENT IN TRIBULATION."

S. S. CHAMBERLAIN.

"Rejoicing in hope; patient in tribulation; continuing instant in prayer."—Rom. 12: 12.

We praise the Lord, now that the storm is past, for delivering us and bringing us safely through. Much of the time we had very little but hope to comfort us; as we were enduring chastisement which was not joyous, but grievous. "Nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness to them that are exercised thereby."

We rejoice in the precious promises found in the precious Bible—promises which we appropriate to ourselves. He has promised to never leave nor forsake us, even when passing through fire and flood. We would gladly speak a word of encouragement to those who may be, even now in the furnace, as we have been. The Lord will surely verify his promises, and if you call upon him, he will hear and answer. The fire will only purify and refine, it will not destroy. "Whom the Lord loveth, he chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom he receiveth." Let us pray for grace to enable us to endure chastening, that we may patiently "wait on the Lord," and be of good courage.

Then we may forget "the things that are behind" and press forward, rejoicing in hope, for the time of trial is short. Let us press toward the mark, for the prize of the high calling. We will yield our will submissively to his will, saying not my will, but thine be done.

Dear brother and sister, pray for me, that I may be with you among the chosen ones in the kingdom.

Oxford, Mass.

THE DATE OF THE APOCALYPSE.

L. T. CUNNINGHAM.

I have been requested to give the evidence, through the Crisis, that the Apocalypse was made to John near the close of the emperor Domitian's reign, or near A. D. 96. Says Horne's Introduction, vol. 2, p. 382—"The unanimous voice of Christian antiquity attests that John was banished by the order of Domitian. Irenæus, Origen, and other early fathers, refer the apostle's exile to the latter part of Domitian's reign, and they concur in saying that "he there received the revelations described in the Apocalypse." Says Prof. L. Gausson, of Geneva, Switzerland—"The exact age of the Apocalypse is given by Irenæus, of all the witnesses the most reliable. . . . Irenæus, the disciple and friend of Polycarp and of Papias, themselves friends or disciples of John, was born at the beginning of the second century, in the environs of Ephesus or Smyrna, that is in the province of the seven churches of Asia, where John, as says Polycarp, was buried." Irenæus' birth, according to Jerome, was in the fifth year of the emperor Trajan's reign, or A. D. 102. These are the words of Irenæus—"It is not long since the Apocalypse appeared; but it is almost in our generation, towards the close of Domitian's reign."

Clement, of Alexandria, attests that John returned from Patmos to Ephesus "after the death of the tyrant." Tertullian speaks of Domitian as "having banished christians"; and of John, as "having been first cast into boiling oil, and then sent to an island." Victorinus, bishop of Pettaw, and martyr in A. D. 290, often repeats that it was by Domitian that John was banished to Patmos. Eusebius, Procherus, Jerome, Orosius, Arethus, Primasius, and Isidore, from the fourth to the seventh century repeat the same. "All Christian antiquity attests to us that John died full of days, in the province of Asia," or at the age of 103. Says Horne, "Domitian's death is related to have happened in September, A. D. 96. The Christian exiles were then liberated, and John was permitted to return to Ephesus. As, however, the emperor's death, and the permission to return, could not be known in Asia immediately, some time must intervene before the apostle could be at liberty, either to write the Apocalypse at Ephesus, or to send it by messengers from Patmos. We conclude, therefore, with Dr. Mill, LeClere, Basnage, Dr. Lardner, Bishop Tomline, Dr. Woodhouse, and other eminent critics, in placing the Apocalypse in the year 96 or 97."

Internal evidence also supports this conclusion. For, in the first three chapters of the Apocalypse, the seven Asiatic churches are described as in that advanced and flourishing state of society and discipline, and to have undergone those changes in their faith and morals, which could not have taken place if they had not been planted for a considerable time. Thus the church of Ephesus is censured for having left "her first love." That of Sardis "had a name to live, but was dead"; the church of Laodicea had fallen into lukewarmness and indifference. Now the church of Ephesus, for instance, was not founded by Paul until the latter part of Claudian's reign; and when he wrote to them from Rome, A. D. 61, instead of reproving them for want of love, he commends their love and faith. Eph. 1: 15. Other facts of a similar character might be adduced, but this must suffice at present.

FRANCE UNEASY AGAIN.

It is easy to see that under the comparatively smooth surface of affairs in France a deal of plotting is going on among the adherents of the different pretenders to the throne. Little Monsieur Thier, President of the so-called Republic, is nervous and excited. He sees a Bonapartist conspirator at every corner, and an infernal machine in every parcel. The able and wily Plon-Plon and his wife, in spite of their earnest protestations, were incontinently bundled out of the country, and will have to pull the wires of intrigue in their own behalf or in that of their Imperial cousin, Louis Napoleon, from the friendly neighborhood of Switzerland.

The present government of France seems to be considered from some cause or other, a sort of make-shift—a government which all factions will sooner tolerate than the success of any one of their rivals. It has no compact party with definite purposes and principles behind it, and it has no hold in the affections of the people. In the Assembly the other day, when the President made an allusion to the permanence of the present Government he was greeted with loud and derisive cries from the Imperialist benches. The followers of the late Emperor, who were very few and quiet for some time after the war, are growing in numbers and boldness, and seem to be as important as any of the factions, and to be much more dreaded by the anxious President. Prince Napoleon undoubtedly went to Paris to take part in plotting for a new dispensation, and was too dangerous a politician to be tolerated so near the seat of Government. Louis Napoleon is busy with his schemes at Chiselhurst, and his agents are at work everywhere in France, showing the people how the imperial martyr has been abused, and how much happier and more prosperous France was, in the good old days of the Empire, than she is now under this dull unattractive regime of little Mons. Thiers.

Moreover, it is said that Louis Napoleon is making an alliance with the Internationals, which assures their support in placing him on the throne again, on condition of adopting a socialistic basis for the new regime. Nearly the whole influence of the church would undoubtedly be given to him, and time is on his side. Every day helps to soften the exasperation felt towards the ex-Emperor on account of his responsibility for Sedan. Altogether, it looks as though Louis Napoleon were not shelved so effectually as it was thought two years ago. The very next turn of the wheel may carry him into his old place again, to the infinite misfortune of ill-fated France, and to the wondering disgust of the rest of the world.—Buffalo Express.

REPORT OF THE MAINE WESTERLY QUARTERLY CONFERENCE.—On account of the rain, there was no meeting until Saturday. Saturday morning commenced with a social meeting, which was good and interesting. Preachers present were C. Goud, J. R. Hall, H. D. Reed, H. S. Mitchell, until Saturday night; then Bro. C. Goud and H. D. Reed left for their appointments. Sunday morning, social meeting; then, at 10½ o'clock, preaching by Bro. Hall, and afternoon and evenings. After the afternoon meeting, we partook of the Lord's supper, at which a goodly number were present. The meeting was good and profitable, and has left a good impression on the people. At our business meeting, we made choice of Eld. H. D. Reed as President, and Eld. H. S. Mitchell as Secretary for the ensuing year. Our next quarterly conference will be in Dec. Any church or society wishing to have it at that time, will send in their request. H. S. MITCHELL, Secretary.

ADVICE TO A YOUNG MINISTER.

When you open your commission, begin with laying open the innumerable corruptions of the hearts of your audience. Moses will lend you a knife which may be often whetted at his grindstone. Lay open the universal sinfulness of men's natures, the darkness of the mind, the frowardness of the will, the fretfulness of the temper, and the earthliness and sensuality of the affections. Speak of the evil of sin in its nature, its rebellion against God as our sovereign, ingratitude to God as our lawgiver, and contempt both of his authority and love. Declare the evil of sin in its effects, bringing all our sickness, pains, and snares—all the evils we feel, and all the evils we fear. Lay open the spirituality of the law and its extent, reaching to every thought, word and action, and declaring every transgression, whether by omission or commission, deserving of death. Declare man's utter helplessness to change his nature or make his peace.

When your hearers are deeply affected by these things, which is often seen by the hanging down of their heads, then preach Christ. Lay open the Savior's almighty power to soften the hard heart, and give it repentance, to bring pardon to the broken heart, a spirit of prayer to the prayerless heart, holiness to the filthy heart, and faith to the unbelieving heart. Let them know that all the treasures of grace are lodged in Jesus Christ for the use of the poor, needy sinner, and that he is full of love as well as power; turns no beggar from his gate, but receives all comers kindly; loves to bless them, and bestows all his blessings free. Here you must wave the gospel flag, and magnify the Savior supremely. Speak it with a full mouth, that his blood can wash away the foulest stains, and his grace subdue the stoutest corruptions. Entreat the people to seek his grace, to seek it directly, to seek it diligently, to seek it constantly; and acquaint them that all who thus seek shall assuredly find the "salvation of God."—Berridge.

Correspondence.

From Bro. P. G. Bowman.

Bro. Grant:—While I was at the North, a good Bro. (whose name and address I have forgotten) expressed a desire to come down here and help us to put up our houses of worship, and at the same time assist me to labor in the gospel field. This is to urge him to come at once. A carpenter can do well down here now. We are anxious for his services in both of these departments. And what about that little colony of Advent brethren at Springfield, who talked of selling out in New England to move South? Come on, brethren, come quickly. We have a healthy country, and plenty of good and cheap lands; and the citizens are anxious for you to come and settle among us. Time is short. O come, and let us do all we can to prepare the way for the coming of the Just One.

Lydia, Darlington Co., S. C.

From Bro. H. B. Sevey.

Bro. Grant:—Since my last letter, the Lord has poured out his Spirit upon us abundantly. Our protracted meeting in Belgrade was among the best. Brethren and sisters came with a mind to work. Wanderers returned to Jesus, found mercy, and rejoiced in full salvation. Sinners came forward and were blest. Others saw the truth as never before. Seven followed their Lord in baptism on Sunday. It was a blessed season truly. Some confessed they ought to preach, having felt the burden at times for some years. God would not bless them in disobedience. They would fall into darkness, but at last resolved by the help of God to obey. May they have the help of God, and the sympathies of his children. Only we who have fought in the open field know the stern realities which those have to endure who feel they are called to proclaim the last message to a perishing world. Help the young preacher, brethren and sisters, by your prayers and means. One dear young Bro. said to me, as he went with me the first time to preach, with tears in his eyes, "Bro. Sevey, a man wants more courage to go this way than Gen. Grant needed to take Richmond." Bro. Rines, Rhodes and Haggett helped preach the word of life.

While our conference was in Chesterville, I felt it duty to remain in Belgrade and Rome, as the work seemed to demand my labor. Two put on Christ by baptism in Rome. The interest has not been so good in those places for several years. All praise to our Father in heaven. Lord, help us to work.

H. B. Sevey.

From Bro. E. Morrill.

Bro. Grant:—I am still in this work. We closed up the tent meeting at Canterbury last Monday evening, Oct. 21st, and left with the promise of returning again to labor more in the vicinity soon. That meeting was the best, and most productive of good, of any we have had this season. Many sought and found Jesus, and are rejoicing in hope. We buried nine last Sunday in the liquid stream, and as many more in that vicinity are up to that cross; and we hope the Lord will give the strength soon to follow. To God be all the glory.

One peculiarity of this meeting was the presence of Shakers in large numbers, who listened with attention to what many of them never before heard; and many of them took part, expressing their gratitude for having the privilege of attending the meetings. They have never been known to take such a course before.

To brethren and sisters, whose letters I have neglected to answer, I would say, that I have been straitened for time, but will answer them soon. May the blessing of the Lord rest upon the scattered flock, and we all be gathered soon in the kingdom.

Suncook, Oct. 24th, 1872.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. B. Spaulding writes from Chelmsford, Mass., Oct. 6th, 1872:—"Age and infirmity disables me from traveling and visiting as I used to; but my heart is in the work. I love the cause I used to love, and tried to proclaim it with what ability God gave me. I am seventy-two years old. I am able to work some, and I can write some. I find much in God's word yet to learn, and I think we ought to make progress in knowledge as well as in grace; leaving the things which are behind, and pressing forward to those before us. I am satisfied we are living at the end of the gospel age, and that a new age or dispensation is just about to open upon us. It seems to me there are many important prophecies to be fulfilled after Jesus comes and raises the sleeping saints. I feel grateful to those who write to me, and would be glad to have many more write. Letters are like cold water to a thirsty soul. I cannot go abroad, but I expect the time is near when my age and infirmity will be turned to youth and activity; when there will be no sickness, sorrow, pain or death; when the tree will yield its fruit, and the field its increase. Bless the Lord, O my soul."

Bro. P. B. Manning writes from Goffstown, N. H.:—"I am on my bed of fever. I have had two doctors to see what they can do for me. Hope they can help me up so as to be a little better. I am trusting in God for help."

[We learn that Bro. Manning is needy. Who will help him?—Ed.

Obituaries.

Drake. At Winchester, Conn., Sept. 28th, 1872, of typhoid fever, Harriette J., wife of Henry Drake, aged forty-three years.

The death of our sister, who was a noble christian woman, has caused much sorrow to many hearts. In her death, a husband loses a good wife, a daughter a kind mother, other relatives one that was greatly beloved by them. The church of which she was a much valued and useful member, greatly deplore their loss in her death. Much might be said in her praise, but her record is on high. She will be the Lord's in the day when he makes up his jewels. Words appropriate to the occasion were spoken at the funeral by the writer.

R. K. Stark.

Storer. Died in Brunswick, Me., Oct. 13th, 1872, Bro. Henry M. Storer, aged thirty-nine years.

Henry was greatly beloved by all who knew him. He has left a faithful companion, two dear children, and a large circle of other friends to mourn; but he rests in hope. May we all greet him in the resurrection morning in the better land,

When our grief will all be o'er,
And we meet to part no more.

Mayo. Died in North Amherst, Mass., Oct. 16th, Capt. Noah Mayo, aged seventy-two. He died in peace, with a good hope.

Summary of News.

Cable News.

ITALY.

Advices by telegraph from Rome state that the inundations of the river Po continue. The water has risen to an alarming height, overflowing the river banks and flooding the surrounding country for miles, causing a general devastation and calamity. The immediate cause of the inundation was the swelling of the Po and its tributaries by heavy rains, which still continue. Houses, crops, farm stock, etc., have been swept away by the flood. It is believed that many lives are lost, but the facts cannot yet be ascertained. Whole villages have been inundated, and the unfortunate inhabitants compelled to flee to more elevated districts for safety. Thousands have been rendered totally destitute by the calamity. In the plains of Piedmont and Lombardy, through which the Po flows, a large proportion of the growing crop has been destroyed, and the traffic on the navigable part of the river is at a stand-still. Mincio and Ticino, affluents of the Po, have also overflowed their banks, causing considerable damage.

DOMESTIC.

The Horse Disease.

New York, Oct. 23. The epidemic among horses has caused intense alarm in this city. The disease is spreading rapidly. It is rumored to-night that Mr. Bonner's Pocahontas has been attacked by the malady. About one hundred and fifty cars and fifty stages have been taken off to-day.

It is feared that here as in Rochester locomotion by stages and cars will be suspended in a few days, the manifestations of the existence and spread of the disease to-day being of a startling character. The exact nature of the disease seems to puzzle veterinary surgeons. Blood letting and drenching have been found failures, and many horses have died from the treatment. Among the various medicines used are a solution of tar and belladona, aconite given homeopathically and Taylor's compound food, the product of the Manhattan Feed Mill Company. This last mentioned is the only remedy which has met with marked success as a preventive and cure. Many cases of the disease are reported in Jersey City.

Rochester, N. Y., Oct 23. The horse disease continues its ravages, and there are not a score of horses in the city and neighborhood unaffected, although very few fatal cases are reported. . . . Merchants are put to great expense in hiring men and boys to transport goods. The street cars are not running, the livery stables are closed, and it looks like Sunday in the streets. People from the country reach the city by steam, and trade is lively. The disease prevails in the surrounding country as extensively as in the city. It is stated that only in cases in which bleeding has been resorted to have horses died.

Syracuse, N. Y., Oct. 23. The horse epidemic is spreading rapidly. Fully four hundred horses are affected, including those of the fire department and street railways. It is feared that the cars will be stopped shortly altogether.

New York, Oct. 23. One of the reporters of a city paper writes as follows: "Seven thousand horses in New York city prostrated by the new epidemic that has been raging in the Canadas and Western New York may appear rather a sensational statement; but, after visiting all the principal stables in the city, I have not the slightest hesitation in stating that I have underrated rather than exaggerated the appalling spread of the contagion. It is not confined to any particular class of horses, but all stables have been visited by the disease, from the squalid shed that shelters the costermonger's nag to the magnificent palace where the millionaire's thoroughbreds recline at their ease, surrounded by all the luxury that wealth can purchase.

There has been no time to take any precautions, as the contagious qualities of the disease are so violent that within twenty-four hours from the time the first symptoms of sickness were noticed in one large stable in the city, one thousand horses under the same roof were similarly affected. Although there are some differences of opinion as to the exact nature of the disease, it is conceded by all to be a species of influenza, and the majority pronounce it to be catarrhal fever."

New York, Oct. 25. The latest situation in regard to the horse disease may be summed up as follows: Altogether there are, in the opinion of a reporter who has thoroughly investigated the subject, about thirteen thousand horses sick in the present time.

New York, Oct. 26. The horse malady has now spread to such an extent that almost all horses in the city are said to be suffering in one form or another from symptoms of the epidemic. There are thousands of horses which have not yet been put upon the sick list, but observation goes to show that many of these have germs of the disorder in their systems. The disease has thus far been rather slow in its development, and it is not known yet whether all its stages have been seen. It is estimated in the city and immediate vicinity that there are from thirty to forty thousand horses suffering from well developed symptoms.

The disease has begun to exhibit new an alarming phases, which are looked on as highly dangerous. The inflammation of the throat extends to the lungs and rapidly grows more alarming, and the coughing is fearfully convulsive. The animal pants, the breath becomes quite cold at extremities. This seems to be a warning of the fatal ending of the malady, and if it is now for a few days longer, there can be little doubt that hundreds of horses affected will die. The street car companies, some of the livery stable proprietors and many down town merchants are still working their diseased horses, and in all these cases the signs of fatality are becoming more alarming. In the stables, where all business is suspended until the disease is mastered, very favorable reports are made. In some instances convalescence of the horses is very rapid. The trotters and racers stabled in the city seemed to have nearly escaped the disease. At least six hundred cars have been withdrawn from the city railroad lines in this branch alone. The disease throws thousands of men out of work. Hackmen have almost tripled their fares for passengers in utter violation of law, and refuse to carry those refusing to pay illegal rates. The managers of railroad companies believe that at the present rate their stock cannot hold out longer than Sunday night. No stable as yet reports that any horse has been perfectly cured. It is feared that several ocean steamers will have to postpone sailing, owing to the impossibility of getting freight on board.

New York, Oct. 27.—The disease among the horses continues its ravages in the city and vicinity with unabated severity. The scourge has appeared in every private stable of magnitude in the city, so that now it is difficult to find a single uninfected animal on the streets.

Boston presents a remarkable appearance to-day (Oct. 26th,) owing to the almost total withdrawal of every kind of vehicle from the streets. . . . None but those employed in business of extreme urgency are allowed to leave their stalls. Early pedestrians traversed the entire length of the city, meeting only a few milkmen and an occasional hackney coach.

A gentlemen coming into the city from South Boston Point at 7 o'clock encountered only three vehicles, and at 9 o'clock the desertion was so great that only eight carriages were visible in coming from the Providence depot to the Journal office. Public conveyances to the railway stations could not be obtained at the South End stables for love nor money, and the greatest difficulty has been and is still experienced in procuring carriages for the use of mourners at funerals. A funeral occurred in this city, and the corpse was carried to Salem for interment. It was found impossible to obtain hacks to convey the friends of the deceased to the depot, but by dint of urgent appeals to the Metropolitan Railroad Company, a special car was obtained for the purpose.

THE HORSE RAILROADS.

There was a total suspension of street car travel on three of the principal lines to-day, the result of which was that thousands of mechanics residing in the suburbs, dependent on this mode of conveyance, were compelled to walk into town in the dripping rain, filling the sidewalks with an unwonted current of humanity.

No cars have been run to-day on the Lenox street and Tremont House line. The Middlesex Railroad have not had a car out this morning.

STEAM RAILROADS, EXPRESSES AND TEAMSTERS.

Owing to the accumulation of merchandise in the great depots in New York the officers of the Boston and Old Colony Railroads decline to receive freight except for way stations. All the freight houses in this city are clogged with goods, which it is found impossible to remove. Only a small proportion of the express matter finds an outlet from the city offices, and very few orders to call for packages are complied with.

The suspension of the trucking business falls heavily upon a class of men who are poorly prepared to withstand the loss accruing from the withdrawal of their teams. The horses of hundreds of men of moderate means are literally eating their heads off. The losses in income to teamsters is estimated at from ten to fifteen thousand dollars a day. Several deaths have occurred among the horses of teamsters.

EFFECT UPON THE MARKETS.

The streets in the vicinity of Quincy and Faneuil Hall markets were sparsely occupied this morning by truckers' carts and provision wagons. The occupants of stalls are put to their wit's end to find teams for delivering meats and provisions to the hotels and restaurants, and men and boys are employed in carrying out baskets in every direction.

J. H. Harrington & Co. are employing half a dozen men, who are harnessed into their large wagon, dragging loads of provisions from the depot to the market.

The hand-cart and wheelbarrow brigade was out in force to-day, and were the objects of amused attention and some cheerful remarks. Old wheel barrows and hand-carts, which had been dormant in junk-shops and store-houses, back-yards and safe places for a long time, made their debut to-day, and more of these vehicles were seen on the streets at ten o'clock this forenoon than horses. Several coal dealers are supplying their customers with cauldrons placed upon hand-carts drawn by several men pulling steadily and patiently by a rope attached to the vehicle. All over the city boys are harnessed to wheel-barrows, trotting along like colts on errands to all parts of the city.

It is said there is no doubt that the epidemic has attacked the human family, and there are plenty of cases all over the city. Five cases are reported in one street at the South End.

The Horse Disease.—It is said "every horse in the city of New York (forty thousand) is affected more or less with the distemper. It is spreading in all directions through the country. To-day (Oct. 29th) eight hundred yoke of oxen are expected in Boston to do express work in the place of the disabled horses. Many express wagons are now drawn by men, and even some horse cars. The whole thing is a very strange affair. We do not venture an opinion at present, as to why this remarkable visitation has been permitted. Other events may transpire that will make this all plain. We wait with intense interest for further developments.—Ed.

I was appointed by the Lawrence Time Conference to bring before the brethren scattered abroad in the New England States, and elsewhere, the importance of another Time Conference, to be held in some convenient locality, for the purpose of still further discussing this most important subject, viz., the definite time for the coming of our Lord from heaven, and to learn or obtain the mind of any church in a convenient locality, if such a convention is desired, or would be regarded as profitable among them. Let any church that desires such a meeting, and could accommodate the brethren that would attend, send notice to the writer of the fact, and as to when it would be convenient for them that such a meeting should be held. Let action be taken on this subject without delay.

PATIENCE.

Toil on, O troubled brain,
With anxious thoughts and busy scenes opprest;
Ere long release shall reach thee. A brief pain,
Then rest.

Watch still, O heavy eyes,
A little longer must ye vigil keep;
And lo! your lids shall close at morning's rise
In sleep.

Throb yet, O aching heart,
Still pulse the flagging current without cease;
When you a few hours more have played your part,
Comes peace.

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

(From our English Correspondent.)

Mr. Editor:—The impressions I received from the first appearance of the country after America were not of the most favorable kind. The morning we landed was a very inclement one. A drenching rain was falling, and the wind blew cold—so different to the United States, where, but a few days before, I had been half broiled beneath the sun. But one thing struck me as a novelty, and that was the fulsome attention given to us by men waiting to be hired as porters, etc. It almost amounted to servility. Taking cab and driving to the Caledonian station for home, I met at that railway depot our Bro. White, of New Bedford. He came over a few weeks ago with Bro. Geo. A. Brown, for a trip, and was just returning by the steamer Europa, of the Anchor line. His hurry to be on board only gave us opportunity to exchange a few words of greeting, and saying "Good bye," we separated for home. The bell rings, and now it is near ten o'clock A. M. The train leaves at that hour, so we must make haste and get our places. I took my place in a box—for nothing better than box was it—in one of the railway carriages. I looked around. There were no cushioned seats; no comforts whatever. It was merely a means of conveyance. But I must give you some description of the railway accommodation of the country. The cars are not built as in America. You can walk the whole length of a train in the States. Not so in staid England; for you cannot go through even a single carriage. They are divided off into compartments—boxes. Partitions are built up between these compartments, and they will hold perhaps a dozen passengers each. The cars are probably one third shorter than those of the United States, and are raised on high wheels. The speed of travel in England is far greater than in America, the rate of many of the trains, inclusive of stoppages, being more than thirty miles per hour. A guard showed me into one of these boxes, and I exclaimed—"Do you call this fit for human beings? Do you mean to say I am to travel in this cattle box? I am from America, and we would hardly put our dogs into such a place as this. But I presently remembered we were in Britain, and that in this land—this perfect hive of industry—men were so occupied with work, and the provision even of necessaries, that they could not be looking after such trifling comforts! So I sat back, and began stoically to brace my nerves against the circumstances, till near the time for the train to start, when the compartment received an accession, in the shape of a clergyman, his wife, and son, and another gentleman. All to once we began to move. The rain was falling outside the depot, and beating on the top of the cars. As they moved out it poured in through the centre of my box till there was quite a pool of water in the centre of the compartment. We spoke to the guard at the nearest way station, who re-adjusted a circular piece of wood at the top of the carriage, and the trouble was obviated. I thought I would try to sleep; for nearly fifteen days travel had slightly wearied me. So, laying backward, I commenced to coax the stupifier, when—drip! drip! drip!—what was it? I looked up, and found that the rain had penetrated between the chinks of our car roof, and was wetting me in my cozy corner. I cleared out of my position at "double quick," and sought a better place. Looking opposite to me, I saw the clergyman's wife. She had leaned her arm against the window, and taking up her sleeve, lo! it was soaked through. We had certainly got into a bad car.

By and by, to shorten the journey, I began to talk to my fellow passenger clergyman. I told him my occupation in America—preacher of the word; and told him I was now come to England to mission on faith. He could not understand the principle of going out without salary. Faith in God, who clothes the field, and paints the flowers, and gives verdure to the plant, and will see to it that all his servants are fed, was a thing eminently pretty and theoretical with him, but far from practical. No salary! was positively an innovation. I said, "When the Lord Jesus called me to preach, I did not make stipulation or agreement with him for so many hundred pounds a year. No; the hireling's service was not what I sought. Jesus had said, 'Ye are my friends,'" and I felt toward him as a friend seeking the interest of a friend. He gave me what was right. So that sometimes I abounded, and then again was in want, which enabled me to preach truly because experimentally. He had always cared for me, and always would. And though I had not a cent guaranteed for the gospel work, yet he would provide. We talked on this point for a long time, and finally got on to the nature of man; the unconsciousness of the dead; the reward of the righteous and punishment of the wicked; the kingdom of God at hand, and all those specialities which characterize us as a people. I need not say that the truth was mighty, and I do have some hope that it may spring up. I was rather amused at the self-confident manner of the ministry here; its seriousness and tenacity for mere assertions of their own; and had to tell the minister, my companion, that all his pretty anecdotes and grave speeches weighed nothing with me, because opposed to the word of God. He thought I had probably been influenced as a young and inexperienced man into these heresies (as he called them); but when I assured him that the immortality of the soul and kindred fallacies had been by early teaching worked into the bone and marrow of my being, and that I had gone to the Book to fortify myself against the truth, but was convinced by the word of God against any pre-conceptions, he marvelled.

But I will not tire you and yours by the little events of the way. Suffice to say, I got home safely. It was Sunday, and I wished to hear the word of the Lord, so in the evening I attended the Baptist church. A foreign-going missionary supplied. His subject was home; and he had for his points—the family, the retinue, and the estate. But the family went home as ghost-men. The retinue were angels, which were spirits. And, alas, for the estate! God, said he, had rolled out the stars into the skies as croquet-balls are rolled out at the beginning of a game. The estate was somewhere up there. Whether it was in the planets, or the fixed stars, or the nebulæ, he did not definitely say, at first. But he asked us to think of an ocean studded with islands; the blue sky was the ocean; the stars the islands. I did not, however, exactly learn whether we were to cruise about among these island in ships, or not. Finally, however, he said, "Beyond them all was our Father's home," so that I suppose that was where we went. The estate—Abraham's farm. The world for our home—the new heavens and earth—dwelling in the house of the Lord, was not even hinted at. It seemed he had every thing but the truth. The language was good; but feeling with my heart the whole theme, I found it tame and soulless. I went home heavy—sad.

On Thursday last, I attended another meeting. One of the deacons preached from—"I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive forevermore," etc. I sat in my seat with uneasiness, and I am not quite sure if a low groan of pity did not escape from me. He said Christ was God. He was always the eternal life. He had never died (in direct contradiction of his text.) Only the shell of Jesus had died; only his mortal part expired on the cross. But Christ still lived on in hades. ("Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures"), and many other monstrous things, which gave me the impression that he had not savingly realized the atonement. And if, indeed, only the shell of Jesus was broken for an immortal part to escape the penalty, then only shells are redeemed, whilst the real man remains amenable to the law, and has no redemption purchased for it. It is time for God to work, and he is working through his people. They will not keep silent. God prompts, God directs, God disposes to labor, and we are about to drive in the plough of the word, though it upturn the soil of the mind, and show every weed of the enemy's planting.

Yesterday, trusting in the Lord, I went and engaged a hall for three months. It is a new and splendid place. We are to have it Sunday afternoons and evenings, and on Wednesdays. It will cost some money, and there are only three or four of us to bear it; but one brother volunteers to go without food to help meet it. We shall not beg for it; but the Lord, whose is the gospel and the work, will probably for his name cause some to be disposed to help. We ask you to pray for us. Pray earnestly, constantly, and in faith, that God may help mightily.

TLE WAY TO BE HAPPY.

J. W. THOMAS.

The first step in the road to happiness is to pray. Make things all right with the Lord. Multitudes to-day are seeking happiness, but they are seeking it in the wrong way. They never will find it until their hearts are right with God. They have sinned and they know it, and God knows it, and they never need look for a happy heart until they first have a pure heart. Holiness comes first; then happiness. The wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable. This is God's order. He will not bless us in our sins, but he calls upon us to repent and pray, to confess and forsake our sins, and then we shall obtain mercy. If we regard iniquity in our hearts we might as well whistle as to pray, for God will not hear us; but when we come to him in sincerity, then he will listen to our cry and bestow upon us the blessing we need. As long as we carry about within us a guilty conscience, it is impossible to be happy. There may be transient flights of joy, as sometimes seem among the gay pleasure lovers, but within there is sorrow and unrest. Guilt in the heart spoils the happiness of life. It is like a worm in a tree constantly eating at the very core of its life and causing the beauty of its foliage to wither, fade and die.

Would you be happy, get rid of the poison of sin. Flee to the open fountain of a Savior's blood. Pray God for the sake of his Son to cleanse you from all sin, and give you a pure heart. When this is done a sweet and heavenly peace will fill your soul. No longer tossed and distressed like the ocean in a storm, but calm, peaceful and happy as an infant sleeping on its mother's bosom. The best way to get through the world is to be constantly taking everything to God in prayer. Are you troubled and perplexed? Do a multitude of cares press upon you? Cast your burdens on the Lord. He careth for you. Let your faith cling to the promise, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." We should be like the old colored woman, who, when persecuted, only replied, "I must tell the Lord." Ah! this is the secret of a happy life, "Tell the Lord. Pray. Believe.

"O what peace we often forfeit,
Oh what needless pain we bear,
All because we do not carry,
Everything to God in prayer.
Can we find a friend so faithful,
Who will all our sorrows share?
Jesus knows our every weakness,
Take it to the Lord in prayer."

When Moses had been above with God, his face shone; and it is only when we commune much with the Lord that our countenances will be lit up with the heavenly radiance of peace within.

Another way to promote happiness is to sing. Singing is one of God's best and choicest gifts. How dark this world would be if there were no sweet voices to sing. All nature sings. Even now as I write the birds are chirping and singing around the old farm house door. How happy they seem to be. I thank God for the pretty birds. They teach us how to be happy. How can a Christian lounge in bed until the sun is three or four hours high, when the sweet little birds are picking out their notes by the first streaks of the morning light. Away with this lazy, sour, gloomy, long-faced religion. Up and out ere the sun shines in at thy window, and the birds cease their morning song. God's religion makes us happy. He puts the sing into our hearts and bids us go on our way rejoicing. Are you cast down and discouraged? Do dark shadows hang over your pathway? Sing. Wake up the mirthfulness of your nature. Be cheerful. Singing praises to God will drive the devil, and fill your heart with joy unspeakable. How happy David was. Hear him—"Be glad in the Lord, and rejoice, ye righteous; and shout for joy all ye that are upright in heart. Rejoice in the Lord, O ye righteous; for praise is comely for the upright." "Sing aloud unto God our strength; make a joyful noise unto the God of Jacob." "O," says one, I am no singer. I cannot carry a tune." Well, then make a "joyful noise" unto God. Give vent to the emotion of your heart. Praise God.

When overwhelmed with sorrow David would pray and sing until the darkness fled away and the light of God's countenance shown around him once more. The Lord was his light and his salvation. He gave him songs in the night. Paul and Silas with bleeding backs and aching limbs prayed and sang praises at the midnight hour, until the old prison was lit up with the glory of God. Martyrs have sung in the midst of flames and shouted praises to God with lips quivering in death. We have visited the hovels of the poor, the sick, and the dying, and have found them rejoicing in a Savior's love. When we think how much others have suffered before us, and how happy they have been in the midst of all their afflictions, can we ever be fretful or unhappy?

Let us rather sing and give thanks, and show by so doing that we are followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promises. Do you want your children to be happy? then let them sing. Do you want your home circle to be beautiful and lovely as a garden of flowers? then make it attractive and cheerful. Do you want your prayer meetings to be seasons of joy and refreshing? then sing in the Spirit. Do you want your own heart to be a well-spring of joy, pouring its stream of gladness all around? then let the word of Christ dwell in you richly in all wisdom, and sing and make melody with grace in your heart to the Lord.

TWENTIETH ANNUAL MAINE S. A. C. CONFERENCE.

Oct. 8th, 1872, was a very rainy day. We had appointed to meet in conference in Bath, but only Eld. John Ridley arrived, direct from Iowa, and preached to the few who assembled in the evening. 9th, at nine A. M., several brethren arrived, and spent the forenoon in prayer and conference. At two P. M., others arrived, and an hour was spent in social meeting. The Lord gave us a special blessing, cheering and strengthening all present. The President then called the meeting to business, when the officers for the coming year were elected. Eld. C. Goud, President. Eld. F. A. Baker, Vice President. Eld. I. C. Wellcome, Secretary. Eld. W. H. Mitchell, Treasurer. Elds. R. R. York, J. A. Libby, and Jesse Gay, Executive Board. I. C. Wellcome, F. A. Baker, D. W. Griffin, E. M. Haggett, Jared Whitman, Tent and Mission Board. I. C. Wellcome, Tract and Mission Agent. Elds. W. H. Mitchell, F. A. Baker, J. A. Libby, Committee on Ordinations. Adjourned.

10th, met at nine A. M. After prayer the subject of tract distribution and mission work was discussed, and the use of money for the work. The agent was instructed by conference to issue a circular suitable for subscriptions, and appoint sub-agents throughout the State to solicit subscriptions and membership of our mission society for mission and tract work.

The case of T. P. S. Hampson was called up, and the following action taken:

Whereas, it is known that T. P. S. Hampson, of Biddeford, has left the State under circumstances which develop the fact that he is not worthy of the christian name. Therefore, Resolved, that we withdraw our fellowship from him, and instruct the Secretary to erase his name from our records.

The following paper was read and adopted: Whereas our beloved, faithful brother, Elder Thomas Smith, of Bangor, has been laid by from service for more than a year, and through infirmities of age is suffering in weakness and fast sinking to death, we wish to express our sympathy for him and his faithful wife, and to solicit the attention of those who have this world's goods. Although he enjoys the hope of Jesus' speedy coming to give him eternal life, he has no income, and but small means to sustain them during their mortal life. We therefore commend their case to the christian charity of all our brethren, trusting they will not allow them to suffer for the necessities of this life.

The tent and mission committee report. We found that most of the ministry in Maine were so occupied in preaching in their respective fields, while some were much engaged in their various trades to earn an honest support, or to add to their property, they could not be persuaded to travel with the tent. The tent was called for by brethren in Casco, and was pitched there three days in July. Excellent meetings were enjoyed, and several believers baptized. Brn. Whitman, Gay, and Wellcome did the preaching. The tent was pitched and occupied on the camp-ground during the campmeeting at Mechanics Falls, and was very serviceable for large meetings, and to lodge strangers. Many excellent meetings were enjoyed in it. It was pitched in Oxford in Sept., and meetings held ten days, during which we had four rain storms. Bro. and Sr. Taylor held a tent meeting in this place last year, and the good results are seen. A good company of believers and workers has, by the blessing of God, been raised up by that effort, followed up by the labors of Brn. Whitman, Libby, Gay, and others. We found them looking for the Lord, and ready to work for the salvation of others. Our meetings were well attended. The Lord blessed our effort and awakened new interest, greatly strengthened believers, and made deep impression on the hearts of others. Some members of the Methodist church were in constant attendance, and worked with us, confessing new light and benefits by our meetings. Others heard candidly, and will be more interested in their Bibles, and be benefitted by what they heard. I. C. Wellcome, A. W. K. P. and Stephen Taylor did the preaching. The expenses of each meeting were met, and we have no financial report to make. I. C. Wellcome, Chairman of Committee. Report accepted.

Tract and Mission Report.—The Agent had bought tracts, $30; received of Eld. F. A. Baker, tracts, $50; received of Sydney Hall, tracts, $20; total, $100. Distributed tracts to the amount of $60.50; tracts now in hand, $39.50; due the agent on 1871 account, $28.78; paid for tracts this year, $30; paid two express bills on tracts, $2.25; total, $61.03. Collected on mission membership, $29.55; the Treasurer reports in hand, $19.38; total, $48.93; due the Agent, $12.10. Collections on mission memberships are—at Auburn $1.25, Bangor $1, Bath $11.50, Buckfield 50c, Hartford $2.30, Kennebunk $5, Livermore $1, Lewiston $1, Sumner $3, Topsham $2, Yarmouth $1. Total, $29.55.

Treasurer's Report.—Received money collected by Eld. J. A. Libby, $6; Sr. Morse, Portland, $9.88; Sr. Merrill, Hollis, $3.50,—$19.38. Total receipts of Agents and Treasurer, $48.93.

11th. Friday, A. M., met at nine o'clock. After prayer, the Secretary read an interesting letter from Eld. L. T. Cole, now settled in Oneida, Ill., in which was a request for dismission from this conference to join the A. C. Conference of Southern Ill.

Eld. J. Ridley being about to move to Manchester, Iowa, also requested to be dismissed to join the Northern Iowa A. C. Conference. On those requests the conference took action thus: Resolved, that Brn. L. T. Cole and John Ridley be dismissed from this conference, and that we herein recommend them to our brethren in the west as faithful and reliable ministers of the gospel of Christ. The Secretary read a letter from the R. I. and Eastern Conn. A. C. Conference, commending Eld. C. H. Sweet, of Bonny Eagle, who has moved into Maine, and desires to join our conference. Brn. G. W. Howard, of Lowell, and G. F. Haines, of Biddeford, were also proposed for membership, and the above three were received by a unanimous vote.

Advice to churches. Believing it to be injurious to the cause of Christ in this State for churches to countenance the labors of ministers who use their influence to sustain factions and side issues, therefore Resolved, that we recommend such churches to give no countenance to such preachers as persist in such a course. Adopted.

Campmeeting Committee Report. The chairman made a verbal report, stating that they had improved the ground and stable, and built a boarding house at Mechanics Falls, incurring some two hundred and twenty dollars expense, which was met by the contributions at the late meeting. They had held the largest, most interesting, and best meeting this year they had ever held, and believed it would result in much good. There were circumstances which indicated to them that it was not best to hold a campmeeting in Pittsfield this year, and they had refrained. Yet it was thought advisable for the interest of the brethren and cause east to sustain a campmeeting among them, and they purpose, if time continues, to hold one next year at Pittsfield or vicinity.

Ordaining Speakers. The subject of indiscreet action of ministers who ordain men as preachers without consulting their brethren in the ministry came up, and was freely discussed. Some curious cases were related, and the general opinion was that Paul's counsel was good—"Lay hands suddenly on no man." All agreed that there is no necessity of ordaining men not called of God to the ministry, nor of ordaining such as are, until there is good proof of that fact. Let there be wise action.

Tobacco. The following was discussed and voted: Inasmuch as we know that the habitual use of tobacco is injurious to the physical, mental and moral powers of man, is obnoxious to many, offensive to good society, opposed to cleanliness "of the flesh and spirit," extravagant in expenditure, wasteful of the Lord's money, and destructive to christian influence; therefore we affectionately and earnestly entreat our brethren and sisters to refrain from using it. We, as a people, have made high professions of advanced positions in Bible knowledge, self-denial, and personal sacrifices, above other sects; how then, if we do not seek to reform in this matter, shall we construe the fact that our Methodist and Free Baptist brethren, in their late conferences, have passed strong resolutions against the use of tobacco, refusing to hereafter receive any more ministers into their conferences who persist in using it. Are they not far in advance of us in this effort for reform?

Free Masonry. A telling resolution was read on masonry, and discussed, which let some daylight in upon this "work of darkness." It did not pass, but it gave relief. Conference passed a vote of thanks to the brethren and friends of Bath for their kindness to us. It was voted to publish this report in the World's Crisis and in the Advent Christian Times.

Afternoons and evenings were devoted to preaching and exhortation, and were seasons of deep interest. Brn. Ridley, Mitchell, Gay and Wellcome preached. We all felt that our work is of the greatest importance, and is soon to close by the coming of our glorious Lord, to give eternal life and rest to his church.

Oct. 18th, 1872. I. C. Wellcome.

"WHAT IS TRUTH?"

"What is truth?" was asked many years ago in the midst of solemn and trying scenes. It has often been asked since that time, and to-day we often hear the inquiry, and very many have been the answers. I am told by one this is truth, by another the opposite. I go to one place and a good brother (for I have no reason to doubt the honesty of his heart) says I must believe this, for it is dispensational, sanctifying truth, that has been hid in the darkness of papal night, and now in these last days, when knowledge is increasing, brought to light; the belief of which will sanctify and thus prepare the bride for translation. I go to another place. Opposite positions are taken, and still new ideas are advanced, the rejection of which places us outside the pale of their ideal church; and so on until I can number several different positions taken by equally good and honest souls, so far as I can judge.

And again we ask—What is truth? Shall we, because there seems to be such a harmony in the word of God, and our belief is so very precious to us, be so bigoted as to conclude that all others must be wrong? We have been mistaken in some things in the past, perhaps we may be again; or it may be that some others have truth that we have not discovered. That we may yet learn something not now understood by us.

Good and wise men have differed, do still, and probably will. Our belief though dear to us is not the standard. We are not infallible, we may err. Let us make a distinction between "the truth" and our belief; the doctrine of Christ, and our opinion of it. We are not required to be perfect in knowledge. If so, many of us, and I think all would be without hope to-day. But thank God we may know and believe the love that God hath to us." God is love, and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him. Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment, because as he is so are we in this world." And still we ask What is truth? If we are to be sanctified through the Spirit and belief of the truth (and thus saith the word) we must know what it is. Let Jesus answer—"I am . . . the truth," as well as the way, "and the life." When we embrace Christ do we not embrace the truth?

Is not Christ the embodiment of all truth? In possessing Christ do we not virtually possess all? In receiving Christ there is in us a willingness, at the loss of all things, to be taught by him as the truth is in Jesus, and so learn Christ. Eph. 4: 20–24. And we desire so to walk in the truth that those around can testify of the truth that is in us. 3 John 3: 4. And possess the witness of the Spirit because the Spirit is truth, loving all, not in word or in tongue, but in deed and in truth. I would say to all the dear saints whom I love in the truth, and not I only but all they that have known the truth for the truth's sake, which dwelleth in us and shall be with us forever, "Grace be with you, mercy and peace from God the Father and from the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of the Father in truth and love." 2 John 1: 1–3.

"And what is truth should be the word,
And every human soul
Should feel his inmost being stirred
To know it as a whole.
Truth in the triune bosom lay,
And was in part concealed
Till God in Christ, the truth, the way,
Was to the world revealed.
And now sent forth, behold truth stand,
Pointing the way to God,
The only way that God hath planned—
No other can be trod."

CHRISTIAN UNION.

Great efforts are made for union among christians, some of which are judicious, some injudicious; some wise, and some otherwise. The effects seem various, and the results uncertain. Perhaps in some cases the subject is not fully understood.

Christ prayed that his followers might "all be one." Not that they might be one for an hour, in a union prayer-meeting, and then separate for ever in various sectarian folds; but one as Christ and the Father are one—one for time and eternity, in nature, character, purpose, life, and glory. This was the union he contemplated, and no union short of this will fully answer the Redeemer's dying prayer.

"But," says one, "different denominations and professors of religion are not thus united." This is very true; but did Christ pray that all "denominations" might be one? By no means; for he made no provision for such denominations, except by way of reproving those who cause such divisions. Did he pray that all church-members in good and regular standing, in evangelical or unevangelical churches, "might be one?" Certainly not, for that would have been praying that there might be concord between Christ and Belial, union between believers and infidels, and fellowship between saints and hypocrites. No such union as this is possible or desirable.

Nor did Christ pray that all his disciples might speak one language, worship in one place, live in one country, wear one kind of clothes, or bear any of those outward marks of unity which would prevent their going into all the world to preach the gospel to every creature, and becoming all things to all men, that they might thereby save some.

But is there no unity possible? Can there be no unity of the one body, in one Spirit, faith, hope, and baptism, and in the one Lord, and one God and Father of all? Is there not a real union between the true members of the one body, the branches of the true Vine? Suppose its tendrils do cling to different trellises, and suppose that when moved and racked by winds they may press and chafe against each other, yet are they not from one root? Trace each tendril down, and will you not find unity at the bottom? What if a man's hands do not always clasp each other, does not the head unite them? What if his feet and eyes seem to have nothing in common, does not the common life and the central brain maintain the unity of both?

So the union of christians is vital rather than external. They are united with each other through Christ; not with Christ through each othe.r And this bond renders their union with mere worldly professors of religion, all the more impossible. There can be no vital union between live branches and dead ones; nor between degenerate plants of a strange vine, and living branches of the true. There may be a visible union, like the union of the staves in a barrel, which lasts while the hoops hold, and fails when they drop off; but there can be no vital union, knitting and interlacing the growing fibres in a common structure, until the lightnings of heaven can hardly rend them in twain.

Of course this vital union is not like the unions of the world. The world's unions are without heart and soul—a gorgeous feast to-day, and a drunken fight to-morrow; a great jubilation one year, and a sea of blood the next;—a union of Pilate and Herod, who become reconciled to each other, when there is a just man to be mocked, and scourged, and crucified.

The union for which Christ prayed was not a union for exclusive and sectarian ends. It was not an oath-bound secret order, nor a private denominational clique, or combination of men who quarrel in private over the spoils of their ecclesiastical offices, but who present an unbroken front when blandly appealing to the public for money to pay their salaries. It was not a union of castes or classes of Pharisees, "who trusted in themselves that they were righteous, and despised others;" nor of men who by reason of some peculiar opinions had come to be agreed in their theories, notions, and crotchets. It was not a union of men who were willing to love those who would agree to love them, and worship with them, and vote for them, and pay their money into their hands—such unions as these were not considered, desired, or prayed for by the Lord of glory, in that solemn prayer he offered up the night before he died. The union he desired was broader, purer, and deeper—"I in them, and thou in me," that, bound by a common spirit, and a common love, "they may be made perfect in one."

Beloved, do we know anything of this deeper unity? We are one in a common ruin by Adam; are we one in the great redemption by Jesus Christ? We are one in the fallen nature; are we one in the new and resurrection life? We are one in a human brotherhood; are we united in that great family which in heaven and earth adores the eternal Father. Condemned by one law; doomed to one punishment; bought by one blood; perfected by one sacrifice; pardoned by one act of heavenly amnesty; begotten by one living word; soldiers of one army; members of one body,—can we deny our unity in Christ Jesus? Can we deny that his prayer is answered? Can we justify ourselves in anything that tends to exclude from our arms and hearts those whom the good Shepherd welcomes to his fold, or in doing anything to impair the harmony of the people of the Lord? "I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, with all lowliness and meekness, with long-suffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. There is one body, and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord; one faith; one baptism; one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all."—The Christian.

OPIUM EATERS.

An inquiry among druggists reveals the fact that there are in New York city about five thousand confirmed users of opium in its various forms of sulphate of morphia, laudanum, and the crude root. The ranks of these inebriates embrace all classes of society, from the lady of Fifth Avenue to John Chinaman of Baxter Street. The drug is sold by many respectable druggists over the counter without a physician's prescription, but, as a general thing, only to known and regular customers, who have become thoroughly used to it. Sometimes a stranger can get it, but it is only because his appearance unmistakably indicates that he is an opium eater.

"You can always tell 'em," said a worthy up-town druggist. "There's something about their complexion and eyes, and about their nervous manner, that tells on 'em at once. They are all 'sure beasts.' They'll pay at first, probably, and then they'll let a little 'stand over' greater, or they'll get full credit and then they won't come any more. They'll go to some other druggist and work it on him."

Sometimes the unfortunate, brought to a low ebb by the cravings of the horrible appetite, will steal all the laudanum he can find in the store. A respectably dressed lady was recently detected by a clerk in a drug store on Third Avenue hiding a bottle of laudanum in her dress. The appetite destroys all moral sense as surely as it ruins all the physical faculties.

It is estimated that each drug store in this city has an average of three daily customers, who buy morphia or opium, and probably as many more who buy laudanum, for the purpose of intoxication. The opium, in its crude state, is sometimes bought and greedily eaten on the spot. "They chew it," says one druggist, "as you would wax." The crude opium, however, is not the favorite form of the drug among the confirmed eaters. It is used more generally, both for eating and smoking, by the Chinese pagans in the dark cellars of the Sixth ward, than by any other class of customers.

It takes longer than morphine to affect the system, and then the principal desire of the inebriate is to betake himself to the gorgeous land of fancies, that delicious garden of perfect rest, to which morphine at once transports him. Sulphate of morphia is the favorite form of the drug, and it is in this state that our New York devotees mainly use it. Some of the doses taken by the "sots" are enough to kill half a dozen men innocent of the habitual use of it. One lady some time ago bought ten grains of it, and drank it off at once without leaving the store. An old gentleman, well known for his old age, is said to be in the habit of taking twenty-five grains of it daily.

A quarter of an ounce of it was drunk at a sitting in a drug store up town, recently, by a man who had an incurable disease, and who admitted that he did not care whether it killed him or only eased the pain. Numbers of wealthy people doubtless buy the article at wholesale, and thus avoid the necessity of a physician's prescription, and also avoid the exposure consequent on frequent applications for it at the druggists. In this way, also, they prevent the possibility of any very close calculation as to the number of hasheesh worshippers in the metropolis; but our estimate, from the rough calculation of druggists, is probably very near the correct figure.—Sel.

FALL WEATHER AND WARM BLOOD.

We should never allow ourselves to forget that nature intended us for warm-blooded animals. In this climate of surprising changes, we are very apt to forget it, especially in the fall and spring. At such seasons, when we freeze and simmer on alternate days, there is engendered in us a certain recklessness, which takes no heed of cold or heat, dampness or dryness, and receives all temperatures with the same front, generally a defenseless one. It is certainly very troublesome to change front as often as the weather, and there is a prejudice in American minds against such change, which has a great deal to do with the rapidly increasing population of our graveyards. People like to have some stability of purpose, and if they can have it in nothing else they will try to have it in their dress. They will not make a change until they make a permanent one for the season. No matter how hot it is in the spring, they will wear spring clothes until summer, and no matter how cool it it may be in August, summer clothes must be worn until fall shall actually set in. Thus oft-times suddenly and with sad results we find ourselves approaching the condition of the fishes and lizards,—for the chill, that alert forerunner of disease, is ever ready, in our climate, to take advantage of circumstances.

We suppose that there are no people in the world so indifferent to the demands of the weather as Americans, and one reason of this is that very many of us are ashamed to keep warm. To wrap up and button up, and to put down windows whenever there is a chilling change in the air, argues, to most minds, a namby-pamby eagerness to be well that is repugnant to the hardy American soul. So, rather than be laughed at, we shiver. We prefer tragedy to comedy, the grave to the ridiculous.—Home and Society, in Scribner's for November.

Killing Animals.—Many persons would be glad to know how to kill an animal without suffering, and we venture to give the benefit of our experience. We are constantly called upon to destroy horses, dogs and cats, and have little difficulty in doing it. For horses we use a large sponge, say six inches in diameter, thoroughly saturated with cloroform, which is dropped into a bag large enough to be drawn over the horse's nose. It is not desirable to have the bag "air-tight;" for, if so, suffocation is likely to ensue. In two or three minutes the horse is unconscious, and in eight to ten minutes dead, without suffering. For dogs and cats a similar process, using a small sponge and bag; or these animals, with the saturated sponge, may be put in a box admitting some air, when they soon "go to sleep." Seventy-five cents' worth of chloroform will kill a horse, and twenty-five a dog or cat. If one saturation of the sponge does not complete the work, repeat it.—Our Dumb Animals.

The white cabbage is the favorite vegetable in China. It is eaten raw as a salad, and said to be equal to the best lettuce, or boiled, in which condition the flavor reminds one of the finest asparagus.

ONLY A GRAIN OF SAND.

A man who had for years carried an old and cherished watch about him, one day called on its maker, and told him it was no longer useful, for it would no longer keep time correctly.

"Let me examine it," said the maker, and taking a powerful glass, he looked carefully and steadily into the works, till he spied just one little grain of sand.

"I have it," he said. "I can get over your difficulty."

About this moment, by some powerful but unseen power, the little grain, suspecting what was coming, cried out—

"Let me alone. I am but a small thing, and take up so little room I cannot possibly injure the watch. Twenty or thirty of us might do harm, but I cannot, so let me alone."

The watchmaker replied—

"You must come out, for you spoil my work, and all the more so that you are so small, and but a few people can see you."

Thus it is in the home. One cross feeling, one hasty word, one angry look, may mar and hinder the running of the perfect machinery. We may go alone, and with God set again the time-piece; but if we do not trust in his keeping power, how soon the old enemy is on hand to thrust in again the little grain which will impair the works, and hinder the wheels, and present a false face to all who are around! Let us then look to our Savior as one who is able to "keep from us falling," and trust him as the God who will deliver in the temptation and keep the home watch running perfectly.

BIRD LIFE IN THE SOUTH.

The city of Columbia, S. C., on a February day presents to its inhabitants a sight which no other city on the continent affords, in the immense number of birds that people its magnificent shade trees. Thousands upon thousands of red-breasted robins are assembled, as in grand convention, prior to their flight to the North. Jay-birds, blue-birds, and peerless mocking-birds are here in large numbers. The fruit of the sugar-berry tree, the wild orange, the black gum and the varieties of oak, afford them abundance of food.

The robin makes its appearance from further south about the beginning of January, and still remains about the middle of February, when it takes its flight to the north. For the last few days the air is full of them assembling for departure, and to any one who ever witnessed the gatherings of swallows at the north in the fall of the year, preparing for their flight south, this assembling of the robins presents a familiar scene.

It is an interesting sight to see them on the ground in search of food. They move as an army and seem to be under the command of a leader, who, on the slightest alarm, utters a shrill, quick note—instantly the whole flock takes to flight. As they move through a field their numbers are so great they destroy immense numbers of cutworms and grubs. For a moment they stand as in silent meditation, then turning the head to one side, listen, when presently they peck away at the earth, and a worm is brought to the surface, which is quickly devoured.—Young Folks Rural.

IF YOU PLEASE.

Boys and girls, we will print for you the last words of the Duke of Wellington, "if you please."

When the Duke of Wellington was sick, the last thing he took was a little tea. On his servant handing it to him in a saucer, and asking if he would have it, the duke replied, "Yes, if you please." These were his last words. How much kindness and courtesy are expressed by them! He who had commanded great armies, and was long accustomed to the tone of authority, did not overlook the small courtesies of life. Ah, how many boys do! What a rude tone of command they often use to their little brothers and sisters, and sometimes to their mothers!

They order so. This is ill-bred, and shows, to say the least, a want of thought. In all your home talk remember "If you please." To all who wait upon or serve you, believe that "if you please" will make you better served than all the cross or ordering words in the whole dictionary. Do not forget three little words—"If you please."

"Speak gently; it is better far
To rule by love than fear."

The Beggars' Bridge.—The following legend relates how a certain Grand Duke of Florence built a bridge without expense to the state: The Grand Duke issued a proclamation that every beggar who would appear in the grand plaza at a certain designated time should be provided with a new suit of clothes, free of cost. At the appointed hour, the beggars of the city all assembled, whereupon the officers caused each avenue of the public square to be closed, and then compelled the beggars to strip off their old clothes, and gave to each one, according to promise, a new suit. In the old clothes thus collected enough money was found concealed to build a beautiful bridge over the Arno, still called the Beggars' Bridge!

CHRIST IN MAN.

How beautiful the wondrous plan
Of God in Christ, and Christ in man;
Which helps prophetic souls to trace
Bright heaven beneath the human face.

'Tis true he shines in brook and tree,
But brighter shines, oh man, in thee;
Oh, dim not with the shades of sin
The glory which should gleam within.

In thee doth Jesus walk the earth;
In thee he speaks of heavenly birth;
In thee instructs, in thee rebukes,
With wisdom not in earthly books.

Look not to heaven's celestial dome;
In holy hearts he makes his home;
And let it be thy thought and care
To seek, and find, and know him there.

RESURRECTION AND TIME.

M. CHANDLER.

I wish to express a few thoughts on the subject of the two resurrections, and the time between. The truth is what we need. It will stand. I have noticed the discussions on both subjects, resurrection and time. The resurrection of the just and unjust taking place at the same time, involves a difficulty I am not able to solve. Another thought back of that. If the jubilee commences when the Lord comes, where is the fulfillment of the forty-ninth year Sabbath? The Savior says, "Not one jot nor tittle of the law shall fail, but all be fulfilled." In the law the Sabbath precedes the jubilee. Now, to me, a theory that does not harmonize with all Scripture is not sound. My thoughts may be objectionable to some; I do not claim perfection; but the best I have on the subject are these:—

We read in Hebrews—"There remaineth, therefore, a rest [or the keeping of a Sabbath] to the people of God." Under the law they rested on the Sabbath preceding the jubilee. Now, to harmonize the whole, we read in Ps. 49: 14—"Like sheep they are laid in in the grave [these are wicked]; . . . and the upright shall have dominion over them in the morning." Here we infer that there may be a day for the whole work to be accomplished. Also, there are two resurrections—the upright first. Again—"Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead." Isa. 26: 19. Here we see those who sleep in the dust are the singers, and wake up first, before the earth casts out the dead (those who are condemned already). We now turn to Ps. 92: 7—"When the wicked spring as the grass, and when all the workers of iniquity do flourish, it is that they shall be destroyed forever." Here we have the resurrection of the unjust. They spring as the grass. How does the grass spring up after the winter is past? The earth thaws out, the grass springs up, and the earth looks green. The wicked, having all been dead, the time for their resurrection arrives. Christ speaks, and they all spring forth as the grass, and flourish together, or at one time. It is then they shall be destroyed together. We see that the resurrection of the wicked is distinct from that of the just. So in the New Testament. The Savior speaks of rewards being given at the resurrection of the just. Paul speaks of a "better resurrection." John gives time between the two; also the Psalmist David, as we will show. Now the conclusion.

First, we would remark in reference to time: we understand the Bible to teach three kinds of time; first, our time, twenty-four hours for a day; second, prophetic time, three hundred and sixty-five days, or one year of our time, the length of a prophetic day; third, the Lord's time, one thousand years of our time, the length of God's day; 2 Pet. 3: 8—"one day." We understand by this, that one of the Lord's days is one thousand of our years; hence, it was taught by some of the fathers, at least, that the six days of creation stand for six thousand years for man's probation, and the seventh God rested from his work; so the seventh thousand year for man (righteous) to rest from his work, as God did from his. Heb. 4: 8-10. This we understand is symbolized by the forty-ninth Sabbath, which precedes the jubilee. Now the day of the Lord being one thousand years (our years) long, Christ comes in the morning, wakes the sleeping saints, and changes all the saints together to immortality, as Paul teaches; or, as in Ps. 49: 14—"The upright shall have dominion over them [the wicked] in the morning"; or, as in Ps. 59: 5-7, 11-14—"Thou, therefore, O Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, awake to visit all the heathen [or wicked]; be not merciful to any wicked transgressors"; which would imply complete destruction, when the Lord comes in the morning of the Lord's day. Ver. 6—"They return at evening; they make a noise like a dog, and go round about the city; behold, they belch out with their mouth." Vers. 13, 14—"Consume them in thy wrath, consume them, that they may not be. And at evening let them return." Here we learn that in the morning of the day of judgment, Christ comes and destroys all the living wicked, and raises the righteous dead. In ver. 16 the Psalmist says—"But I will sing of thy power; yea, I will sing aloud of thy mercy in the morning; for thou hast been my defense."

Now we have a harmony in Rev. 20th and 21st chapters, giving us the definite time of the day of judgment, or time between the two resurrections. Rev. 20: 6. The blessed and holy ones have a part in the "first resurrection"; "the rest of the dead" (the wicked, we should infer) shall not live until the thousand years are finished. All that do not have a part in the "first resurrection" will be exposed to "the second death." Verse 7. When the thousand years are expired Satan "shall be loosed out of his prison, and shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth, Gog and Magog [all the wicked], to gather them together to battle; . . . and they went up on the breadth [or surface] of the earth"; were resurrected by Christ, and gathered together for battle by Satan, who brings, or leads, them up around the city. Then the city must have come down out of heaven before this, or Satan could not have led them up around it (the saints at this time are in the city); "and fire came down from God out of heaven and devoured them" (the wicked). In Rev. 22: 15, we read—"Without [the city] are dogs, and sorcerers," etc.; the wicked dead resurrected. Now turn to Ps. 59: 5. The wicked are destroyed in the morning when Christ comes; so they are not. At evening, they come about the city. Now the question—How long the day? Answer—One thousand years.

ORGANIZED MATTER.

M. R. PRETTEPLACE.

All matter is organized or unorganized. All organization of matter is for a purpose. An apple tree is organized to produce apples. It may or may not bear apples, but it ought to, for it was organized for that purpose. The eye is organized for vision. It may or may not see, but it ought to, for it was organized for that purpose. If these organs do not perform their proper functions, there must be some defect in the organization, or the matter organized. All physical organizations with which we are acquainted are imperfect. The virus of the curse has had universal permeation, weakening and warping the entire machinery of the earth. Hence imperfect results.

The "organ of memory," located in the centre of the forehead, is organized to give the power of "retaining of past ideas in the mind." (Webster's definition of Memory.) Memory relates to ideas, and is not matter. But it is, or it is not, the result of the organization of matter. If memory is the result of the organization of matter, or that portion of the brain called the "organ of memory," then the condition of that "organ" ought to produce a corresponding condition or power of memory itself. A large, thrifty apple tree should produce a large amount of apples. It generally does. A large, well-vitalized brain, and "organ of memory," should produce a correspondingly strong and retentive recollection of the mind. It generally does. A large apple tree produces more apples than a small one, circumstances being equal. A large brain and "organ of memory" remembers more facts, and retains them longer than a small one, circumstances being equal. A small limb of a tree does not produce as many apples as a large one, circumstances being equal.

With small ideality, and average reasoning powers, a person would have a weak remembrance of ideas; while with large individuality he would have a clear retentive memory of places and incidents. Small "organs" give less power and corresponding faculty than large ones, circumstances being equal. An old, decaying apple tree does not produce as fair or as many apples as when it was young and thrifty. An old, diseased person does not have as strong a memory as when he or she was young and healthy. A dead apple tree cannot bear apples. A dead man cannot remember. Proof—"Therefore hast thou visited them, and destroyed them, and caused all their memory to perish." Is. 26: 14. Thus the Bible and analogy are in perfect harmony.

Certain conditions of an apple tree are necessary to produce apples. Destroy the organization of the tree and it cannot produce them. Therefore, apples are the result of living organized apple trees. Certain conditions of the brain are necessary to produce memory. Destroy the organization of the brain, and memory is destroyed. Therefore memory is the result of a living, organized brain. Memory is one part or faculty of the mind. If one part of the mind is the result of an organized brain, every part or faculty of the mind must be equally dependent upon an organized brain. Reasoning from analogy, it is just as true that an organized brain produces thought, as that apple trees produce apples. Let him who has eyes to see, see.

The process of organizations, the connection with and the effect of life upon them, the effect of the conditions of matter upon the mind, as connected with our subject, are topics for separate, brief articles, which may appear with the permission of our Editor. We have spoken of the imperfections of organizations. A usurper has marred nature with a malignant hand. Through his coming sin has been introduced. Because of sin came the curse and

"Death into the world, and all our woe,
With loss of Eden, till one greater Man Restore us and regain the blissful seat."
—Paradise Lost.

The curse-stains of the divine disapproval are everywhere visible. Air, earth, sea, vegetation, man, gases, and the mighty forces of electricity are all disturbed more or less disastrously.

It was not so in the beginning. It shall not be so hereafter. The curse shall be removed. Rev. 22: 3. The usurper's rule shall be broken. Heb. 2: 14. The enemies of God shall not be. Ps. 37: 10. Anarchy shall cease. Is. 9: 6. Desolations shall end. Is. 62: 4. The vine shall not cast her fruit. Mal. 3: 11. The fir tree shall transplant the thorn. Is. 55: 13. The dead shall live. Is. 26: 19. And earth dissolved by fire shall be remoulded. 2 Pet. 3. God's own hand shall trace upon it the lines of more than Edenic beauty and fertility. His own presence shall stream down upon its valleys of pleasantness, and sparkle and dance upon its sun-lit hills of glory. Every defect shall be remedied, and the thrill of his own nature shall permeate all.

Amen. Dissatisfied with the present disorder of things, and in a blissful anticipation of the glory that shall follow, we pray from our heart—Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly.

SANCTIFICATIAN.

C. E. BARNES.

The subject of sanctification has been attracting a good deal of attention of late, both in sermons, and in written communications to the Crisis. Of course each one who has spoken upon this subject has felt that he could give some light upon it, else he would have kept silence. Believing also that I may be able to present some light, even if it be but little, I take the liberty of addressing the household of faith upon this question.

The first thing that suggests itself to my mind is the question, What is sanctification? Is it a certain state or condition of grace which a person may lack, and yet be a Christian? The fact that it is often spoken of as being a work occurring after conversion, is evidence that to some minds at least it is so regarded. The conclusion that some do so regard it is a just one, for if a man say that he has been a Christian for a certain number of years, but that he has recently been sanctified, and that now he is "clean," "every whit whole," and that now his "will is wholly given up to God," and that his "all to Christ is given," it follows that prior to this sanctification he thinks he was not "clean" and "every whit whole," and that his will was not wholly given up to God, and that his "all" was not given to Christ, but as he speaks of himself as enjoying religion while in this prior condition, he must therefore think a man can be a christian and yet not be "clean," nor have his will in subjection to God, nor have his all consecrated to Christ. Now if a man admit that he was a christian without being sanctified to the extent mentioned above, this conclusion is a legitimate one; if however he say that a man must be sanctified to this extent in order to be a christian, then what he speaks of as being to himself a second blessing, was in reality only the beginning of his christian experience.

Sanctification is that state of grace in which the subject is set apart to the service of God; is that state in which the subject feels himself to be no longer his own, but the property of another. He will feel to adopt the language of Paul when he says, "Ye are not your own; for ye are bought with a price." And this transfer of ownership, this yeilding of self to God, is an act which belongs to conversion, and not to a subsequent period, and is the very Alpha and Omega of a truly christian life. Paul says, "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature." Men change their condition of alienation from God to a condition which is called "being in Christ," when they are first converted, and not at some period after that event. Jesus taught his disciples to pray to the Father, "Thy will be done," and this they are to pray when first they enter his service. If a man be truly converted, his will will be given up to God then; he will not choose to do any thing God would not have him do, and willingly and gladly he prays to his Father, "Not as I will, but as thou wilt." There is no state of grace or condition of holiness urged by our brethren as being attainable at the time of this "second blessing" or sanctification which is not attainable at conversion; and further, if the conversion be sound and genuine and what it ought to be, it will be attained then. Sanctification, then, is a state or condition in which a man has ceased to consider himself as his own ruler, a state in which he is a new creature, in which old things are passed away and all things become new; a state in which his service is given entirely to God, none at all being given to Satan; a state in which he prays, "Thy will not mine be done," a state in which all is given up to Christ in accordance with his requirement, which is applicable at the very commencement of his christian life, "Whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple." This I understand to be gospel christianity, and the piety which includes less than this I do not find recognized as christianity in the New Testament. And this state of consecration, or sanctification, or whatever you may call it, should be entered upon at conversion when a man first gives his heart wholly to God; and it will be entered upon then if a man be intelligently converted, and from that time forth he will go onward, growing in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

But now another question presents itself, What are we to think of the statements made by brethren, in whom we have confidence, that they have received the blessing of sanctification at a period subsequent to their conversion? Many of them say that they have been christians for many years, but were never sanctified until of late; what are we to think of such statements as these? I answer, if the brethren be faithful, and we have no reason to doubt that they are, we are to admit that they have received this blessing of which they speak, and then one of two things is evident; namely, either their conversion in the first place was not as thorough as it should have been, or else after being truly converted they wandered away from their first love, and by now renewing their vows and reconsecrating themselves to God, they receive the blessing which they might have enjoyed from the first moment of their religious experience. This is a just conclusion, for all must admit that if the same earnest consecration that has recently been made, had been made when they first entered the narrow way, the same sweet blessing would have followed. This fact may be plainly seen in the experience of the Rev. A. B. Earle, as he has given it in a little book entitled "The Rest of Faith." In the 5th chapter entitled "How He Led Me," on page 67, he records a copy of a written dedication which he made of himself to God, a number of years after his first experience in religion. The consecration was as follows:

"This day I make a new consecration of myself to Christ. Jesus, I now and forever give myself to thee; my soul to be washed in thy blood and saved in heaven at last; my whole body to be used for thy glory; my mouth to speak for thee at all times; my eyes to weep over lost sinners, or to be used for any purpose for thy glory; my feet to carry me where thou shalt wish me to go; my heart to be bardened for souls, or used for thee anywhere; my intellect to be employed at all times for thy cause and glory. I give to thee my wife, my children, my property, all I have, and all that ever shall be mine. I will obey thee in every known duty. "A. B. E."

This is a most worthy and commendable consecration, and concerning it I would simply remark, that instead of being deferred for so many years after his profession of Christianity, it should have been made the very day when he first entered the service of God. The very dissatisfaction and unrest, which he experienced, and his yearning after something he had not were caused by his failure to make in the beginning this thorough, complete and entire consecration of himself and his all to God.

On page seventy-one he says—"One sin that troubled me most, and was the hardest to overcome, was a strong will, a desire, and almost a determination, to have my own way; and thus, even in regard to little things, or any little inquiry or supposed wrong, to speak without reflection, and sometimes severely, even to those I knew were my friends; to say, 'I will do this', and 'I will not do that.' This I clearly saw must be overcome, if I would become a consistent and useful christian."

Now, here he confesses that in all these years in which he had been preaching, he had not brought his will into subjection to God, and he says that this condition of living was inconsistent with his profession, for he says he saw clearly that if he "would become a consistent and useful christian" he must overcome it; and so we see that when at last he did make up his mind to be free in Christ, to be subject to the will of God in all things, and in a word, to be and do what the gospel requires of a man at the very start, when he made up his mind to thus do, we find that he received what he calls a second blessing, or sanctification, as being something above and beyond conversion, and yet it is plainly to be seen that if this thorough consecration had been made at conversion, as it ought to have been, he would have received the blessing of sanctification then.

And as is Mr. Earle's, so is the experience of all who have been sanctified subsequently to their conversion, they all confess that prior to this they had not been living up to the standard of Christianity as found in the New Testament, and being troubled by the knowledge of it, they at last made up their minds to do that which God demanded of them in the first place, and so received the blessing of peace and joy which God was only too anxious to give them at the very beginning of their christian experience. To my mind, the Bible recognizes nothing as Christianity that does not consist in a complete and entire consecration of all that a man is and has to God for time and eternity. If a man thus consecrates himself when he first feels drawn to Christ, he will need no second work to complete it, but if he do not do thus, if he keep back part of the price for a number of years, and then after a long continued sense of condemnation makes the consecration, then the blessing is received, but they are mistaken who regard it as being something of necessity belonging to a time subsequent to conversion.

Christian reader, examine yourself, whether you be thus consecrated, and if not make haste and present yourself a living sacrifice to God. Brethren in the ministry, urge upon men the necessity of their thus consecrating themselves to God when they first enter his service, and then there will be no need as there is now of considering the expediency of appointing meetings specially designed to lead christians to become sanctified.

SIT DOWN FOR JESUS.

The parting injunction of the lamented Tyng—"Stand up for Jesus"—uttered as he stood upon the margin of the dark river, is held as a sacred treasure in the christian household. It has been quoted times innumerable, upon occasions various—in the pulpit, in the prayer-circle, in the newspaper, almost everywhere. We love the brief and pungent words, freighted, as they are, with so much of meaning and of feeling. As they have proved a rallying-cry to the christian host in the past, so may they continue in the future.

But, conversely, may not a thought be submitted? Does not evil arise from too much standing—from "standing up" too long and too frequently? Not long since, in listening to a long-drawn-out pulpit effort, in which there was much "beating of the air" and of the Bible, but with no indications of milk for babes or of strong meat for men, and with little appearance of thought, save of failure, upon the part both of speaker and hearers, we secretely wished that some one would whisper in the ear of the good brother—"Sit down for Jesus." And we have no doubt that the Savior would have been more efficiently and acceptably served thus than by a further compliance with the Tyng injunction.

When in the prayer-meeting, Bro. B. "stands up," and for the space of thirty minutes bewails his "coldness, and indifference, and ingratitude, and want of faith, and doubts of acceptance, and the distance at which he lives from the Savior;" or, when Bro. B. repeats, for the hundredth time, the "exhortation and experience" that even the children have "gotten by heart;" or, when Bro. C. indulges in his accustomed criticisms of and animadversions upon the "brethren and sisters that don't come to the prayer-meeting," and himself gives expression to no fresh and sparkling gems of christian experience; or, when Sister C. "breaks forth into singing" the longest hymn that she can find, and in a tone unknown to all the world beside, the thought will come, and struggle for utterance, "Sit down for Jesus."

It is a marvelously difficult matter, at times, to determine precisely how long one should "stand up for Jesus;" but the rule may be accepted as of universal application, and the fact as of unquestioned force that, "when the hopper is empty, the grist is ground;" in which case it is always safe to "Sit down for Jesus."—H. A. G. in Standard.

LYING—MEDITATED, CALCULATED, PERPETUATED.

LIES SUCCEEDING LIES, WEEK IN, WEEK OUT.

"He that worketh deceit shall not dwell in my house; he that telleth lies shall not tarry in my sight."—Ps. 101: 7.

Conversation between Mr. Timewell and Mr. Servility.

T. "Allow me, Mr. Servility, to call your attention to the 'Serials,' or the continuation of fictions or falsehoods—stories and tales and stories continued week in, week out, in every paper, in every crevice, crack, and corner of the house. Stories fall from the pen faster than leaves of autumn, and of as many shades and colorings. Stories blow over here in whirlwinds from England. Stories are translated from the French, from the Danish, from the Swedish, from the German, from the Russian. 'There are serial stories for adults in 'The Atlantic,' in the 'Overland,' in the 'Galaxy,' in 'Harper's,' in 'Scribner's,' 'The N. Y. Daily Witness,' in Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, and Congregational Weeklies and Monthlies. There are serial stories for youthful pilgrims in 'Our Young Folks,' the 'Little Corporal,' the 'Riverside,' and the 'Youth's Companion,' and very soon we anticipate newspapers with serial stories for the nursery. We shall have illustrated magazines, the Cradle, the Rocking-Chair, the First-Rattle, and the First Tooth, with successive chapters of 'Goosy, Goosy Gander,' and 'Hickory, Dickory, Dock,' and 'Old Mother Hubbard,' extending through twelve, or twenty-four, or forty-eight numbers.

"You perceive, Mr. Servility, from the foregoing, that Satan and his active coadjutors are not content with telling a few lies now and then, or occasionally, but they look forward, calculate on weeks, months and years of lying; devise means, turn and twist every way, like a serpent in the grass, for so doing. And these periodicals alluded to are only a few of the lying ones, mixed publications, partly good, partly evil, partly Lord, partly devil, partly Christ, partly Belial—Satan's sugared pills—tools of the Old Serpent to carry on his work of soul-destruction."

S. "Your friend, Talmage, observes, if I mistake not, 'the more unscrupulous an editor is in conducting a periodical, the greater the likelihood of success.'"

T. "He remarked, furthermore, that 'one of the proprietors of a great paper in this country gave his advice to a young man then about to start a paper: 'If you want to succeed,' said he, 'make your paper trashy—intensely trashy—make it all trash.' Brilliant advice to a young man just entering business!"

S. "You opine, then, I take it, Mr. Timewell, that as a paper purifies itself, its circulation decreases, and sometimes when a paper becomes positively religious, it becomes bankrupt; am I right?"

T. "You hit the nail exactly for once, Mr. Servility. The Lord open your blind eyes still more. Individuals, male or female, nourished upon lies, tales of fiction, have very little relish for Bible truth, the sweets of redeeming sanctifiing grace, the bread of heaven. When Satan is in, God is out.

"Let these popular works of fiction that are flying over the face of the earth like leaves in autumn, conceiving mischief and bringing forth iniquity, hatching cocatrices eggs, weaving the spider's web, cease fellowshiping the unfruitful works of darkness, repudiate the devil and all his works, assume the prophetical and apostolical, take Jesus Christ and him crucified, come life, come death. What now? Any shaking among the dry bones? Where now the boastings of these panderers to a corrupt taste of their one hundred thousand subscribers? Not one in a thousand would hold on to these linsey-woolsey, sickly sentimentals. 'Wheresoever the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together.'

"You see from this how awfully, fearfully, extensively the devil has done his devilish work in vitiating the public taste in church and State, how and by whom. What say you, Mr. Servility, any of this witchcraft laid at your door? Ask, if you please, those religious novel-writers and puffers in pulpits and in chairs editorial whom you endorse, what fingers they have had in this pie; how much stock they have taken in this fire and brimstone business. How many once beloved, virtuously pure and lovely, they have led on to the burning pit instrumentality. Moreover, ask your special friend in the Plymouth pulpit, what he says to pushing these cars of Satan? Point him to what Solomon says—'Such is the way of an adulterous woman; she eateth, and wipeth her mouth, and saith, I have done no wickedness.'—Prov. 30: 20.

"All this and still more for the accursed lust of gain, the love of filthy lucre. Talmadge says, in the love and fear of his Master, 'Where is the church of God that she allows in her membership such gigantic abominations? Were the thirty pieces of silver that Judas received denounced as unfit, and shall the church of God have nothing to say about this price of blood? Is sin to be excused because it is as high as heaven, or deep as hell?'

'If he who steals a dollar from a money-drawer is a thief, then he who by dishonesty gets five hundred thousand dollars, is five hundred times more a thief. And so the last day will declare him.

'As the partridge sitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not, so he that getteth riches and not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days, and at his end shall be a fool.'—Isa. 17: 11.

'Because ye have said, we have made a covenant with death, and with hell, are we at agreement, when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, it shall not come unto us; for we have made lies our refuge, and under falsehood have we hid ourselves.'—Isa. 28: 15.

"No one is any better than the paper he reads or the company he keeps."

S. "What now? Shut down the gate, stop publishing because the general acceptation is only for the light and frivolous?"

T. "Stop sinning, stop telling lies, stop bowing the knee to Baal, stop poisoning body, soul and spirit!

"What do you tell the rum and tobacco trafficker, the man who sells the degrading, poisonous 'Indian weed,' deals out the intoxicating cup, liquid death, and distilled damnation? What you say to this faithful servant of the devil, 'stop your awful wickedness,' so we say to you, 'stop, stop!' 'Your hands are full of blood.' 'If ye refuse and rebel, ye shall be devoured with the sword, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.'—Isa. 1: 20.

'So speak ye, and so do, as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty. For he shall have judgment without mercy, that hath showed no mercy; and mercy rejoiceth against judgment.'—James 2: 12, 13.

'Resist the devil and he will flee from you.'

'Provide things honest in the sight of all men.'

'Abstain from all appearance of evil.'"

S. "Why expend all your ammunition on sacerdotals, those clad in priestly vestments? Why not draw your two-edged sword on outsiders, the openly obscene, libidinous, who concoct and send forth leprosy, the froth and scum of the pit?"

T. "Mr. Servility, my work is not now nor has it it been in time past outside the camp, but inside, in the 'Ring!'

'Thou blind Pharisee, cleanse first that which is within the cup and platter, that the outside of them may be clean also.'—Matt. 23: 26.

Purify a corrupt fountain, and the streams will be pure. My course has been hitherto and ever will be apostolical. I begin where God begins. 'Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light!' The purport of Paul's whole life, by pen and word of mouth, after the scales fell from his eyes, was to purge out the old leaven, that the entire lump or body might be unleavened, pure, 'without spot, and blameless.'

For this Christ died, shed his precious blood, that he might sanctify and cleanse the church, that he might present it to himself a glorious church, no having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish.'

'For what have I to do,' says Paul, 'to judge them also that are without? do not ye judge them that are within? But them that are without God judgeth. Therefore put away from among yourselves that wicked person.' 1 Cor. 5: 12, 13.

'Salt is good; but if the salt has lost its savor, wherewith shall it be seasoned? It is neither fit for the land, nor yet for the dunghill; but men cast it out. He that hath ears to hear, let him hear.'—Luke 14: 34, 35.

We rejoice to see political editors opening their eyes to this rascality in high places and in low. Very many of these speculators in froth and fiction and the souls of men, are not satisfied with destroying the very life of virtuous purity in adults, but are stretching every nerve to demoralize the little folks. Mr. Greeley, in the 'Tribune' of March 15th, speaks thus: 'While we are prosecuting the purveyors of obscene literature for adults, may it not be worth while to look at the character of some of the popular periodicals for children? In a recent number of 'Frank Leslie's Boy's and Girl's Weekly' we find a story of such a grossly improper tendency, that it is hard to understand how any repectable editor should have accepted it. . . . There is nothing to redeem this wretched story, for its style is unpardonable, and some of its suggestions are prurient.'" D. F. NEWTON.

"THE INTERMEDIATE STATE."

Under the above heading we find an article in Sept. "Guide to Holiness," from which we make the following extract:—

What of the resurrection, about which the Scriptures speak so much, and without which our faith is vain, and our preaching vain, and we are yet in our sins, and them also who have fallen asleep in Christ (or died) are perished, according to inspiration. 1 Cor. 14: 16, 17, 18? Again, in Heb. 11, in summing up the sufferings and martyrdoms of the ancient servants of God, the apostle says, they did and suffered these things that they might obtain a better resurrection. For we are most emphatically taught in the Bible, that there shall be a resurrection both of the just and unjust, and that there will be a manifest difference in the two characters. The prophet Daniel had this important truth revealed to him, that many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt. Dan. 12: 2.

When the Savior told Martha that her brother should rise again, "I know," said she, "that he will rise again in the resurrection at the last day." We see that the doctrine of the resurrection was taught in the Old Testament as well as in the New, and the saints of both looked to it as a subject of vital importance to them.

The Savior again says, "The hour is coming, in the which all that are in their graves shall hear His voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." John 5: 28, 29. If these had already come to life and damnation long before this (when they died), why speak of it being deferred until this period? The very idea that Daniel conveys, they awake to everlasting life and death, consequently they could not have been in possession of these before.

Again, the Savior says, "When ye make a dinner or a supper, call not your rich neighbors, but the poor, the maimed, the halt, the blind, they cannot recompense you; but you shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." Here the reward is deferred until the resurrection. Peter says, "The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished." 2 Pet. 2: 9. Again, Peter and Jude both speak of the angels that sinned and kept not their first estate, He hath reserved unto the judgment of the great day; and not till then, after the judgment is passed, will they be sentenced to go down into the lake of fire with all ungodly men, when the Savior comes the second time to judge the world, and say to the righteous, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." If they were already in this kingdom, why say enter now? Wherever Paradise or Abraham's bosom may be, or whatever may be the amount of bliss or comfort there, we don't understand this to be the final rest of God's people, the fulness of glory; this is only promised at the second coming of Christ.

AGENCY OF THE HOLY GHOST.

There is a mysterious power in the prayers of those who live very near to God. Neighbors and hearers, friends, and fellow-believers receive visitations of the Holy Ghost in answer to the believing requests of holy men. Hence some men have large success in saving souls that, humanly speaking, are but little likely to be successful.

The co-operating presence of the Holy Spirit explains the fact that Whitefield received one thousand letters within a week from persons awakened under his ministry. This explains why Wesley, notwithstanding the strongest opposition, was enabled to establish societies in every part of the land, and to number his converts by tens of thousands. This explains the success of Harris, Rowlands, and others in the principality of Wales, as the result of which the country is covered with living churches. This is why a thousand penitents were brought to the Savior in the Friendly Islands in one memorable day. And to refer to more recent cases, this is why an American evangelist, in a tour of nine months, gathered five thousand persons into Christian churches, each professing to have a work of grace in his heart. And the presence of the Spirit is the reason why the Vicar of Newport, in Wales, is enabled to report that a thousand conversions have taken place in his parish in the course of four months. . . .

"The more I converse with the believers in Cornwall," says John Wesley, in his journal, dated September, 1762, "the more I am convinced that they have sustained great loss for want of hearing the doctrine of Christian perfection clearly and strongly enforced. I see, wherever this is not done, the believers grow dead and cold. Nor can this be prevented but by keeping up in them an hourly expectation of being perfected in love. I say an hourly expectation; for to expect it at death or some time hence, is much the same as not expecting it at all."

In October, 1765, he writes—"Monday 30th and the two following days, I examined the society in Bristol, and was surprised to find fifty members fewer than I left in it the last of October. One reason is, Christian perfection has been little insisted on; and wherever this is not done, be the preachers ever so eloquent, there is little increase, either in the numbers, or the grace of the hearers." . . .

Throughout his life Mr. Wesley observed and declared that wherever Christian perfection was faithfully enforced, there revivals prevailed. . . .

We have to thank God that the doctrine of entire sanctification is no longer peculiar to Methodism. It has spread to other churches. "The time is now past for the doctrine of holiness to be characterized as the doctrine of a sect." . . .

Without the full consecration of our own being to God, we are not living up to the full measure of our duty and usefulness. Because this has been lacking, many a wife is now walking in the way to heaven without the company of her husband; many parents are mourning over children that might have been converted to God; many a christian has passed year after year in comparative uselessness, and never felt the joy of bringing a sinner to Christ; for lack of this many a leader has seen his class languish, the attendance has been irregular and the numbers have diminished; many a teacher has seen his scholars, one after another, leave the school, and go into the world undecided for God, and unfolded in the church. Because this doctrine has not been explicitly and faithfully enforced from the pulpit, some circuits have remained in a stationary condition, and the societies have resembled desert wastes rather than fruitful fields. For lack of this power, many crowded neighborhoods remain abandoned to sin and religious neglect; and oh! must it be written, for lack of this many souls are now beyond the reach of mercy, that might have been "plucked as brands from the burning."

Shall this state of things continue? We believe it will not. Thank God, there is a revival within the church. There is a sound of abundance of rain. There shall be a Pentecost all over the land. Christian reader, will you not for your own sake, for the world's sake, for the church's sake, and especially for Christ's sake, resolve, from this moment, to be entirely and eternally the Lord's?—Rev. T. Brackenbury.

WHAT SHALL WE DO?

It is often inquired by those who love the "blessed hope," and live isolated from any meetings where the coming of Christ is preached, What shall we do? Shall we stay away from meetings where error is preached, and from prayer-meetings, that are cold and dull? The Scriptures require us to let our light shine. If there is darkness around, then there is so much more need of light. By all means, we would say, go to the best meeting that can be found in the place. It must be a very strange meeting where one can neither get nor do any good. Do not go to look for bad things, and oppose them, but carry in a pleasant light, having a sweet, cheerful spirit, and a heart filled with the love of Jesus, and let it gush out in a few warm words of testimony in favor of the dear Savior, and they will desire you to come again. As you gain their sympathies and esteem, opportunities will offer to tell them something about the things we love so dearly. If you can do but little at first, it is better than to stay at home and do nothing, thus giving cause for prejudice to arise against you.

Jesus went among all classes and was condemned by the Pharisees because he did not separate himself from those who were impure. If there is a closed church anywhere, that is just the place for a real lover of Jesus to do good. While we separate ourselves from their manners and customs, we should not leave them in a perilous condition, without an effort to help them. The drowning man needs our first assistance, rather than the one who is out of the water, rejoicing in his safety. It may not be as pleasant and agreeable to plunge into the cold water after the perishing, as to accompany the rescued to a warm room among dear friends, sheltered from the perils of the storm; but we think Jesus would be better pleased to see us at work in every possible way to save the perishing.

If we wish to destroy our influence for good, then we might stand aloof from all who do not think as we do, and refuse all support to such as do not occupy our stand-point. We think such a course would please Satan rather than Jesus. The truth is now blazing forth so brilliantly, that the great deceiver is doing all in his power to persuade those who see the light to pen themselves up in a sectarian inclosure, lest they become contaminated by mingling with "outsiders." Satan comes in the form of an angel of light in this snare, or he could not succeed. He reasons very shrewdly. He says, If you go to meetings where error is taught and supported, you give it your countenance, unless you get up and expose it. He knows if we do the latter, we should only stir up prejudice against the truth, and those who support it, instead of leading the people to embrace it. He is very willing we should go to other meetings if we will only give hot battle to those who differ from us; but if we cannot do that, he says stay away. In either case, he destroys a large amount of our influence for good. Let us not please Satan by staying away, or by going to find fault, or to commence a battle on disputed points about which good men may honestly differ; but rather go in love, with hearts brimful of kindness, ready to help every body, and hinder none. Of course some may at first present a cold shoulder; but let us present a warm one in return, and thus win their esteem. Our Master's rule is, "good for evil." This is the way he has been dealing with us all our days; let us do the same to others. If we manifest the sweet spirit of Jesus, we may be sure of leaving a hallowed influence that will produce happy results. Try it. It is the only sure way to succeed in benefitting others, and to preserve our own peace. We believe it will please Jesus to have us take this course. The time has come when, by a judicious course, a large number from the various churches, who have stood aloof from us, will be led to unite with us in looking for the coming of Christ. Let us act wisely, in gentleness, meekness, kindness, patience, and forbearance, that we may by all means persuade many to be ready and waiting for the glorious event.

THE HORSE DISEASE.—The horse disease is spreading in all directions, and it said something similar has commenced among the swine. Business is seriously affected by the sickness of the horses. But few, probably, were aware how dependent mankind have been upon the services of the noble horse. These faithful animals have been sorely abused for the last few years by covetous men, who made them draw immense loads, and then whipped and pounded them when their strength failed. Their abuse has been so outlandish that humane societies have been formed to prevent such abominable cruelty. At present, the poor dumb animals are receiving kind treatment and sympathy from many, yet there are a large number who compel them to work during their sickness and weakness; as a result, many are dying.

It is evident that the disease has taken strong hold of them, and that it will take some time for their recovery. They are dying more and more every day, especially those which are made to work hard. They look very sorrowful, especially when made to work. What is more cruel than to compel a sick animal to labor till they drop down dead in the street? but this is being done daily by hard-hearted men. What should we think of a nation that treated slaves as badly? We learn the humane Mr. Bergh, in New York, who has been doing so much for the welfare of dumb animals, the past few years, has stopped several horse-cars in New York city, because they were being drawn by sick, weak horses. He deserves much praise for his humanity. If, by this general sickness among horses, men can be taught to treat them in a proper manner, it will prove to be a great blessing. The cause and object of this strange disease is still an unsolved problem. The whole affair is indeed mysterious. We are still watching with much interest for further developments.

A VALUABLE WORK.

Dr. Leonard Tafel, New York, Dr. Rudolph Tafel, London, and Rev. L. H. Tafel, Philadelphia, have commenced an Interlinear Translation of the Old and New Testaments. It is just what is needed by lovers of the Sacred Scriptures. The Tafels are men competent for the arduous task they have undertaken. The first number includes the first thirty-two chapters of Genesis, containing 160 pp., besides 26 pp. of notes, which give rules for pronouncing Hebrew words, and other valuable information. Each line of Hebrew has a word-for-word translation above it, with the pronunciation of the words in English letters in a line underneath. It is proposed that this Interlinear Translation shall enable any one, who is familiar with the English grammar, to analyze every sentence of the Hebrew. Every preacher, and every Bible student, should have a copy.

The subscriber's price for each number of the Old Testament translation is $2; and for each part of the New, $1.50. The parts of the Old and New Testaments will be published alternately, once in about three months. Subscriptions will be received for the Old and New Testaments separately, if preferred. To non-subscribers, the price of single parts of the Old Testament is $3, and of the New $2. Those who wish to subscribe in the United States can address Rev. L. H. Tafel, 635 Arch Street, Philadelphia; in England, Rev. D. L. Tafel, 14 Rothbury Villas, Stroud Green Lane, N. London. We are delighted with the first number of the Interlinear Translation, and wish a copy of it could be in the hands of all who love the Bible and its author.

A SHOT FROM THE ENEMY.—Once in a while the enemy fires a gun, loaded so heavily that it endangers the lives of those who handle it. Here is a sample. It was written on a copy of the Crisis returned to the office, Oct. 23d, 1872:—

"Elder Grant, you are a d——d old scoundrel, or you would stop editing this d——d foolish paper. Go hang yourself, or jump overboard, and no longer live by humbugging the simple and the poor."

TRANSFER OF THE POPE TO JERUSALEM.

The Pope's present position at Rome is one of much unrest. He is at a loss to know what to do next. Some of his friends advise one thing, some another. It is thought he is looking towards Jerusalem for a quiet home. In 1856, Abbe Michon published a book entitled, "The Papacy at Jerusalem," in which he says:—

"An old idea has prevailed in West Europe since the invasion of Palestine by the Moslems, viz.—that of conquering Jerusalem and putting Christians in possession of the holy places. So irresistible did this thought become in the eleventh century that it drew formidable armies to the east, and Europe gave itself neither peace nor truce till it had founded the Frank (French) kingdom of Jerusalem.

We are asked, on the supposition of grave events happening to make the existence of the papacy as a temporal power impossible, what would be the result of restoring it in the east as center and director of the religious movement of the world.

To render the residence of the pope out of Italy perfectly consistent with his independence and greatness, the apostolic see should be translated into a neutral city, free from all the political complications of the west; where, after its long sorrows, the papacy may commence a new era of fruitful apostleship.

Now, out of Europe, no other city would be more suitable for the apostolic see than the holy city Jerusalem.

During the year 1855, while the war in the east was raging, and there were fears of a complication of affairs in Europe, this proposal was made to the papal government. Entire liberty of action was guaranteed to the sovereign pontiff at Jerusalem; the means of sustaining his high dignity in an honorable manner were promised him; a railroad from Jerusalem to Jaffa would have rendered the communication of the papacy with Europe as rapid as from Rome itself.

Do we at last understand that the ideal of greatness would be that of the pope released from his earthly sovereignty and reassuming the divine sovereignty of Christ in Jerusalem, the very cradle of Christianity?

It is easy to perceive what facilities the presence of the sovereign pontiff in the east would afford to the grand scheme for the union of the churches (viz., the eastern Greek and western Roman Catholic churches.)

There is in the present age, in the eyes of thoughtful and impartial men, no other possible solution of the question of the schism of the eastern Greek from the western papal church than this—

1. The abandonment of all dogmatic polemics with the eastern church as only irritative and utterly useless.

2. An agreement with them as to the necessity of an union of the two churches, carefully preserving to the eastern their prized ceremonials.

3. The solemn proclamation by official acts of this union, on the basis of the identity of doctrines, and of the indisputable historical fact that the last decree of union proclaimed at the council of Florence in A. D. 1436, has never been canonically revoked.

4. The convocation, with the help of the patriarch, archbishops, and bishops of the churches of the east and west so united, of an œcumenical council to reform the abuses which have crept in during the course of ages, and to bring the discipline of the church, both eastern and western, into harmony with the instincts and necessities of modern society; to do which has in all ages been the very spirit of the church.

We have here to submit some important considerations on the results of the re-union of the eastern Greek churches with the church of Rome. May not one suppose that this grand fact would have its influence on the sects of western Europe which call themselves Christians, but are completely separated from the units of the church, and reject the papacy, is its center, when they feel themselves thoroughly isolated?"

DEMONS.

Various views have been entertained by different classes of people, in different ages of the world, concerning demons [the "knowing ones"], often called "the gods", as—"I saw gods ascending out of the earth." 1 Sam. 28: 13. The great question is not concerning their existence, but concerning their origin.

1. The ancient Romans claimed that the souls of soldiers who fell upon the battle field "become good demons and propitious heroes;" while in the case of all who pass out of life by ordinary death, "their souls are condemned to the grave, together with their bodies." (Josephus' Wars, book 6, chap. 1, sec. 5.) This left no material to manufacture bad demons out of, as all killed in battle had their souls transformed into "good demons," while all not thus killed had their "souls condemned to the grave."

2. The Pharisees, in Josephus' time, had imbibed the superstitious idea that the root of a certain herb was "valuable on account of one virtue it had, that if it be brought to sick persons, it quickly drives away those called demons, which are no other than the spirits of the wicked, that enter into men that are alive, and kill them, unless they can obtain some help against them." Josephus' Wars, book 7, chap. 6, sec. 3. Here the bad souls were thought to turn into demons.

3. Some theologians now set up the claim that as the term devil is often translated from daimonion (demon), as well as from diabolos, in the New Testament, that the demons which Christ cast out were simply disembodied souls of wicked men; that diabolos means the devil proper, and demons are only disembodied men. With reference to this claim, we need only say, (1) we read concerning "the devil (diabolos) and his angels" (Matt. 25: 41), a plurality of this order of beings; and (2) diabolos preceded the death of man, and consequently cannot be the spirit of a dead man, from the fact that "the devil (diabolos) sinneth from the beginning" (1 John 3: 8), being "a liar and the father of it" (John 8: 44) or the first liar; and (3) while it is said that Christ cast out devils (demons), it is also affirmed that he "went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil" (diabolos). So we here learn that it is just as true that Jesus cast out diabolos, as that he cast out a demon, these two names being interchangeable terms, both being applied to the same thing; or at most, demons can only indicate a class of which diabolos is the chief. These gods, or fallen angels, are brought to view as being in existence before death entered the world, having past their trial now, knowing "good and evil"—a part retaining their standing, while others "kept not their first estate"—one class continuing to be good angels, and the other class being recognized as "evil angels," or demons, otherwise called devils.

4. At Athens, it was said of Paul—"He seemeth to be a setter forth of strange gods (demons), because he preached unto them Jesus, and the resurrection." Acts 17: 18. They could not have understood him to have preached Jesus as a disembodied soul, but as a tangible being, who had been dead, and been raised to life; so they classed him among the demons, or knowing ones, of the good order.

THAT STALE ARGUMENT.

The old assertion that the entire world would not be large enough as a home for all the saints in their resurrected state, is assuming new phases, and being palmed off as a valid argument against the truth so clearly set forth in the Book of God. A public speaker recently affirmed that the entire earth had been dug over seventeen times to bury the dead. Such wild statements are calculated to prejudice many against the truth who will not take the pains to make an estimate for themselves. As men are now supposed to die at the rate of thirty millions per year, by allowing that they have died at the same rate, and will continue to die at the same rate down to the close of the 6000 years, then adding in the living inhabitants, now estimated at near twelve hundred millions, we get the sum total of the human family that have lived and died, or will live to the close of the 6000 years. And all these could find standing room in the State of New York, as any one can see by reducing its area to feet, and comparing figures. In the light of these facts, which are approximately right, what becomes of the idea that it would require seventeen worlds like this to bury the whole human family on, to save burying seventeen times in the same grave?

"SACRIFICES OF THE DEAD."

In enumerating the various misdemeanors of Israel, the Psalmist tells us that—"They joined themselves unto Baal-peor, and ate the sacrifices of the dead." Ps. 106: 28. But what is here meant by "the sacrifices of the dead"? Nothing more nor less that the sacrifices made to idols, or gods destitute of life, called "dead" in contradistinction to the "living God"; which sacrifices Israel ate when "they joined themselves unto Baal-peor," as we read in Num. 25: 2, 3—"And they called the people unto the sacrifices of their gods; and the people did eat, and bowed down to their gods. And Israel joined himself unto Baal-peor." Thus the "sacrifices of the dead," here mentioned, relate not to offering sacrifices to dead men, or departed ghosts, but to lifeless idols. Elsewhere we learn that other heathen nations sacrificed children to devils, and led Israel to do the same. Ps. 106: 37. But these sacrifices of "their sons and daughters to devils" were not eaten like the "sacrifices of the dead," or lifeless gods, called idols; besides, devils are not dead, nor ghosts of the dead.

THEOLOGICAL SANCTIFICATION.

It is right to be sanctified through the truth—thus making the truth the channel of sanctification; but it is not right to repudiate "the sanctification of the Spirit" (2 Thess. 2: 13) or discard the revealed plan of "being sanctified by the Holy Ghost" (Rom. 15: 16), which recognizes the Holy Spirit as the agent. While a santification which leaves out the truth of God is deficient, on the other hand, a sanctification that includes the truth, and leaves out the Spirit, is worthless. A carnal man can believe the truth, and still retain his carnality, possessing only theological sanctification. To be sanctified through the theology of truth merely, is one thing; but to be sanctified through obedience of the truth is quite another thing, and involves the reception of the sanctifying Spirit; for the express command of the truth is—"Be ye filled with the Spirit;" and we cannot be sanctified through the truth short of a compliance with this feature of truth, this being a part of the word of truth through which we are sanctified.

THE "NO SIR-EE" ARGUMENT.

Not long since, one of my tracts fell into the hands of a conceited church official, who could not have paused long enough to have read more than the title page, nor even that correctly, when he set about the work of refuting it. But how, think you, did he do it? Well, it was neither a lengthy nor a costly process; but it was doubtless deemed effective by its inventor: and, as I am not sure that he has taken out a patent on it, I venture an infringement by telling the wonderful modus operandi of argumentation. It was simply this: to send the tract to me by mail (post paid), with this written on the margin:—"Read this—Annihilation is not true—No sir-ee"; giving also the author's name, which we withhold, as he claims to be a "superintendent." But I was a little amused to find that the tract was upon another theme entire, showing that it had not been read before being subjected to the "No sir-ee" argument. That postage might have been saved, and less folly exhibited, by first reading the tract, and it might have taken the "No sir-ee" all out.

HOW THE TRUTH WORKS.

The truth, when received into an honest heart, destroys the relish for error. An isolated brother living in Georgia, thus writes me:—"It has become quite unpleasant for me to hear ministers always preaching reward at death, and the horrors of hell for an immortal soul."

Yes, the result is everywhere alike; error becomes unpleasant in proportion to the amount of truth received. We should have a zeal for knowledge. But I am shocked when I find those who profess to see the light of truth still sitting contented under the shower of error, and perhaps still contributing to its spread, while truth needs financial wings to fly abroad. Can it be that such have the love of the truth in their hearts? Are their intellects enlightened, while their affections are not enlisted for God? Are they moved by human policy more than by a sense of duty, which they owe to the God of truth? Is it right to believe truth and support error?

REPORT.

A. A. MISSIONARY SOCIETY, BOSTON, MASS.:—Dear Brn.:—My second quarterly report was due some twenty days ago. I have no excuses for this apparent neglect, save one. Being called away from home to labor for the salvation of sinners in an entirely new field, is the only plea I have to offer. There are nine new openings for me, and I am trying to fill them. I am sorry to say that at least half of my time, since my last report, has been spent on the bed of affliction; my complaint being inflammation of the kidneys. But thank God for his mercies, I am in the field again, and have been the last six weeks, in which time I have traveled about three hundred miles [mostly on horse-back], and have preached forty-five discourses in twenty different places. There are nine new ones yet to fill. I have sold about $10 worth of books, of which sum there is about $3.75 due. I have given away about $4 worth, mostly to widows and one-armed men. The balance is still on hand. I should have sold many more of your books, but Bro. C. Green of Phila., Pa., sent me some for distribution, somewhat prevented the sale of yours. Thank God, the truth is spreading very fast.

One thing, however, must be noticed. During my sickness the enemy was busily engaged; and as they could say nothing else, the cry "Radical" has been sounded out, and some say that I am employed by northern radicals to canvass, under a religious cloak, to secure the election of U. S. Grant, and that I "will not preach after the election." This, I find, has acted like fuel to the fire, and many are brought to a stand. Notwithstanding all this, the word of God is not bound, and it is telling fearfully upon the enemy's ranks. I have organized one church in a Baptist house, and have received two more calls from Baptists to preach for them, which I have accepted. Besides this, there are a vast number of outsiders who believe and tremble; and when we establish permanently, many will openly profess. As I have said before, the work here is not so much to build up, as to break down prejudice; and the enemy knows that if he can keep people's eyes blinded by prejudice, that they will not receive the gospel as it is in Christ Jesus. On this one point they have concentrated all their strength, and every false charge that they can invent is hurled against us without mercy. But having God with us, who can be against us? for we "have not received the spirit of bondage again to fear; but" we "have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father."

I returned home yesterday, for a few days' rest and refreshment. I am to start again on the 25th inst., and pray God to bless the effort. As the time is short, and the signs indicate the soon coming Lord in his kingdom to destroy all the proud and wicked, who can hold his peace? who can refrain from weeping over lost sinners? who can withhold the offers of salvation, and refuse to declare the truth, though men may scoff and mock? I feel that I ought to obey God rather than man. When He comes in his kingdom, O may I be found ready, is the prayer of your humble servant,

THOMAS J. GREEN.

P. S.—There are about one hundred and fifty members, including the Jacksonville church. They are making an effort to organize a society here to aid in the mission. God grant them success. T. J. G.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, Aug. 22d, 1872, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

LETTER FROM P. G. BOWMAN.

BRO. GRANT:—I regard it a great privilege to have become acquainted (while at the North) with so many of the Advent brethren and sisters. While at Newark, N. J., I visited Sister Pease. She is an aged saint, waiting every hour for the consolation of Israel to appear. She has oil in her vessel with her lamp, trimmed and burning. I stopped with Bro. Flavel and his kind family. I became acquainted with a number of other brethren, from all of whom I received nothing but the utmost kindness. At Lansingburg, N. Y., I was sick a week at Bro. Brooks.' I must remember him and his family always with grateful feelings for their kindness to the wandering stranger. The Lord bless them for this and the world to come.

At Saratoga Springs I stayed several days with Bro. and Sr. Durand. Their hospitality and kindness in feeding me and taking me in their carriage to the different springs, and looking about the city, caused me to regain my health and strength very rapidly. May Jesus bless them and their two sons, and bring them all together into his speedy coming kingdom. At Sandy Hill I stayed with Bro. Sibley, the Advent minister of that place. He and his christian wife were passing through a great bereavement, caused by the death of an interesting little son. O when shall death die and be no more? Surely his horrid reign of six thousand years is now nearly over. O Jesus, come and put an end to these sighs and pains and groans and death, and set up thy everlasting kingdom. Then those who have loved shall put on immortality and eternal life, and meet amid the splendors and glories of the eternal age, to part no more. I became acquainted at this place with the Bros. Waite, Holland, and others, all of whom seem to be praying for the Just One to come. May the Lord prosper them in all things according to his will.

At Castleton, Vt., I stopped with Bro. and Sr. Mathewson. Bro. M. has had charge of the Advent church in Castleton for eight or nine years. They have no children, but "better than daughters or than sons, temples divine of living stones, for theirs they humbly claim." Their praise is in all the churches. Under their roof I felt I had a home and true friends. Their hospitality, piety and intelligence got deeper and deeper into my heart every day I remained with them. Peace be with them, and may we all soon meet the other side of the river, in the fair fields of Eden. Amen. Bro. Sherman, of this place, is president of a Bank, and a man of wealth. He owns a marble quarry, to which he carried me in his buggy, where I beheld a number of hands getting out the blocks and slabs, one hundred feet, I suppose, beneath the surface of the ground, some of which were as white as the spotless snow. With all his wealth, Bro. S. is one of the few rich men whose affections are set on the true riches to be revealed at the coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ. His heart has been stricken through, by the death of a lovely and pious wife. Bro. Mathewson has a noble band of men and women in his charge. It is hard to tell whether he loves them, or they him, the most. God bless them all and keep them unto eternal life.

Rutland is a large and flourishing place. I spent but one night there, and stayed with Bro. Hoyt, the pastor. They have a good church here, and a number of members. I have no doubt they will go on prospering. The Lord speed them, and increase them in numbers and piety. At Keene I spent two days and nights with Dr. Darling. They have a little flock here, who need the watch-care of a faithful shepherd. I found at Dr. D.'s every thing a way-worn pilgrim could need or desire. At Vernon, stayed with Bro. Cook, the pastor—a good and true man. He has a country church and congregation; all excellent material. We had an old-fashioned meeting the night I preached for them. I should like to try it again. At South Vernon I stopped with a good Bro., whose name I have forgotten; the Lord knoweth. Preached in a large hall in a new hotel. All said it was a success. May the good Lord bless the proprietor, who showed us no little kindness.

Athol is the place where Bro. Hemenway resides, and has charge of a goodly number of good people. Bro. H. knows how to preach, and has just such a wife as every preacher ought to have. She is a help-meet in the true sense of the term. Here I became acquainted with Dr. Broons, a native German, a good and sensible man. He made me a present of a very fine young mare, Nellie Gray, which I brought upwards of a thousand miles. She is looking very much improved, and is universally admired for her beauty and qualities. She is doing her duty in carrying the "New England gospel" over this section. I hope she may live to do much service, and that God will bless the gospel. Dr. B. will accept my thanks again for his benefaction. I hope to hear that the saints at Athol, under Bro. Hemenway's labors, are increasing in holiness of heart and life, more and more, unto the perfect day.

At Worcester, I spent several days and nights in the delightful family of Dr. Walker, whose kindness to me will cause me to call on them again, if ever I visit that place. Worcester, to my mind, is the most delightful city I visited in New England; and there is no place I would sooner accept a call, as a minister; and I am surprised they have no stated preacher with them. They have a good church, and to all appearance a goodly number of pious and intelligent members. I pray they may go on contending earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints.

From this place I made my way to the National Campmeeting, at Springfield, where I became acquainted with many of the leading ministers of the Advent body. They all seem to be a godly, devoted set of men, and fully impressed with a conviction that God in his providence has raised them up to declare his last dispensational truths to a slumbering church, and an ungodly world; that is, the speedy coming of our Lord Jesus Christ to raise the dead, judge the world in righteousness, destroy the devil and all wicked beings and principles, rescind the original curse pronounced upon the earth, and make new heavens and a new earth, where Jesus will reign forever at the head of his redeemed and immortal church. O blessed consummation! Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly. I also attended the Alton Bay Campmeeting.

Both of these meetings were attended with unusual power from on high, and I trust a holy God has made them instrumental in giving a fresh impulse to these truths, which are unpopular among the orthodox. I spent some time in Boston with Bro. G. T. Adams and his kind and interesting family. They have laid me under many and lasting obligations for their constant kindness to me while I was with them.

While in Boston, I spent a day with Bro. Hamblin's family, at Hyde Park. He lives in a romantic and lovely place; is a great horticulturalist, and had the most luscious grapes and pears I ever tasted. He lives on the fat of the land. I also visited Brn. Couch and Boutell at their delightful homes. I cannot tell them how much I love them. They projected a plan with Bro. Adams, which was entirely successful, to purchase a nice little carriage and harness for me and my wife, both of which have come safely to hand. The Lord reward all who were interested in it a hundred fold. I visited others, whose names I have forgotten, and everywhere and always I received the same unmerited urbanity and kindness.

And now, in closing these stray thoughts, I would just say, nothing impressed me more favorably, in mixing among the Advent brethren, than their attention to and mode of conducting family worship. As a general rule, the head of the family reads a portion of Scripture, and then leads in prayer. When he closes, then the wife prays and the children, one after the other, in an audible and impressive manner, closing with the youngest child, however tender in years. I always felt a heavenly influence in the house on these blessed occasions. May they be increasingly kept up until Jesus comes, so that whole families may go up together to meet him in the air.

Farewell, my dear brethren and sisters in the Lord. A thousand thanks to you all for your kindness to me, my family, and the mission I am endeavoring to serve. Pray for us all and always. PEYTON G. BOWMAN.

NEWS FROM ENGLAND.

(From our English Correspondent.)

I told you in my last that the time had arrived for labor in England, having for its aim the spread of unadulterated truth and righteousness, and that a hall had been hired in Weymouth, for three months, for preaching. Bro. Brown, late of New Bedford, Mass., was invited to come and help us. He sent us a letter promising to come on in time for our opening services. Handbills were distributed announcing sermons at the Belle Vue Assembly Rooms on Sunday and Wednesday.

The first Sunday was spent in the main in assuring the people that our only object was their good and salvation. They seem to be afraid of contamination. Prejudice runs high. In the afternoon Bro. B. preached from Rom. 1: 16—"I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." The audience counted about twenty-two, all told. But the Lord inspired the heart of our brother with the good word of life, and a beneficial impression was made on the company present. In the evening it increased to about sixty persons, who listened with attention to your correspondent on the love of God. As we walked home, we felt the comfort of the Comforter, and spoke encouraging words to each other on the prospect of success that lay before us. We expect to realize a great and blessed ingathering to Jesus in this neighborhood. The field is white unto the harvest. And as the Spirit prompts, leads, or drives, we hope to push out into the country, and establish circuits for the proclamation of the kingdom of God. For the success of the "gospel of our salvation" in turning many from darkness to light, and from sin to the obedience of faith, we ask the long-continued remembrance of the saints, our brethren and sisters, at the throne of prayer. Our central residence for the time being is at 26 St. Thomas Street, Weymouth, Dorset, England; to which address we should be glad to receive all letters of counsel, sympathy, exhortation, etc., that brethren may feel in their hearts to write.

A word on the state of the affairs here with respect to the truth will be pertinent. It is really missionary; as much a missionary work as that of the South, or California. Those who have "gladly received" "the words of this life," are mostly poor, few, and scattered. Doubtless, however, many have secretly embraced the truth, but they lack moral courage to confess it. Those who have turned from fables are willing to make all the sacrifice they possibly can, which is necessarily small, as wages are very inconsiderable in England, enabling a working man to do little more than provide for his family the barest necessaries of life. After all their efforts, in most places they cannot raise enough to pay for the hire of a hall—and people object to cottage meetings—and we ourselves have to help in the expenses. Thus, you see, they are not strong enough in pecuniary matters to care for the support of the laborer, and whoever works here must look to God for help from without. The apostolic precedent of working with one's own hands is an impossibility here, unless one gives up ministering the word, as no one will hire for a few days. But doing the work of our Lord we have little fear, and we have confidently rejoiced together in the truth—"The Lord will provide." Ah, yes!

"In some way or other the Lord will provide,
It may not be my way,
It may not be thy way,
And yet in his own way,
The Lord will provide."

Thus, without asking for you, beloved, to raise a fund for our sustenance, and send us out, we have followed the leadings of "that Spirit that leads none astray," knowing Him who has said—"I will never leave thee; I will never forsake thee." And we know he will incline the hearts of his people who are in fellowship with us in righteousness and truth to "maintain good works for necessary uses."

OLD CATHOLICISM.

Though the congress of the "Old Catholic" party took place some two or three weeks ago at Cologne, yet the religious papers of this country are still dishing up to its readers events and interesting details of the meeting. The Christian World gives us a description of the principal persons present, as follows:—

"Professor Friedrichs is thirty-five years of age, tall, and slightly made, with a broad German brow, and sways his audiences by his heart utterances. Professor Reinkens, of Breslau, is remarkable for his geniality and suavity of demeanor and address. Schulte is quite Bismarckian in appearance and in action, and a most logical speaker. Professor Maasen and Professor Huber are both remarkable men, and the latter has taken a prominent part in the attempt at Church unity. Another Professor, Michelis, and also an excommunicated priest, stands six feet and a quarter high, is powerfully built, and is a passionate and powerful speaker. The speakers, for the most part, charged the Jesuits with abusing the confessional for political purposes. Reinkens, when addressing the Congress on the subject of 'Women in the Confessional,' said—'There are thousands of examples of upright women whose hearts revolted when confessing to the priest standing there in the place of God, and who have lost self-control at the insinuations of the father confessor; and the end has been they have obeyed him; and the result was the loss of household peace and moral destruction."

The Church Times reports the speeches for its readers, and I have cut out a few of the most striking portions for your readers. They are as follows:—

Professor Huber—"The plain meaning of Old Catholicism was that no man should be bound to submit to the decisions of Rome, whether he belonged to the educated circles or to the lower classes; whether to the cities or to the country. Distrust and darkling suspicion of Rome was spreading fast in the popular mind, and the hierarchy dreaded this, and feared it would shake to the ground the whole fabric of fraud crowned with this newest dogma. But the movement was positive as well as negative. Religious questions were now uppermost in men's minds, and unlike the preceding period, in which Nihilism and superstition shared all the people's very being between them, now all the deepest thinkers of the German nation busied themselves with theology, especially for two years past, more than ever since the Reformation, and would find a bond of union in Old Catholicism. . . .

Only half the work was done, till they had delivered the clergy from Jesuit morals and doctrine, and the Bishops from their blind obedience to Rome and to Ultramontane behests. Their movement was charged with half-measures, especially by Freethinkers [this has special reference to Froschammer, who has attacked Old Catholicism on this ground even in England in the Contemporary Review.] But what is a half-measure? To be on the road, but not yet at the goal; and that was the true description of every movement, every development. But their chief aim was no half-measure. They wanted the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. But to separate what is eternal, permanent, and essential in Christianity from what is accidental and human was a hard task, and would need all the earnestness, learning, and thoroughness of Germans to do it well. . . . .

The true intent of the struggle was to expose the dogma of Infallibility, the outcome of ecclesiastical forgeries spread over more than a thousand years, the apogee of lying hierarchy, which, instead of fulfilling its true vocation in the church, was an intolerable burden on the necks of believers. The church sorely needed reform. Compare the words of Christ with the Roman church of to-day. Christ had said, 'The words I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life.' In the Roman church there was a mechanism instead of spirit, and despotism over a corpse, and death instead of life. Christ had further said, 'The truth shall make you free.' The Roman church had no freedom, and therefore no truth. It was a time of great events, and no one dare stand neuter in such a fight for the highest blessings of man, but must strive for all that he believes to be true."

Prof. Knoodt—"He desired to remark that all who submitted themselves to the Vatican decrees of July, 1870, were mere Jesuits, and ought to be decorated with the Order of Stupids. . . . . The Holy Spirit was no pillow for the lazy. In the Arabic gospel there was a saying of Christ, not recorded in our Gospels, to this effect—'I am mighty enough to heal the sick, and to raise the dead; but I am not mighty enough to cure—a fool.' What had come of the Vatican Council? Nothing but obstacles put in the way of a thorough sifting of the subject, because it was well known that the new teaching would never stand the aqua-fortis of criticism. . . .

So far as the German bishops had gone into the question, they had declared that there was no power to define Infallibility. No doubt they had since submitted, but none of them had retracted his original ground of opposition, but had merely held his peace. However, their submission tallied with the words of Scripture—'The salt hath lost its savor and shall be trodden under foot.' And after all, the Council had not proclaimed Infallibility; it was the Pope who had done it, and upon this declaration by the Pope the Council had given in its entirely superfluous adhesion. He had declared the dogma of himself without the consent of the church. The only result is to declare that the Pope alone enjoys the aid of the Holy Spirit. He had adopted the argument in a circle—'I am infallible because I say that I am so.' . . .

God would not make one man infallible, because that would destroy his church. That church was the fellowship of all believers, all members of Christ's body; and if one person were infallible, all the others would be his slaves, and the church would no longer be a living organism, but a dead mechanism. What would become of human freedom, of the development of the spirit and will, if nothing were needful and possible save to look to and obey one infallible man? In opposition to revelation, to reason, and to the whole intellectual development of mankind, the Pope had been declared infallible. So reigns

Pius Nonus,
Ecclesiæ Onus.

What for? To Jesuitize the whole church. The credit of having framed this dogma rested with the Jesuits. A soldier had founded their order, and strong military subordination was its consequent rule. Every single Jesuit obeyed his General as the voice of God and eternal truth; and the General, with all the Jesuits, served the Pope as their lord and—slave. They had ruled for three hundred years, and wherever they were the empire went to ruin, and the princes became mere goody and bigoted old women. The Jesuits did nothing for theological science, but stagnated in the Thomist divinity. . . . .

Ultramontanes must hold with mere blind credulity no independent thought, and be 'a staff within an old man's hand.' Now, I ask, what is the task of a christian? Is it that we are to be of full age, free, independent? or that we are to be babies in the leading-strings of our Jesuit directors? Shall we bury our talent, wrap it up in a dead man's shroud, leave it unused? or shall not that little be taken from him who uses it not? A believer who trusts in God with child-like lowliness; who holds to Christ as his Savior with closest love; who embraces all men in purest affection, mitigating need itself, furthering family, church, and national life, beautifying the face of the earth, helping the educational development of mankind, and, above all, being a christian bearing rule over himself; is it this we are to be? or do we prefer the other picture—the church sheep, leaving thought to others, swinging rosaries, joining Confraternities, using Ignatius-water, censing and enriching the Jesuits, sunk as low in vulgarity and fanaticism as man can sink,—is that a christian? Can such a man look for heaven? or what kind of heaven would it be with such companionship?"

But I will not proceed further. These selections and cuttings will suffice to show you the spirit of the men of the "Old Catholic" persuasion. Ultramontanes may laugh at them; Jesuits may accuse them of Jansenism; and the world may say "failure," as they read of the doings of the Congress; but no thoughtful man can look such speeches squarely in the face, and remember that the men who made them were and are still Catholics, without feeling they have made a step forward in the right way, and praying God to give them the truth they so earnestly crave of him.

THE POPE.

The infallible Pope, "His Holiness," has just got over his fit of anger. For two years he has obstinately and spitefully remained in the Vatican. It is certain he did not like to be despoiled of his city, and he has disdained to walk out for the long period of twenty-four months. But finding that nobody seemed hurt at his voluntary confinement, and from withdrawal of his presence—what a curse to any people!—as the verse reads, "nobody seemed any the worse," he has decided to walk out in the gardens once more. So, a telegram from Rome says, the Pope, on Sunday, for the first time, left the Vatican, going for a walk in the gardens, and having a breath of fresh air.

We have no objection to his having a breath of "fresh air," but we do not like to see an infallible man suffering from such passions as we are prone to. He may just as well have been good-tempered over the loss of his civil power in Rome; because that was, with still greater loss to come, his fore-written doom.

CHRISTIANITY, OR HEATHENISM?

This week we have to note a fact in history, which we would recommend to the deliberation of those who are looking for the conversion of the whole human family prior to the second coming of Jesus. It is, that Christendom is being heathenized. For many years the so-called church,—alas! more dead than alive,—has been employing a systematic plan of sending the gospel to the heathen. We have heard from mission fields; letters of missionaries have been printed; missionary meetings have been held; glowing accounts of the "doings" have been flared before our eyes; and promise that the world should soon be laid as a trophy at the Redeemer's feet. We have nothing to say against the proclamation of the gospel, if it be only the gospel. So far from this, we have every word of encouragement that comes from within, and a little money withal—all we can afford—for the help of missionary labor; but when men tell us they are going to obtain the conquest of the world for Christ, we smile and think of the prophecies that tell us by their predictions that the scheme is utopian and unreliable. "The world is growing better every day," say such vain hopes. But facts speak louder than words, and we could give such believers a few volumes of facts of five hundred pages each, more or less, to be answered, before we could admit such an assertion.

On the other hand, we are ready to prove beyond the possibility of a question, if facts be allowed to weigh anything in the argument, that the world is being converted—not to Christ, nor to righteousness, nor to truth—but to heathenism. It is a fact of the day, that the professing world is returning to heathenism, and that paganism is cropping up in our midst. A seed that has not been ploughed up in our midst will grow again in its season. And the seed of immortal-soulism is growing up in our midst to a prodigious height. Circumstances are favorable, and the seed grows thriftily. Christendom, so-called, is to be confronted with paganism; yea, is already confronted with it. By the side of the churches and chapels of San Francisco, the Josh houses of the Chinese raise their heads. New York is to have, or has already, a Josh house. And the other news that just reaches is, that Christian England is soon to have a pagoda set up in its capital.

Canon Trevor says, in the Record, a Church of England paper, in writing on the Controversy between the Archbishop of Canterbury and "the heathen,"—"I learn from Professor Garcin de Tassy's Revue Annuelle of Hindustani Literature for 1871, that there is actually a subscription on foot in Bombay to build a pagoda in London for the worship of Vishnu and Siva." I have no doubt in my mind that soon we shall see in all our principal cities the Josh house of the Chinese, the mosque of the Mohammedan, and the pagoda of the Hindoo. This state of affairs does not look very promising for a world's conversion. Brother, believe me, 'tis a fallacy—and its author, if I may believe a distinguished Congregational doctor who has renounced it—was President Hopkins. Age of the fable, about sixty years, or less. This is given on the strength of other authority rather than from myself. But another paragraph on the same subject anon. W. K.

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. T. Ongley.

A word of encouragement to the brethren and sisters scattered abroad. The times of concision or threshing, indicate the time at hand for the One with his sharp sickle to thrust in the same, for the harvest of the earth is ripe. Thank the Lord, we find some manifestations of wheat. Although the kernels are few and far between, our labor being mostly in new fields, yet in these we find generally a willingness to hear, and some ready to receive and love the truth, there are some ready to find fault, and reject the truth.

At our late meetings in Lycoming Co., Pa., a christian minister undertook to overthrow our preaching, and prove the immortality of the soul in a discourse of three hour's length; but the people acknowledged that he did not give one passage to prove it, while it could be proved by one passage—"Ye shall not surely die." Gen. 3:4. The result is, that quite a number in that region are coming out on the truth; even some that have never made any profession of religion; also in other places, where we travel and try to hold forth the word of life, and a coming kingdom, the people are stirred.

At a meeting we held in East Troy, Bradford Co., Pa., in the Baptist church, a number of ministers being present, they and their official members were very much stirred by our subject on the kingdom, they holding that it was set up, and have heretofore stated that it was the church, though when questioned sharply, tried to deny it. We finally called for an expression of the congregation to manifest by rising on their feet how many there were that really believed that the kingdom of God was set up. Twenty arose. I then stated that I had long looked for the kingdom, and had even thought that I should live to see the King come to set up the kingdom; but, to my astonishment, I had found it at last. Yet I was not really satisfied, for I did not see Jesus or much of the Spirit of Christ there; neither did I see Abraham, Isaac and Jacob there. Therefore I concluded to yet pray "thy kingdom come." I then took an expression from those who felt from the heart to pray thy "kingdom come," when about twenty-five arose. The friends of Jesus' coming to "take the kingdoms of this world," finding the opposition so strong, concluded to appoint a day to meet at the school-house and organize, to hold up the truths we cherish. One of the preachers has come out on the side of the truth, and intends to hold it up to the world. Hope the Lord will help them to do the will of our blessed Master. More anon.

From Bro. M. R. Phetteplace.

BRO. GRANT:—By request of the church, I write in relation to the confusion of appointments for "Lester's Hall," Providence, R. I., and call your attention to the following points:

1. We, the Advent Christian Church of Providence, worship in "Lester's Hall." The "No life" brethren worship in the "Life and Advent Union Hall," in the same block. Ours is the large hall, in which you preached when here two years ago. Theirs is the small hall, directly over ours, on the third floor.

2. I notice in last week's Crisis that Bro. Thompson has notified a conference at "Lester's Hall." This conference is not in "Lester's Hall," but in the "Life and Advent Union Hall." In our daily papers the notice is correctly inserted.

BRO. A. J. YOUNG writes from Vallejo, Cal., Oct. 22nd, 1872:—"I have been trying for a long time to write, and let you know how we are prospering. Brn. Fassett and Reed have been with us of late, and held meetings one week, with good results, four having been baptized. Many others are deeply interested, there having been several conversions since, in our prayer-meetings. We are having blessed seasons here. Our little band is all alive. We have from thirty to thirty-five good live testimonies, interspersed with prayers and songs for Jesus. We feel the importance of being in perfect submission to the will of our heavenly Father. We are seeking for that purity of heart and all those qualifications which Christ desired his children should have. We view the end near at hand. Therefore we pray for that brotherly love and that meek and lowly spirit of Jesus to abide with us forever.

We visit other churches often, but find religion at a low ebb. The Methodists have had no prayer-meetings for several months, until last week, when the new minister came, and then there would be four or five of them, and twice that number of us. We take hold with them, and do all we can to help stir them up. Our prayer is that God's people may be united in the good work. We would like to see you out here again. We hear of new fields, where laborers are wanted. We have with us at present a Bro. Bush, from San Jose, a man of fine feelings and good talent. He is an old believer in the views we entertain. He spoke to us last Sabbath. He is a carpenter, at present employed here. We like him much. His discourse was good. We think he ought to be sent out to preach. The church in Vallejo is a unit. We have no jars or discords or backbitings. May this feeling continue until Jesus comes."

CANTERBURY.—One of the most powerful meetings that the inhabitants of Canterbury ever saw was held under the New Hampshire Mission Tent, in this town, last week. All denominations united, and the result was great. May success crown their efforts.

THE CHOLERA SCOURGE.

HUNGARY.

BUDA, Oct. 30. Cholera is making serious ravages here. Ninety-four cases are reported, of which twenty-seven have proved fatal. Among the cases are those of twenty-nine soldiers who were stricken ill simultaneously, and of whom five have died.

IRELAND.

LONDON, Oct. 30. Cholera has appeared at Wexford, Ireland, where one death has occurred.

GERMANY.

BERLIN, Oct. 30. Cholera has broken out in Gumbennin, a town of Eastern Prussia, sixty-six miles southeast of Konigsberg. Several fatal cases have occurred.

FRANCE.

PROCLAMATION.

Nov. 1. Gen. Ducrot has issued a proclamation to the troops under his command exhorting them to remember that never were their duties more imperative and sacred. An army disciplined, educated and powerful in numbers is deeded to check the progress of internal enemies while protecting the country from foreign foes. The general says the time may come when the Germans will regret rending the hearts and homes and tearing from France her dearest children.

AUSTRIA.

SPREAD OF CHOLERA.

Nov. 1. A Prague despatch says that a number of cases of Asiatic cholera have occurred in that city, with fatal results. The presence of the dreaded pestilence, which is believed to be approaching from the East, causes the greatest alarm. Exrtaordinary sanitary precautions are being taken by the city authorities there, and in other towns throughout Bohemia, in anticipation of its appearance.

A Vienna despatch says that the much dreaded Asiatic cholera has appeared in that city. A number of cases have occurred ending fatally. The authorities have given orders for the disinfection of streets and the enforcement of every sanitary measures likely to arrest the plague. Reports from other parts of the country announce the appearance of the epidemic and indicate that a general outbreak is not improbable unless the greatest care be exercised to avert such a calamity.

A despatch from Frankfort says that the cholera has appeared in various districts of Germany, causing considerable alarm. The epidemic has not spread to any great extent, however, and it it is hoped that by stringent sanitary measures being promptly enforced, it may be prevented from getting a foothold in the larger cities.

RUSSIA.

THE TROUBLE IN THE EAST.

Late advices from Khiva report that the khan has built a fort at Djarkle, where he will resist the advance of the czar's troops. He still refuses to surrender the Russians held as prisoners.

PORTUGAL.

PROTESTS AGAINST THE COOLIE TRADE.

The American and British Governments have addressed a joint note to Portugal summoning that government to immediately put an end to the traffic in coolies, which is still carried on by the Portuguese trade with the knowledge of the government and without its interference. The summons remonstrates against the inhuman seizure of the natives by slavers on the African coasts, and demands an immediate interposition of the Portuguese government to take measures for the suppression of this infamous traffic.

ROME.—The progress of education in Italy since the recovery of Rome by the Italian Government is one of the most gratifying signs of the times. Italy had long ago begun to blush because of the seventeen millions of illiterate wretches who burdened her soil, and determined to make a mighty effort to educate them. She realizes now, to the full, that one schoolmaster is worth more than a hundred gendarmes, and that the intellectual regeneration of the people depends upon the multiplication of schools; and they have been multiplied! At this very time three new school-houses, to accommodate fifteen hundred pupils, are in process of erection at Rome; and common-schools, where instruction is secular and gratuitous, are as numerous as are the Catholic schools in the Eternal City. The priesthood, of course, rebel against the new regime; but to no avail. The march of education goes steadily forward, and every month makes it more and more impossible for the Pope to get back his brigandish kingdom, his ragged and rascally army, and his picayune and contemptible methods of levying tribute.

DOMESTIC.

AN IMPORTANT DECISION.—An important decision has just been rendered by the Supreme Court of Maryland in regard to the religious belief of witnesses. The case in question was an action for debt, where the defence made objection to a witness on the ground of religious belief. The objection was founded on the old common law rule, as well as a provision in the State Constitution, providing that a belief in the existence of a God, with a system of future reward and punishment, was the only requisite. It was shown by direct testimony to impeach the witness that, so far as could be gathered from his expressions, he came within both these limitations. In rebuttal it was shown that the witness did not believe in a personal God, but only in a supreme Spirit pervading nature. The court held that a belief in a personal God was not necessary, and that the witness, by acknowledging merely the existence of a Supreme Being or Power, established his competency to testify.—Globe.

DEATH OF MRS. GREELEY.—The death of Mrs. Greeley, which for the last few days had been hourly expected, took place at the residence of a friend at Chappaqua at four o'clock yesterday morning. Mr. Greeley, who for several days and nights had hardly quitted her side, had retired but a short time before, worn out with watching and loss of sleep, leaving the sufferer in charge of the youngest daughter, Ida, who was the sole attendant at her mother's deathbed. For several years Mrs. Greeley had been a constant invalid, her late European tour failing to produce any beneficial effect upon her health. She was a woman of fine intellect, and was greatly beloved by those who knew her for her many excellent qualities of head and heart. The public, without exception, will sympathize with Mr. Greeley in his bereavement.

The Horse Disease.

New York, Oct. 30. In most of the city stables the condition of the horses to-day is reported somewhat better. Fatal cases, however, continue to be numerous. The progress of the disease in the fire department is very alarming. Out of one hundred and forty-four horses, only two are well, thirty-four being unfit for use. The companies have been organized as hand companies. All the old two-wheeled hose carriages have been pressed into the service, and will be attached to the engines. Some of the tenders will be run by hand. Considerable improvement in the condition of the animals is reported from a number of car companies, stage lines and livery stables. The cotton dealers have been large losers by the epidemic, thousands of bales being on the wharves for a week awaiting transportation. The European steam ship companies have also experienced the greatest difficulty in clearing and loading their vessels by the appointed time.

Brother Henry Bergh, at once the guardian angel and the patron saint of the bestial race, exercised the functions of his high office yesterday evening with effect. He gathered his tribes together and took the war path. Standing at the junction of Third and Fourth avenues, at the Cooper Institute, he displayed his professional shield, and, in the name of the august Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, ordered the brutes to stop driving the gasping beasts. There was of course a rumpus; but Bergh, being reinforced by the police, carried the day. The horses were untackled, the passengers were spilt, drivers and conductors were reduced to the condition in which Othello found himself on at least one memorable occasion. This caused a general stand still in city travel. The other line of cars had previously almost all suspended travel, and when working hours were over the corners of the streets were made lively with groups of unsuccessful street-car seekers. The groups soon grew to crowds, and with the connecting line on the side walk it looked as if all New York had turned out in search of a mode of conveyance, which, of course, they failed to find. Delegations of travelers from other lands appeared to be on the same fruitless mission. The arrival of immigrants yesterday was, or appeared to be, unusually large. There were no wagons to convey themselves and their large bundles from Castle Garden, and to scatter them over the city.

In Brief.

—— Mr. George Coolbreth, ex-private in Company A, Maine Volunteers, has relinquished his pension. He gives the following reason for the sacrifice: "I am a firm believer in the immediate return of our Savior to earth. I have felt condemned for some time for taking this money, it being the price of blood; therefore you will please erase my name from the pension list."——The census of the city of Vienna is completed, and shows a population of 900,000.——Both in New York and Boston, instances of human beings being taken sick with the horse disease are reported.——A letter from St. John's says the potato crop of Newfoundland is to a great extent destroyed by blight, and that the codfishery will not be more than two-thirds of that last year.——Cholera has appeared at Wexford, Ireland. Cholera is also reported in Eastern Prussia, near Konigsberg, and several fatal cases have occurred, as well as in Hungary. Our turn will soon come, and no Board of Health to prepare the city of Boston!——The hoof and mouth disease is reported to have broken out among the horned cattle of the Argentine Republic, and the Treasury Department issued a circular to all the collectors of our ports enjoining the strictest care to prevent the introduction of the disease into this country.——The inundations along the banks of the Po continue. Mantau, which was threatened, has so far escaped.

LORD, COME AWAY.

Hand and foot are weary,
Brow and eye are weary;
Heart and soul are weary;
Lord, come away!

Years are swiftly flying,
Heaven and earth are sighing,
And thy church is crying,
Lord, come away!

Broken lies creation,
Shaken earth's foundation,
Anchorless each nation;—
Lord, come away!

Kingly props all failing,
Boldest bosoms quailing,
Fear forlorn prevailing;—
Lord, come away!

Thrones of ages shaking,
Bonds of empire breaking,
Sullen priesthoods quaking;—
Lord, come away!

Evil darkly reigneth,
Nought of love remaineth,
And thy Bride complaineth;—
Lord, come away!

Might the right is wronging,
Sworded millions thronging,
Earth's misrule prolonging;—
Lord, come away!

Lonely hearts are singing,
Loyal souls are clinging
To the light upspringing;—
Lord, come away!

Calm, 'mid night-winds blowing,
Long has faith been sowing,
See the life-seed growing;—
Lord, come away!

'Tis no time for sorrow,
See the glorious morrow,
Its gladness let us borrow;—
Lord, come away!

'Tis no time for dreaming,
See the day-spring gleaming
Through the darkness streaming;—
Lord, come away!

Sounds the last long thunder,
Bursts the day of wonder,
Glory, gladness yonder;—
Lord, come away!

H. Bonar.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

H. MUNGER.

Our yearly campmeeting was the best in every respect we ever had in Springfield. It left a good impression. Some five or six of our preachers were requested to preach for other churches during the meeting, which never occurred before. After clearing up the ground, which is the most tedious part, we found the poor Bro. Des Lauries still sick, and failing. He died Thursday, Aug. 29th, at one o'clock P. M. We had to leave before the funeral, which Bro. Higgins attended on Saturday. This is the first death I ever knew on a camp-ground.

Sabbath, Sept. 1st, I had a good time at Branch Chapel, Boston. This meeting is growing in interest and numbers. I never had a better time and better attention, while proving the Lord must come very soon. I stayed four days in Boston, most of the time in the Crisis office, which is in good shape, and the business is done up right by Bro. Osias and Charles Goodrich, who are employed by Bro. Adams, the Business Agent. He looks closely to the financial interests of the office. I do not believe things can be bettered.

I found at Lynn, Wakefield, and Exeter, some of the salt that had not dissolved, or lost its savor. Sabbath, at Seabrook. It was the hottest day and night I ever witnessed, and musquitoes were the sauciest and thickest. Boston was bad enough, Lynn was terrible, Seabrook unaccountable. This can be called a musquito year here. Yet we had a blessed good meeting. This is a young church, but it has good workers. It is the largest meeting in town.

Tuesday, Sept. 10th, at Alton Bay Campmeeting. I found the same quiet spirit of worship on the ground that was at Springfield meeting. The preaching was more fervent and shorter this year, and gave better satisfaction. Some that generally preach one and a half hours, cut down to one hour, and some to forty-five minutes. This is a reformation long desired and prayed for. Some of the tent companies had to stand eighty to one hundred minutes' sermons, but not on the stand. They were all short, and gave life to the meeting. I noticed our dear Bro. Bowman, who came from the South, whose appointments you saw in the Crisis for a number of weeks, set an example of short sermons; the average length being forty-five minutes, and full of thought and good doctrine and instruction to all. He was a great help to our campmeetings, being a new talent and full of the Spirit and sound doctrine, and is not ashamed to proclaim it. He has endeared himself to many northern people, and his heart was made glad by donations for his mission.

Another good feature in our two great campmeetings is good management in the financial department. This looks encouraging for sustaining and continuing these great engines of our warfare at this time; for our influence is being felt in the religious world as never before.

Saturday, Sept. 14th, left the camp for Portland, to preach to a few that were not able to go to campmeeting. We had a blessed good time together, and an attentive congregation of nearly two hundred people. Tuesday to Bath, at the new chapel. As usual, a good meeting, and a good company out. This church is united and growing. Wednesday, at Brunswick. Worked one day repairing a dirt dam that had been carried off by eels going up the brook and under the dam. Many dams are destroyed by them, or musk-rats going through them, when built of stone and earth. A sure preventative is to put a sill in the ground called a mud-sill, down even, or a little below the surface of the ground; then drive down plank the upper side of this sill, two or three feet, as the ground will admit, having the plank as long as the dam is high, filling the trench above and between the sill with meadow hay, or grass, or straw; put on the earth, no matter what kind, at an angle of forty-five degrees above and below these upright plank, and your dam will stand in all cases, by making a tight overfall for the waste water. This may be of use to inexperienced people. After fixing the dam, I preached in the evening in Bro. Storer's district. I found them solidly grounded in the truth. We had a blessed good time with old friends.

Thursday to Richmond village, in the equinoctial storm, which commenced the Monday morning the Alton Bay meeting broke up. This is the fourth day since we have seen the sun shine; and no meeting to-night. Being lonesome, I took a look at a large ship that was building near by. The way we learn is to ask questions of those that know more than we do about things. Such as ask no questions learn but little. All we know, we were taught by some one that knew it before us; so all of our knowledge is borrowed, and we have nothing to boast over. The facts I learned about ship building, of this ship builder, were interesting to me, and will be to some of the readers of the Crisis who live in the country, and some who have seen ships and sailed in them without even thinking of the weight they carry. This ship was of medium size. There are two sizes larger, and many less. It was two hundred feet long, thirty-seven feet wide, and twenty-six feet deep. It took one hundred and fifty thousand feet of oak timber, board measure, to build it, or three thousand tons weight; thirty-five thousand feet of plank, board measure, weight about seventy-five tons, for sides and bottom; fifty thousand feet of deck plank, weighing one hundred tons; thirty thousand feet of pine and finishing stuff, weighing fifty-five tons; sixty tons of bolts, anchor and chain; eight tons of rigging, and one ton of block; making this ship to weigh three thousand two hundred and ninety-nine tons, when empty. It is capable of carrying two thousand and four hundred tons to sea, so says the builder; and cost, ready to sail, eighty thousand dollars, and was six months in building. The whole weight of vessel and cargo is five thousand six hundred and ninety-nine tons. But few would think, to see one of these vessels sailing, of the vast weight on the water, or the amount of timber land cut over to build one such ship. Two hundred and sixty-five thousand feet, board measure, would take the timber on thirty to fifty acres of heavy timber land. What a woods! Noah, to build the ark, must have cut over some twenty-five times as much as this, and took much more time to build it; but there is no evidence that Noah was one hundred and twenty years in building it; but on the contrary, dates and ages of his ancestors' children, and events, show it was much less than fifty years. Some think it was seven years in building. [The book of Jasher says it was built in five years. ED.] It was the first and largest craft ever floated, with the greatest variety on board.

Friday, the 20th, at Bowkertown, where a few serve as lights in a dark place. Sabbath at Richmond, Reed meeting-house. There was a full house. Some came thirty miles—one team thirty-six miles. We had a good, profitable meeting. Bro. H. Mitchell and Reed took up their appointments, and helped in the meeting. We all missed Bro. Low Curtis, who lay at the point of death, and died Monday night. He was the main supporter of this meeting, and will be missed by the church and town, for all knew him to be a good man. He fell asleep after a very painful sickness with a cancer in the stomach. Sabbath evening, at Richmond Corner. The appointment had been given out, without my knowledge, to preach on the origin of Spiritualism, which brought out a large congregation of all sorts. When the net came in, or argument closed, some sectarians found themselves in the same bag with the Spiritualists, which caused a flouncing, as it generally will. But who is to blame? If they are swimming in the waters of immortal-soulism, with the Spiritualists, and the net is drawn, they must come in shore with them, mad or pleased. Some were mad, and many pleased, to see the light on that subject.

Monday evening, I preached again, by a vote of the congregation, except one man. We had a blessed meeting. Tuesday to Gardiner, and found a few trying to hold up the light against opposition of all sorts. The worst is as the pretended prophet, that found the man of God under the oak. See 1 Kings 13:18, and its connection. Wednesday evening at Litchfield, Buker school-house. Being rainy, but few out. The doctrine of the resurrection and restitution stirred up the officers, and one man took advantage of my giving liberty to exhort as usual, and went on to preach a sermon on his Universalism, which was out of order, and created dissatisfaction in the meeting.

Thursday to Bowdoin. This is a country place, but there are some good people that, two years ago, I understood, when I was there first, did not go to meeting at all, and had no Bible in their houses, who now love the Lord and his coming. This was encouragment to continue to go into by places and sow the seed. Some will catch. We had a good meeting with them.

Friday, Sept. 27th. I am sixty-six years old to-day, and have held meetings every day for four weeks but two, and am well. Thank the Lord. At Lewiston, in a rain-storm; but few out, but the best kind of a meeting; also at South Poland. Sabbath, at West Poland. As usual, a large gathering, and all seemed to enjoy the meeting. In the evening I went to Craig's Mills, to a tent meeting, held by Bro. I. C. Wellcome. I preached on the rise and progress of "the little horn," or papacy, and its former power as compared to the state it now occupies, which is a fulfillment of God's predictions by his prophets. The people listened with attention, as in every other place, on prophecy which is now due.

During this trip, I have learned that apples are very beneficial to cattle and horses. One horse that was turned out to die, worth when well two hundred dollars, got into an orchard and cured himself by eating apples; also two gargety cows. This caused others to try the experiment, and it worked the same cure. God made the apples for beasts as well as man; and nature calls so loud for them, that beasts will use great effort to get them. Try it, and it will be a blessing to the dumb beasts. Don't let them waste, for the beasts need them as much as the cider or brandy drinker. One man said he cured a horse of worms with a peck of sour apples. This is worth knowing to us all. There are plenty of cheap ones, not fit for market, but the cattle will pay a good price for them.

The meetings were excellent at South Casco and South Windham. One outsider said to a church member, "I never understood the Bible until to-night, and if you don't, you had better not own you have a Bible, or read it." There is a manifest giving way of prejudice in every place that is not led by sectarianism.

Sabbath, at Biddeford. The meetings were very good and full. The Boston and Maine R. R. company are doing wonders on their new road from Portland through Saco. Some excavations in Portland are forty-seven feet deep in the city. Some thirty or forty buildings are to be moved; some are good ones. It is a great change to come out of the woods into the city, after four weeks labor, where they have no news of the day. But there was some advantage, after all; one has a good chance to rest the mind.

Tuesday, I was to be at Hollis Centre. I started, and the Portland train was late, and I stayed at Portland. This is the first appointment I have missed for years, and this I could not help. Wednesday at Bonny Eagle, for the first time. Found them strong and united; also at East Rochester. Where they sing so well, one can preach easy. I could get my favorite tunes sung here.—Exhortation, Long Meter, Liberty, Buckfield, and New Jerusalem. These old tunes far exceed the new music. I wonder why our singers don't use our good old tunes in our good time books. These will wear so much better and longer than shoddy tunes.

Friday at Portsmouth. This is an old fortified place against Spiritualism. It is one of the best churches in the State. They work together against the spirit of division that has divided so many churches. Saturday, Oct. 13th, at Lynn, my last of seven weeks appointments. We had a good, full meeting. What a change in a few years! I used to preach at the Dye House to some twenty to thirty, and not one in the city; but now there is a congregation of three to four hundred. The truth is getting hold of all candid, independent and fruitful minds, that hear it properly presented. Here, as well as all other places, the influence of our blessed hope is going into other churches beyond what many expect. God is moving on the hearts of honest christians, to look at it, and get ready. We can do much the coming winter, if we do our duty.

MY TRIALS AND TROUBLES.

W. B. CHANDLER.

How often it is remarked, My trials are greater than I can bear. I cannot serve God because my trials are so great. As soon as I set out on my christian course, every thing seems to go wrong. Husband does something that tries our patience. Wife does something wrong; our neighbor's stock is troubling us, and one thing or another is continually trying us; and how can we serve God under such circumstances?

I would ask such a class, Did Jesus ask this question? He is our great pattern. We are to follow him, and act as he did; if we do that, we shall not get out of patience, and ask, How can I serve God under such trials? Let us look over Christ's history a little, and see how he conducted himself, and then look over ours, and then compare. Where we have made crooked paths, let us straighten them by the pattern.

Matthew wrote thus—"In the days of Herod . . . there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem, saying, Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him." The chief priests and scribes said, "In Bethlehem of Judea." Then Herod told them to go and find him, and when they had found him to come and tell him, that he might go and worship him. When the wise men had heard the king, they set out on their journey; and "lo the star, which they saw in the east, went before them, . . . and stood over where the young child was." When they had worshiped him, and presented their gifts, "they departed into their own country another way," having been warned in a dream not to return to Herod. After they had departed, an angel of the Lord appeared to Joseph in a dream, saying, "Arise, and take the young child and his mother, and flee into Egypt; . . . for Herod will seek . . . to destroy him." Thus we see that almost as soon as Christ was born, his parents had to flee with him into another country. He was a pilgrim and a stranger from the time of his birth until his death.

As soon as he was baptized, he was driven by the Spirit into the wilderness, to be tempted of the devil. Did he then say, My trials are too great? No, he trusted in God, and overcame Satan. He was then tried by his disciples, tried by the Scribes and Pharisees; and when betrayed by Judas, led away by the people, brought before Pilate, tried and scourged, then delivered by him up to the people to be crucified, spit upon, struck, and buffeted; and when hung upon the cross, his cup of bitterness was full, and in agony he cried, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" One gave him vinegar to drink, another reviled him; and when all this was heaped upon him, did he say, My trial is too great for me? No, he trusted in God, and gave up the ghost.

Now if our trials eclipse his, we may think they are hard to be borne; but when tried, we are to trust in Jesus. He has said, "My yoke is easy, and my burden is light." Let us, therefore, watch and pray, and we shall soon receive a crown of unfading glory.

THE SECOND ADVENT BELIEVERS.

By a notice in our last week's issue of the removal of the place of worship of the Second Adventists from Good Templars Hall to Mr. Martin Hammond's Hall over his son's grocery store, on North Main St., we are led to inquire into their situation, and we learn they are in a very prosperous condition; that they have never been in so good standing, so strong and united as at the present time. Mr. Hammond, one of the believers, is much interested; so much so that we learn he has fitted up his hall ready for meetings at his own expense, and offers it to them heated and lighted for their sole use, free of charge, which they gladly accept. Although they number but a few when compared with our largest churches in town, yet we doubt their being a church in town that can say—minister's salary and all other bills paid every Monday morning, as can this church. They are not rich, as but few rich people go to their meetings; not being popular, they do not draw many of that class; but, if we are allowed to judge, they are a very liberal, humble, and devoted people, taking the Bible as their only rule of faith and practice. They are, as a body, acknowledged to be the best Bible students in the world, always appealing to "thus saith the Scriptures" to settle the question. The only test of fellowship with them is christian character.

They make the doctrine of Christ's second coming one of the most prominent features in their hope. If we rightly understand them, they believe in the literal, personal coming of Christ to reign on the earth—that Christ did, the whole of him, die as literally as any other person; that the same personage that died, arose, and ascended to heaven at the right hand of God—Christ's Father—that he will come back to earth the same as he went away. They do not believe God and Christ are one in person, but two distinct personages, though one in purpose. They believe in the literal resurrection of the dead. They do not believe when people die they go to their reward, but that death is a sleep from which they are to be awakened when Christ comes, and raised up literal men, women and children, to be rewarded according to the deeds done; the good to be participants in the literal restitution of the earth which is to be the final and everlasting abode of the saints; Christ here reigning as King on David's throne, the saints then to be made immortal, no more to die.

In this life they believe in the non-immortality of man; that he dies literally, and returns to the earth from whence he was taken, and that if there be no resurrection of the dead, he must forever remain dead and perish like the brute beast; that none have natural and inherent immortality, God only having that; but they are as strong in the belief of retribution to all as our people, believing in the final destruction of the wicked, to be burned up root and branch—become as though they had not been. They believe the time near when Christ will come, not setting the exact time, only knowing it near by the fulfillment of prophecy, such as the darkening of the sun and moon, May 19th, 1780, and the falling of the stars, Nov. 13th, 1833. These things they affirm strongly are now in the past, and we are informed not one of the so-called Second Adventists believe to the contrary, and that the unsettled condition of the world at the present time is sufficient evidence to warrant in expecting Christ very soon. To this end they labor with commendable zeal, desiring all men to be saved.—Natick (Mass.) Bulletin.

GREATER WORKS.—John 14: 12.

M. B. STEELE.

Spiritualism pretends to work great miracles, even professing to communicate audibly with men who have been long dead. At first we are disposed to laugh at its vagaries. But, when we see how many thousands are deluded thereby, and hear its fearful blasphemy against our Father and his Son, we stand aghast. Yet it remains true, that the humblest christian can do "greater works" than any performed by our Lord Jesus in the days of his flesh. He healed the sick, cleansed the lepers, gave sight to the blind, and hearing to the deaf; he cast out demons with his word, and even raised the dead to life. Yet he says—"He that believeth on me, the works that I do, shall he do also; and greater works than these shall he do; because I go unto the Father." He gave to the disciples the power of working all these miracles, as proofs of their Divine mission. But these miraculous powers were only means to an end—the conversion of men from sin to holiness. This is, surely, a far greater miracle than any that have been mentioned. It could only be wrought by the constraining power and grace of the Holy Spirit. Jesus said—"If I depart, I will send him unto you. He shall teach you all things. He shall reprove the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment." By his aid, disciples, through their godly example and precepts, should convert sinners from the error of their ways, save souls from death, and hide a multitude of sins.

Consider, oh christian, the high privilege to which thou art called, and walk worthy of thy high vocation. The age of miracles has not passed. The conversion of any sinner is a miracle. God alone can do it. Yet he works by human means; and the man whose consistent, christian life shows that he truly with the heart believeth on Christ unto righteousness shall exert a power over his fellow men far more miraculous, and far more beneficent than even the healing of disease, or the raising of the dead to life.

REPORT OF THE ANNUAL A. C. CONFERENCE OF CONN.

The first meeting in connection with this conference was advertised for Wednesday evening, Oct. 16th, when a few from abroad met with some of the brethren and sisters of Morris, in their chapel, and Bro. Rockwell preached to them. Again at two o'clock on Thursday, we met to ask God's blessing on our meetings. Our heavenly Father did hear our prayers and blessed us. Praise his name for the love and harmony which prevailed at our first social gathering. Met again in the evening, and after one hour of prayer and exhortations, from hearts warmed by the divine influence of our heavenly Father, Bro. W. S. Campbell preached a stirring discourse, characterized by the same spirit that attended our social meetings.

Friday morning, at nine o'clock, met for business. Preachers present—B. Hitchcock, W. S. Campbell, H. Rockwell, A. H. Steele, W. Treat, G. L. White, A. Elliott, J. Curtiss, and O. D. Woodruff. Delegates—Brn. Emmons and Negus, G. Humphreyville, B. Garritt, H. Baldwin, and P. Marsh.

The following conference officers were chosen for the ensuing year: President, B. Hitchcock; Vice President, A. H. Steele; Secretary, G. L. White; Treasurer, B. St. John. The campmeeting committee reported expenses all paid. Campmeeting committee reported for the ensuing year—B. Hitchcock, O. D. Woodruff, H. P. Bradley, L. Mills. Committee for the Conn. Mission Tent—B. Hitchcock, G. L. White. Brethren wishing the tent pitched in their locality will please correspond with the committee. The subject of a change of policy in regard to boarding at our campmeeting was fully discussed. The Brn. were mostly in favor of dispensing with the boarding-tent arrangement, and returning to primitive customs. Final action deferred until next meeting. The reports of preachers and delegates were encouraging. Some churches are enjoying seasons of special blessings. Some reported conversions.

A few words in regard to the church in Morris. They are in a prosperous condition. They have a neat and commodious chapel, all paid for; a large and flourishing Sabbath school. Quite a number of this school have been converted during the last year. They love to tell what Jesus has done for them. The church is growing in numbers and in the graces of the Spirit.

We met on Friday evening to listen to some of the preachers present, but they found no place or time to preach, as the time was all filled up by prayer and exhortations and praises to God until a late hour. Many felt, as they listened to those young children telling what Jesus had done for them, that it was the loudest preaching we could have. The interest of the meeting continued unabated to the end. Saturday P. M., Bro. Treat preached. Sunday morning many of the saints came in from the surrounding country. The chapel was filled with earnest listeners. Preaching by Brn. Steele and White. Thus closed one of the best meetings we ever enjoyed at conference season.

During these meetings, quite a number desired the prayers of God's children that they might be ready to meet Jesus in peace. Backsliders were reclaimed, saints quickened, and expressed a determination to consecrate all for Jesus. Whilst we feasted on heavenly manna, we felt sad that so many brethren and sisters in Conn. remain uninterested in the conference, and we lose their sympathy and prayers and exhortations, and they lose the benefits of these meetings.

G. L. WHITE, Secretary.

OCTOBER 11TH, 1872.

E. OWEN.

I pass to-day another stone
Which marks the miles of my career,
And swiftly weeks and months have flown
Through all another livelong year.

I reach one other station, sure,
On the great thoroughfare of life,
By grace been able to endure
Another year of earthly strife.

I cross to-day another bridge,
That separates the great unseen;
To-day seems like a mountain ridge,
Which rears its towering height between

The plain I only just have passed,
And that which stretches out before;
While time seems hurrying more fast
Than wont to do in days of yore.

I used to hear old people say,
Succeeding years passed quicker by,
But little thought to see the day
When the year ends would come so nigh.

I scarcely have my work begun,
But fairly seem to have set out;
When lo! the hasting year has gone,
And my resolves to bring about

So much this year, so much of good,
To make this year one that should tell,
Has simply bought its care and food,
While nought unusual has befell.

And thus it is, year after year,
Dissatisfied, resolving o'er;
Yet few of us who sojourn here
View any wondrous open door;

And life's great work is mainly done
In little things, day after day;
I would that each day's setting sun
Might so decline that I can say—

If slow, or fast, time seems to move,
And I see no advantage rare;
What I have done has been of love
To Him whose glory I shall share,

When rolling years and setting sun
Will ne'er occasion sad regret,
But when with Christ upon his throne,
I shall the former things forget.

"This is for your Health."—Paul.

HIGH HEELED BOOTS FOR LADIES.—A London surgeon, Mr. P. Hewlett, reports several cases of serious fractures of limbs indirectly caused by these heels, which had tripped up their wearers; and he refers also to the distortion and injury to the foot that they often induce. He says—"Last year I was sent for to see a young lady in one of our London hotels. She wished to consult me about her foot. On seeing it, I thought its state depended upon her boots, and I asked to see them. The boots were brought in by the lady's maid, but the only thing I could observe about them was the immensely high heels. I said—'It is the high heels of your boots that cause the mischief, and unless you diminish them, I can do nothing for you.' She became quite angry, and said she could not alter them. 'I cannot do it, and will not.' Suddenly she again toned down, and said—'Pray, sir, what would people say if they saw me walking about the park without high heels?' I said—'It is simply heels versus brains. If you have brains, you will cut off the heels; if you have no brains, you will continue to wear them.' She fortunately had brains, cut off the heels, and her foot got quite well."—Scientific American.

HYGIENIC PIE-CRUSTS.—A long trial proves the thorough adaptability of oatmeal for that purpose. Take number one meal if possible, wet with half its measure of hot water. It can be easily rolled thin enough; it will swell but little in baking. It is not so white as those pie crusts made of white flour, and to the unaccustomed eye not so attractive, though that is a matter of taste. To my notion they are preferable, even in appearance, to the crusts soaked in hog's lard, which here in the city have earned themselves the suggestive soubbriquet of "scabs," and they are certainly far more wholesome than any shortened piecrusts whatever. To avoid the unaccustomed appearance, however, tarts, tart pies, and fruit and berry pies of many kinds can be made without an upper crust, or the upper crust can be removed after baking. Blackberry, raspberry, plum, grape, and many other kinds of pies can be made in this way. The crust bakes very quickly, so that any kind of fruit that requires much cooking should be cooked before it is put in. It also makes very pretty ornaments, cut in various shades, with cake cutters, and laid upon the surface of tart pies; is agreeable to the taste, and very few persons would notice the difference when made without an upper crust. As people come to recognize its wholesomeness they will probably be brave enough to eat it openly.—Science of Health.

THE MIND IN SICKNESS.—Whatever is true of the health is true of happiness. We can be happy and materially advance the comfort of those around us if we so incline, or we can bring just the opposite upon us and others. If our business amuses us, and we are succeeding, and can keep our tempers happy, then we can spurn the offer of medicine. On the other hand, if we have a distasteful business, and have not the will or the power to adapt ourselves to it, then we are an excellent subject for pity. If we look on the dark side of every obstacle, and search not for the other, then we are more deserving subjects for sympathy.

TO RELIEVE the intense itching of frosted feet, dissolve a lump of alum in a little water, and bathe the part with it, warming it before the fire. One or two applications is sure to give relief.

HYGIENIC cultivation has great effect upon the power of the brain; a man with care may thus increase his brain power largely.

THE POWER OF PRAYER.

The Bible account of the power of prayer is the best we have, or can have.

Abraham's servant prays—Rebecca appears.

Jacob prays—the angel is conquered, and Esau's revenge is changed to fraternal love.

Joseph prays—he is delivered from the prison of Egypt.

Moses prays—Amelek is discomfited; Israel triumphs.

Joshua prays—the sun stands still—victory is gained.

Hannah prays—the prophet Samuel is born.

Asa prays—Israel gains a glorious victory.

Jehosophat prays—God turns away his anger and smiles.

Paul and Silas pray—the prison shakes, the doors open, and every man's hands are loosed.

BROTHERS, SISTERS.

Dear little Brothers and Sisters:—Probably none of you have ever seen the writer of this letter, most of you never will; and yet every one of you will see him. May be you do not understand that. Well, read these two words, Brothers, Sisters. Do you know their meaning? You will say, O yes, of course we do. But there may be more in them than you have ever yet thought of. I will tell you a story.

Little Bennie lay upon a bed of sickness. He was very ill of fever. His father and mother watched with anxious hearts, for little Bennie would never be well any more. He was dying. The wind whistled around the house and among the old trees. Just then, something outside sounded like whir–r, whir–r, whir–r. Bennie heard it. He raised his little head, and his eyes brightened as he called, "Sister, sister, I hear my windmill. Don't you remember when I made it? You would n't help me; but never mind; I fixed it all nice myself." The tears came sadly to his sister's face, for she remembered that when little Bennie was trying to make it he had asked her to help a little, but she "would n't be bothered about it" then. But now, how much she wished that she had only assisted him. Bennie died. Will they ever meet and be brothers and sisters again? I will tell you. If they were such brothers and sisters as I speak of, they surely will. Did you ever know that there are two kinds of brothers and sisters?

Here is another short story. I had two little cousins—brothers. The youngest died, and after he was gone, the other said, "The last thing that I did to my little brother was good. I carried him in the street over all the mud." The remembrance was pleasant. But will they be brothers ever again? Truly, I do not know. But if they were true brothers, they will meet to part no more at the resurrection, in glory. I will try to tell you what I mean by true brothers. When Jesus Christ was upon earth, he said, "Whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother." His mother and his brethren were seeking him, but the crowd was so great around him that they could not get near; and when it was told him that they were there, he made this reply, by which we learn that earthly relationships are not as valuable and lasting as the heavenly. All earthly pass away, but the heavenly endure for ever. Many a brother and sister part on earth, who will not find each other in the morning light of heaven; and the dearest ties of earth are broken, never to be together again. But if the loved and loving ones are in the Redeemer's family, the day-dawn of heaven will reveal the happy re-union when the trumpet shall sound, and the dead are raised incorruptible. For he that doeth the will of God abideth forever.

Would you like to know what it is to do the will of God? Do you think that you can do it? do it perfectly? Jesus has done it. He alone could do it. But what can you do? Only this; believe in the Lord Jesus, as a complete, an all-sufficient Savior; a Savior for you; for "this is the will of God, that ye believe on him whom he hath sent." It is in believing that we are made his holy ones; for every one who belongs to his family he calls holy; and being brought into the family of God, we are made partakers of the divine nature; and He, being in the image of God, is not ashamed to call us brethren. Surely if we are of his family, we have an everlasting dwelling-place in our Father's home in heaven. There we shall be at home. We shall be like Jesus, for "we shall see him as he is."

No more sorrow then. How different to all we see around us here. What will it profit, if we lose the glory and the crown, and gain in its place the smiles of a deceitful world? The crown of life is above to the wise. None can wear the crown but members of the royal family; and if we are brothers and sisters of Christ, ours is the crown and glory. The Prince of the kings of the earth is our elder brother, who has gone to prepare a place for us; and will come again to receive us unto himself, that where He is, we may be also.

E. S. B.

PLANS AND PURPOSES.

A good purpose is better than a good plan. A plan may fail; a purpose will still live. Others can thwart our plans, but they can not change our purposes when firmly fixed.

"What is your plan in life?" asked a friend of a small boy, turning to him from his big brothers, after listening to their plans about which they had been speaking. "What is yours, Neddie?"

"I am not big enough for a plan yet, said Neddie; "but I have a purpose."

"That is good. It is not every one who has a purpose. What is your purpose?"

"To grow up a good boy, so as to be a good man, like my father," said Neddie. And, by the way he said it, it was plain he meant it. His father was a noble christian man, and Neddie could not do better than to follow his steps. A boy with such a purpose will not fail of his mark. And however his plans may fail, if he follows out his purpose he will not have lived in vain.—Little Christian.

The "Crisis" is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

CHRIST IS COMING.

J. R. SMITH.

"So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation."

The promise is unto them that look for him, and is to none other. Jesus has always had a people upon the earth who have loved his appearing; they have long prayed, and waited, and looked forward to the time when the Nobleman should return; when they should behold the King in his beauty. The coming of Jesus is a glorious reality; all the hopes of the christian are centered upon this established truth; this is the christian's blessed hope; and if Jesus did not come our hope would be lost, and they also which sleep in Jesus are perished. But, blessed be God, we have the record that Jesus has raised some; he spoke the life-giving word and Lazarus whom Jesus loved came forth, bound hand and foot with grave clothes; and "Jesus said unto them, Loose him, and let him go." Glory to God! Jesus holds the keys of the grave; death is subject unto him; he is "the one that liveth, and was dead; and behold, he is alive forevermore." Jesus has been here once as a sin offering; he is coming again to redeem the purchase of his own blood. When he comes his salvation will be unto those who have loved his appearing. He is coming to liberate those who have died in the triumphs of faith; he is coming to redeem those who are in possession of the Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possession. When Jesus comes he will bring the promised reward to those who are found with their loins girt about, and their lights burning, waiting for their Lord, when he shall return from the wedding; "blessed are those servants whom the Lord when he cometh shall find watching;" looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Jesus is coming to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired by all that have believed in that day; when the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it. Jesus is the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him; and has obtained eternal redemption for all who believe on his name. "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Eternal life comes by, and through, Jesus Christ; it can come by no other way; we do not inherit it—(modern theology to the contrary notwithstanding), and consequently cannot receive it until Jesus comes. For "ye are dead and your life is hid with Christ in God; and when Christ who is our life shall appear, THEN shall ye all appear with him in glory." Then, when Christ appears to judge the living, and the dead, at his appearing and his kingdom, then, we shall receive the promised gift; not before.

Then, at that day the reward will be given unto those who have waited and looked for his appearing, and who by patient continuance in well doing have sought for glory, and honor, and immortality; eternal life. Glory to God! This is our hope; this is our blessed hope. Our hope is founded on the immutable word of God, and our unwavering faith in the promises of our blessed Savior; our hope has a foundation that will stand when the heavens and earth shall pass away; our hope is built upon the foundations of the prophets and apostles, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone; our hope is a living, lively hope, endured with the power of an endless life. "Our life is hid with Christ in God;" it is laid up for us in heaven, where Jesus is; whereby God hath given assurance unto all men, that he hath raised him from the dead. God raised the very same Jesus that has crucified on Calvary's mountain more than eighteen hundred years ago; God raised the very same Jesus that burst the bands of death, that led captivity captive, and rose again the third day, according to the Scriptures; God raised the very same Jesus who had been associated with his disciples while upon the earth before his crucifixion; and after his crucifixion he was seen of Cephas, then of the twelve, and was afterwards seen of more than five hundred brethren at once; to whom also he showed himself alive after his crucifixion by many infallible proofs, being seen of them forty days, and speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God.

And after his mission was ended, while being assembled upon Mount Olivet with his disciples, waiting for his ascension, he commanded them that they should not depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father, which, saith he, ye have heard of me; for John truly baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence. "When they therefore were come together, they asked of him, saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel? And he said unto them, It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power. But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto me, both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and unto the uttermost part of the earth. And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight. And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."

Thank God for "this sure word of prophecy," for says Peter, "we have not followed cunningly devised fables when we made known unto you the power, and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ; but were eye witnesses of his majesty." Jesus has ascended upon high, and lives to die no more. He went up to heaven more than eighteen hundred years ago; he is still there; seated upon his Father's throne. Angels, authorities, and powers being made subject unto him; he is the migthy God! All power is given unto him, both in heaven, and in earth; he holds the keys of death, and the grave, and at the appointed time he will unlock the tombs, and the sleeping millions shall come forth. Glory to God! Jesus is the first begotten of the dead; he is the prince of the kings of the earth; he is our wonderful counsellor; he is our advocate upon the Father's throne, presenting for us the merits of his precious blood, in the courts of glory; but he is coming; he is coming to redeem the purchase of his own precious blood.

Dear saints of God look up. "Let not your heart be troubled;" listen to the promise, as the words fall from the lips of your martyred Redeemer. "Let not your heart be troubled; ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." Glory to God! for this blessed assurance, coming from the lips of our own dear Savior—"I will come again."

"All hail the power of Jesus' name,
Let angels prostrate fall;
Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown him Lord of all."

The very same Jesus those Galileans saw as he went to heaven in a cloud; the very same Jesus that spoke the life-giving word and Lazarus came forth, is coming again; he is coming to awaken our loved ones who are sleeping in their dusty beds; when he comes they will hear his voice, and will come forth, with the powers of an endless life. For "the hour is coming and now is, in the which all that are in their graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth." Our loved ones will all be gathered in that resurrection morning; not one of them will be left behind—"For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord [not by modern theology], that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent [or go before] them which are asleep. For the Lord himself [not a spirit or a ghost] but the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of an archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words." Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly.

New Bedford, Mass.

A QUESTION OF PRINCIPLE.

D. COGSWELL.

"He that hath ears to hear, let him hear."

I have a serious question to propound to you, my brother or sister, whoever you are, who believes the truth of God's Bible in regard to the near second personal coming of Christ, to raise the dead, judge the world, destroy the wicked, restore paradise, and establish his glorious "kingdom under the whole heavens," when the will of the Lord will "be done in earth" as perfectly as it is now done in heaven; and that question is this: Is it RIGHT for you to keep your light under a bushel? Is it right for you to cling to churches that utterly ignore the most of these God-given truths? Is it right for you to pay your money for preaching what you know to be directly contrary to what God's word clearly teaches? Will God be pleased with such a course? Is it LOYAL? Can the Lord say "Well done" to you for it? When Jesus plainly says, "Where I go ye CANNOT come," is it right for you to sustain a system that says all good people do go where Christ has gone as soon as they die? Is it right to make Christ lie, and the devil tell the truth? Is it RIGHT? But you say you do not believe it, and you let it go into one ear and out of the other. But see here; if you belong to a church that declares such sentiments in their creed, you have to sanction the creed, and become part and parcel of the church, and what the church declares you declare. Two men may enter a co-partnership, and both alike are responsible. So, by remaining in connection with a church that is believing and advocating that saints go to heaven, or to their reward, at death, when the Bible declares that they "cannot" go there, and invariably defer rewards till the judgment, at the end of the world, you give your money and influence against the TRUTH.

The churches teach that the world is increasing in holiness, and is soon to be converted. You know "evil men and seducers" are waxing "worse and worse." They teach that the wicked are to be tormented for ever and ever, and you know that the Bible plainly teaches that they are to "be destroyed," "be consumed," "be burned up," "be as though they had not been." You believe that doctrine greatly dishonors God and drives men into infidelity. Why then sustain such a sentiment?

They teach that the saints are to inherit heaven. You know the Bible clearly teaches that "the meek shall inherit the EARTH," "the land," and "shall dwell therein forever." Are they not preaching "another gospel"? Read what Paul says about such in Gal. 1: 6–8.

But you say there is no church where you live that is of "like precious faith." Then stand alone for God and his word. Let the whole world know you believe God's truth, and will obey it, even if it is "at the loss of all things," even friends you love. Better have God's approbation, which is better than life. Let your light shine, and raise up a church in the name of the Lord that will "wait for his Son from heaven." There are many places where there is a little company that are laboring, struggling, and striving, to keep the truth before the people, and show men that it is better to believe God, than the traditions of men; and in all such places there are some that are not not willing to come out and identify themselves with the truth, but cling to their church relations. Is it honorable to do so? We have a dispensational truth. It is an important truth, and the "cross" of this age is in confessing this truth. If you are not willing to "bear the cross," can you expect to "wear the crown"? It looks to me like being ashamed of Jesus and his "word." It looks like disloyalty. Is it not?

Look at these questions candidly. Examine the motive that induces you to remain where you are. Is it for fear of the speech of people? Is it that you want a good name? Is it that you do not like to go with the despised few? Jesus says he that seeks to save his life shall lose it. Man "looketh on the outward appearance, but God looketh at the heart." The day is at hand that will try men. We shall all want the approbation of the Judge then. If we are ashamed of him or his words now, he declares he will be ashamed of us then. If we confess him now, he will confess us then. "Walk in the light."

BIBLE CHRONOLOGY.

N. H. BARBOUR.

The first thought of the reader will doubtless be that chronology is uninteresting and obscure, and can therefore give but little light on the consummation of our "blessed hope." Indeed, Adventists generally look at chronology with as little interest as the churches do at the prophetic periods. But as a knowledge of the true time for the ending of the prophetic periods has been withheld and must necessarily be until the last message to the world, so too has the chronology. God has withheld these things from "the wise and prudent," until his time should come for them to be understood; and now they are so plain that "he may run who readeth."

If the reader will take pencil, paper, and Bible, and follow me over the subject, carefully reading every text, I promise chapter and verse for every year from Adam to Cyrus. And here let me say, this is something never before accomplished, or even claimed, by any chronological writer. Hitherto men have taken it for granted that God's chronology was imperfect; that in a number of places there were gaps, and nothing more reliable than Josephus to bridge them over. If it be true that God's chronology is broken, and Josephus our only reliance, all expectation of accuracy may as well be discarded, and indeed has been by all historians; for Josephus differs from the Bible in almost every place. But, thank God, the light is shining, the seals are broken, and the time has come when "the wise shall understand."

In the fifth of Genesis, the time is given from Adam to Noah. Adam's age is reckoned until he begat Seth, and the age of Seth until Enos the third in order; and so on, through all the patriarchs.

Adam,	130 years.		Gen. 5: 3.
Seth,	105	"	" " 6.
Enos,	90	"	" " 9.
Cainan,	70	"	" " 12.
Mahalaleel,	65	"	" " 15.
Jared,	162	"	" " 18.
Enoch,	65	"	" " 21.
Methuselah,	187	"	" " 25.
Lamech,	182	"	" " 28.
Noah,	600	"	" 7: 6.
Total,	1656 years.

When Noah completed his five hundred and ninety-ninth year, he would enter on his six hundredth. "In the six hundredth year of Noah's life, in the second month, the seventeenth day of the month, the same day were all the fountains of the great deep broken up." Gen. 7: 11. And for the remaining ten months and thirteen days of his six hundredth year, the waters remained on the earth. "And it came to pass in the six hundred and first year, in the first month, the first day of the month, the waters were dried up from off the earth." Gen. 8: 13. The very day Noah entered on his six hundred and first year, the waters had disappeared. Thus the 1656 years from Adam ended the very day the flood ended.

If these texts are true, there can be no further question on this point. But to make surety doubly sure, God tells us that "Noah lived after the flood three hundred and fifty years; and all the days of Noah's life were nine hundred and fifty years." Gen. 9: 28, 29.

Fractions of Years.

Chronology is given in full years, yet we cannot doubt that fractions occurred. That Adam lived just one hundred and thirty years, and on his birthday begat Seth; and that Seth lived one hundred and five years and begat Enos, and so on through the line of patriarchs; and that every king was born, and crowned, and died, on Adam's birthday, no one is inclined to believe; indeed, we are informed in the clearest manner that such was not the case. The literal application of the Bible must in a certain sense be governed by what it is the design to teach. "Take, eat, this is my body," said Christ. "The letter killeth, the spirit maketh alive." The sum total of chronology is all that gives useful information, and we can believe and accept it. Some of the ages of the patriarchs might overrun a few days, or months, and others fall short enough to balance, without doing injustice to the spirit of the subject. That such is the case, we have positive Bible testimony. God has given four illustrations; two that overrun, and two that fall short. And in each case he has summed up in full years and left out the fraction. Who questions the fact, so often mentioned in the Bible, of the forty years in the wilderness? Yet they lacked five days. They left Egypt on the fifteenth, and crossed Jordan on the tenth of the first month. Again. "And the days that David reigned over Israel were forty years." 1 Kings 2: 11. Also in 2 Chron. "David the son of Jesse reigned over all Israel; and the time that he reigned was forty years." Now read 2 Sam. 4: 5—"David reigned forty years." In Hebron he reigned over Judah seven years and six months; and in Jerusalem he reigned thirty and three years.

Once more. "Zedekiah was one and twenty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem." 2 Chron. 36: 11. The statement that he reigned eleven years is repeated in 2 Kings, and three times in Jeremiah. Now read two Kings 25: 3–7, and you will find that his reign terminated on the ninth day of the fourth month of his eleventh year. Hence he only reigned ten years, three months, and nine days; and yet God calls it eleven years. Where God sums up the time for himself, I think it safe to follow his arithmetic. Were we to reject this plain teaching, and the reckoning God has given, and fix it for ourselves, it would not vary the sum total of six thousand years so much as one month. These fractions balance each other, or nearly so.

Now we can understand the difficulty in relation to the age of Methuselah. Reckoning full years, he would have been nine hundred and sixty-eight years old the day that Noah was five hundred and ninety-nine. The flood did not come until the seventeenth day of the second month of Noah's six hundredth year. Therefore Methuselah could have lived one month and seventeen days after he entered on his nine hundred and sixty-ninth year. And as with Zedekiah, his last year was counted.

Flood to Covenant, 427 years.

"Shem begat Arphaxad two years after the flood."

Shem,	2 years.		Gen. 11: 10.
Arphaxad,	35	"	" " 12.
Selah,	30	"	" " 14.
Eber,	34	"	" " 16.
Peleg,	30	"	" " 18.
Rue,	32	"	" " 20.
Serug,	30	"	" " 22.
Nahor,	29	"	" " 24.
Terah,	205	"	" " 32.
Total,	427 years.

On the death of Terah, Abram came into Canaan, and God made him the promise—"From thence, when his father was dead, he removed him into this land wherein ye now dwell, and gave him none inheritance in it; yet he promised that he would give it to him." Acts 7: 2–5. And this promise of the land constituted the covenant. See Ps. 105: 9–11. "Which covenant he made with Abraham. . . . saying, Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan."

Covenant to Law, 430 Years.

"And this I say, that the covenant, that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law, which was four hundred and thirty years after, cannot disannul." Gal. 3: 17. "And it came to pass when the four hundred and thirty years were fulfilled, even the self-same day it came to pass, that all the hosts of the Lord came out from the land of Egypt." Ex. 12: 40, 41.

Law to Sending of Spies, one Year.

They go to the wilderness of "Paran" in the beginning of the second year after leaving Egypt. Num. 10: 11, 12. It is from Paran the spies were sent. Num. 13: 2. Kadish-barnea is the place in Paran from which they went. Num. 32: 8. From the time they left Kadish-barnea for the coast of Moab, was thirty-eight years. Deut. 2: 14–18. And this was before Aaron's death. Aaron dies on the first day of the fifth month of the fortieth year.. Num. 33: 37, 38. Therefore from the time they left Kadish, to the end of the forty years, was at least thirty-eight years and eight months. But the spies were forty days gone, and they did not leave Kadish till after their return. Hence, from the sending of the spies to the end of the forty years must have been at least thirty-eight years, nine months, and ten days. Consequently, the time from their leaving Egypt to the sending of the spies was one year, two months, and twenty days, at the most. But for the reason already given we do not reckon this fraction of a year.

Spies to Division of Land, 45 Years.

"Forty years old was I when Moses, the servant of the Lord, sent me from Kadish-barnea to spy out the land. . . . . And now, behold, the Lord hath kept me alive, as he said, these forty and five years. And now, lo! I am this day fourscore and five years old." Josh. 14: 7, 10. "Now, therefore, give me this mountain, whereof the Lord spake in that day. . . . And Joshua blessed him, and gave unto Caleb the son of Jephunneh Hebron for an inheritance." This ended the division of the land. And the land had rest from war." Josh. 14: 12–15.

Division of Land to Samuel, 450 Years.

Here is where chronological writers have all stumbled; there is not one exception; and I believe God arranged it as he has for that very purpose. There is an apparent break in chronology at this place; and men have resorted to every conceivable means, except the very simple one God has given, to clear it up. All chronological writers, without exception, I believe, reject a portion of Bible chronology here, and take Josephus as a substitute. Those unacquainted with the subject will scarcely credit this; nevertheless, it is true. They actually reject God's chronology, and then patch up the breaks with human material. Of course they have a plausible reason for doing so. They were learned and honest men. But still the fact remains the same. "Samson judged Israel twenty years." This is given by the pen of Inspiration as a part of chronology, and yet it appears superfluous, as if crowded in where it did not belong; hence they have rejected it. Even Bowen's Chronology, that adopted by Elliot, which proves the human race to be six thousand years old in 1873, fell into this error; but, for some reason, supplied enough from Josephus to balance it. That God designed to veil their eyes so that they could not see until his time had come, we must believe; for now these difficulties in chronology, which have defied the most careful investigations of the best of men, are so simple of solution that a child may understand them; and God's chronology, reaching from Adam to Cyrus, is found without a break.

From the division of the land, where our chronology stopped, to the beginning of this four hundred and fifty years found in Judges, there is an apparent break, which, if we cannot mend, other than by applying to Josephus (and thus daubing with untempered mortar), leaves the chronology worthless. But we will try what virtue there is in God's word to heal the breach.

After the division of the land, "the children of Israel served the Lord all the days of Joshua, and all the days of the elders that outlived Joshua." Judges 2: 7. Then they rebel, and he sold them "into the hand of the king of Mesopotamia eight years." And this eight years is the next chronological period found in the Bible. Here is a gap from the division of the land to the king of Mesopotamia, measuring about twenty years, more or less. How shall we cover it? Take Josephus, or any other inspired testimony, I will not. If the bridge that shall cover it is not from the hand of God, better proceed no further, and let the subject drop. There are nineteen short periods of chronology beginning with these eight years and ending with Eli. Let us examine them.

Samson,	20	"	" 16: 31.
Eli,	40	"	1 Sam. 4: 18.
Total,	450 years.

Eli was the last judge. Samuel was a prophet. Here God has given four hundred and fifty years of chronology. At first sight it appears to reach from the time they are sold into the hand of the king of Mesopotamia to Samuel the prophet. But upon further examination we shall find that it laps just twenty years. Samson's twenty years, which in this regular line of chronology follow the forty of the Philistines, were, as we learn in another place (Judg. 15: 20), "in the days of the Philistines." That is, his twenty years were in their forty. And such we know was the case. He never delivered Israel; and himself died a prisoner to the Philistines.

Here is this four hundred and fifty years, reaching from the king of Mesopotamia to Samuel the prophet, lapping on itself twenty years. If we only dare straighten out that lap, and the gap from the division of the land to the king of Mesopotamia should prove to be just twenty years long, it would make a nice drawbridge to cover it; and the timber of the bridge could be trusted, for nothing unsound ever took root where that timber grew. But dare we take such liberty? I answer, No! I would as soon put forth my hand to the ark of God; and almost as soon reject this twenty years entirely, as others have. "And if any man take away from the words of the book of this prophecy [the Bible], God shall take away his part out of the book of life." If God would show the bridge across the chasm, and so straighten out the lap of twenty years, and make his own work perfect, I am sure it would suit me better than any thing Josephus has built. We will search the Scriptures. Perhaps if we let God be his own interpreter, he will make it plain.

There are two places in the New Testament, and only two, where chronology is referred to. The first is the four hundred and thirty years from the covenant to the law. The time is given in Ex. 12: 40, 41, where they came out of Egypt the day the four hundred and thirty years ended; but not a word is said as to where they began; and we should forever have remained in the dark, had not St. Paul made the connection, and informed us that they measure from the covenant. Gal. 3: 17.

In the 13th of Acts, is the second place where Paul comes to the rescue. This four hundred and fifty years of the judges, like the other period, is given in so obscure a way that we should have forever remained in the dark without assistance. Now let us see if Paul does not shove the drawbridge, close up the break, and make the four hundred and fifty years reach from the division of the land until Samuel the prophet. "And when he had destroyed seven nations, he divided their land to them by lot. And after that he gave unto them judges about the space of four hundred and fifty years, until Samuel the prophet." Acts 13: 19, 20. Paul says "about" the space of four hundred and fifty years, because the first eight years of that period were under the king of Mesopotamia, and prior to the first judge; hence the judges did not extend over quite the whole period. But his words clearly imply that the space of time to be measured by that period was "from the division of the land," until Samuel. I like Paul's way of fixing it better than I do the rejecting of a part of God's chronology, and taking Josephus. Others will do as they please.

This "space" of time extended to Samuel; then there is another "space" of forty years reaching to David. Ver. 21—"And afterward they desired a king, and God gave unto them Saul the son of Cis, by the space [or in the space] of forty years. And when he had removed him, he raised up David." The preposition "by" is not in the Greek, and may be rendered "in"—in the space.

Samuel was a prophet, and though he judged Israel, was cotemporary with Eli and Saul; therefore God has not reckoned his time in the chronology; and for us to figure on it, and try to force in a few years for him (twelve years, as some do), when God has given him none, is an attempt to fix God's chronology as foolish in its beginning as it is fruitless in its end. Thus we have reached the end of Saul's and the beginning of David's reign without appealing to human testimony, and without a break.

In the chronology of the kings there are two lines; the kings of Judah and the kings of Israel. The first is clear, accurate and unbroken, from David to the captivity. The second is a side line; it continues only a short time, and is full of irregularities. It changes families eight times. There are interregnums between the various kings. Again, father and son reign cotemporary. In fact, it is given in such a way as to make it impossible to get a chronology from it. We have to assume interregnums in some places, and the lapping of the reign of father and son in others, to harmonize it with itself. In first and second Kings the line of Judah interlaps with that of Israel. Each king of the different lines is said to begin to reign in a certain year of the opposite line. Thus the confusion that belongs to the line of Israel works confusion with that of Judah.

If the kings of Judah had been left in this confusion, we should have known most of these irregularities belonged to the line of Israel; that connected with Hoshea (2 Kings 15: 30, 17: 1), also the changing of families. But God did not leave them in that confusion. Every king of Judah is recorded a second time, and by themselves, in the Chronicles of the kings of Judah, where there is not the first symptom of an irregularity. And why men go to the kings of Israel and search for chronological difficulties, when God has given the true line, the line of Judah, on which they must begin and end, void of confusion, I cannot see for the life of me, only that they love darkness rather than light.

Why not reject the four hundred and thirty years from the covenant to the law, and insist upon getting a chronology from the age of the patriarchs while they were in Egypt? This would certainly be a difficult undertaking, if not impossible; and about as foolish as to attempt a chronology from the kings of Israel, where it does not exist.

If, after a careful consideration of our condition, we find that there is an internal warfare, and that in spite of our firmest resolutions to keep ourselves in the love of God, yet there is a continual uprising of the fleshly lusts against purity, and we also find the Scriptures exhorting us to holiness and requiring it at our hand in the judgment day, then the question becomes pertinent, "How can I become holy?"

There is no use in answering this question to a person who does not long for it. I have seen some whose consciences were so defiled that they were indifferent to the whole subject, and would hardly give it a second thought. The conscience must be thoroughly aroused upon this point. This is the first thing necessary to be realized in this work. Like a man seeking to escape a burning building, so the conscience must be aroused to seek escape from the inward pollutions of sin. A deep conviction of the necessity of deliverance must settle down in the heart to make the work thorough. A study of the Bible upon the subject, by the aid of the Holy Spirit, will accomplish this in most people, while others need a more complete self-examination to fully feel their need.

But when the soul really agonizes for deliverance, then how can it be wrought out? I answer, there is but one way taught in the Scriptures, or known by experience, and that way is, "the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin, and, "he is faithful to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." We cannot cleanse ourselves by works or will-power. We may lop off the branches and sprouts of sin, but we cannot dig out the roots. In other words, we may refrain from actually committing sin, but we cannot change our natures that continually prompt us to sin. God alone can do that. Hear the great apostle—"And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and your whole spirit, and soul, and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Faithful is he that calleth you, who also will do it." (1 Thess 5: 23, 24.)

God alone can pardon. God alone can cleanse. Yet there are conditions laid upon us before he will accomplish the work. These should be fully understood by us. What are they? Simply, an entire consecration of our bodies to God for this very purpose, and an earnest, prayerful seeking for full deliverance. This is the exercise of faith.

It is not doing, but yielding. What for? To obtain joy? No, but peace. For the fullness of Christ, instead of the fullness of Satan. Joy will come, but it is not the joy itself the soul is hungering for. A hungry man sits down to eat, not because he is sorrowful, but because he craves for food; but when fully satisfied he rejoices with his friends.

Do you feel an inward lack of purity, and have you a longing to have the foe turned out of your flesh, and to "be filled with all the fullness of God?" Do you wish this civil war to cease, and your warfare henceforth to be against "foes without" instead of "foes within?" Then give yourself up to God for this purpose. Let go of the world. Let go of everything but Jesus. Do not try to get up any particular feeling, or try to manufacture more faith. Let go of all but Jesus. Never mind what your feelings are, get down. Get to the bottom of all earthly hopes and aspirations. Make an entire consecration of yourself and all you have to do and to suffer the will of God. Do not worry or be particular about how God shall deal with you. Sign a blank, and let God fill it out.

Are you afraid folks will think and call you a Methodist? That's awful! Better go to ruin than to be called thus? Are you afraid you will make some demonstrations that would be ridiculous, and men will deride you? That would be terrible! Had you not better lose your life than suffer thus? No. Forget all this. Give all to Christ. Let him do as seemeth to him good.

By faith alone can the work be done on our part. None can "purify himself," or "purify the heart," except by faith, and this is simply submitting to God, and refraining from our own works.

Much more might be said upon this subject with profit, but I leave it here, for my next article on "Personal Experience."—Frank Burr, in Advent Christian Times.

"TIME OF TROUBLE."

GEO. A. STREETER.

Bro. Grant:—I wish to offer a few thoughts on the subject of the "time of trouble."

1. When is it? I answer, when the end comes. Proof, Dan. 12: 1—"And at that time [a time previously spoken of] shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people; and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time; and at that time thy people shall be delivered." What causes the trouble? The standing up of Michael. What does he stand up for? "For the children of thy people." When are thy people delivered? When Michael standeth up (at that time.) Then the time of trouble comes; then, and not until then. And it comes on those that are not delivered, which are the wicked.

Again, turn to Matt. 24: 29. Here, after all other signs have passed away, Jesus says—"And the powers of the heavens shall be shaken; and then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven; and then [at that time] shall all the tribes of the earth mourn." When do the "tribes of earth mourn"? When the sign is seen, not before.

Again (Rev. 6: 15)—"And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every free man hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of Him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb." "For the great day of his wrath is come [not is coming], and who shall be able to stand?" Here, as elsewhere, we see the trouble is on those that are unprepared to see him, and it takes place when Jesus comes, or when the sign is hung out.

The dark day of blood and bitter persecution is passed, thank God; we need not fear it again. Men will talk. The Pope may utter his threats, and that is all he can do; he has got to the length of his chain. Judgment has set on him. No fears, children. Do not expect great things before the Lord comes; but watch, "lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping."" Mark 13: 36. Trials and temptations will abound and increase, but be of good cheer. Christ has overcome the world. If we overcome all things here, when the "time of trouble" comes upon the ungodly and the wicked, we will hear it said—"Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast." Isa. 26: 20. Read the next verse for the indignation.

Dear brethren, we are safe. Only see that your names are "written in the book," then in room of wailing, we shall shout; in the room of calling for rocks, we shall say—"Lo, this is our God, we have waited for him, and he will save us." Glory to God, he will save every one. God bless you all. Trust in God, believe his word, and all will be well. Amen.

Let it be thy chief concern to have thy interest in and right to the promises cleared up. This is the hinge on which the great dispute between thee and Satan will move in the day of trouble. Oh, it is sad for a poor christian to stand at the door of the promise, in the dark night of affliction, afraid to lift the latch, whereas he should then come as boldly for shelter as a child into his Father's house. —Gurnall.

Seek for Success.—Regard more the faithful discharge of duty than be anxious for direct success; but, as a person of inquiring mind when he hears of the success of any instrument, say an instrument of husbandry, keeps saying, "What is the secret of its power?" so let ministers be ever seeking to find out the best way of working.

THE BOSTON CONFLAGRATION.

Saturday night and Sunday, Nov. 9th and 10th, our city was visited by the most destructive fire ever experienced in this vicinity. The rapidity of the burning, and the remorseless fury with which the flames mowed down everything in their track, was fearful to witness. It can only find a parallel in the records of the Chicago fire, one year and one month ago. The progress of the fiery fiend, from the small beginning, was as pitiless as fate. At times it seemed as though the entire city was doomed. But there was no wind, except what the flames created; had there been, nothing could have saved Boston.

The fire originated in a large granite block on the corner of Summer and Kingston Sts., about quarter past seven Saturday evening. The flames rapidly spread thence up Summer St., leaping on their destructive way, until some twenty-five streets were involved in ruin. The heroic efforts of the brave firemen were futile, apparently, to check the course of the fire, until State St. was reached. The new P. O. building remains intact, although the flames encircled it. Pearl St. lies in ashes, as may also be said of Federal, Broad, High, Arch, and many others. The magnificent edifices in Franklin St. and Winthrop Square, the core of Boston's wealth, and her pride, are now but shapeless, blackened ruins. The walls only of Trinity church are standing, the interior being entirely burned out. We think this, and St. Stephen's, on Purchase street, the only churches destroyed.

Up to the time of writing, the grand loss is estimated at $100,000,000! Among the newspaper offices which suffered are the Post, Transcript, Traveller, Gazette, Courier, Pilot. As Lindall St. and the rear of the P. O. were burned, H. L. Hastings' "Repository" must have proved another prey to the flames.

The business of the P. O. is now conducted at Faneuil Hall, and more or less delay will transpire in the delivery of the mails for some time to come.

At Washington.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 10.—The Boston fire has been the chief topic of conversation here to-day. Mr. Boutwell, after a careful summing up of probable losses, places the amount at between one hundred and twenty-five and one hundred and fifty million dollars. He has received advices from New York that there will probably be an attempt made to-morrow to produce a panic in financial circles.

The Controller of the Currency leaves for Boston to-night, to investigate and report to Secretary Boutwell the condition in which the Boston national banks are left by the fire. The Secretary expresses his willingness to do whatever may lie in the power of the Treasury Department to alleviate the financial distress occasioned by the fire, and will not hesitate to make further use of the forty-five million legal-tender reserve should temporary inflation of currency be of benefit. He expects capitalists and financial corporations who have lost heavy by the fire will have to make forced sales of large amounts of government bonds among other securities, and greenback reserve can be used to make extra purchases of bonds, thus affording necessary circulation for immediate use, and keeping prices from ruinous decline, for the benefit of impoverished holders, and the sake of public credit.

At New York.

NEW YORK, November, 10.—To-day was a sad one in this city when the news spread of the terrible disaster to the city of Boston. Insurance office clerks were busy all night, and to-day it is ascertained that all companies lose heavily, but cannot yet give the exact figures. At a meeting of brokers held to-night to discuss the situation, a general decline of stocks was deemed certain, and many settlements have been made to-night on the basis of ten per cent below the prices of Saturday.

A despatch has been received from Secretary Boutwell to-night, stating that he would aid the market all he could, and prevent speculators taking undue advantage. The excitement here on the receipt of the news of the fire was intense; crowds gathered around the newspaper offices; news-boys scattered extras everywhere in the city, in churches and lobbies of hotels, in street cars and on the streets. The fire was the only topic of conversation at the Fifth Avenue Hotel. A number of Boston merchants here have received intelligence that accumulations of years of labor were swept away by the fire. The wildest rumor regarding the extent of the fire was circulated and received ready credence. The press of business over the telegraph wires is enormous. Business men and capitalists displayed the greatest anxiety to obtain details of individual losses. The dismay and terror in financial circles surpasses anything experienced here since "Black Friday."

Since writing the above, we have received the following from the Editor of The Christian:—

THE SCRIPTURAL TRACT REPOSITORY, 19 Lindall St., was burned Sunday, Nov. 10th. Nothing of consequence saved but a portion of my private library. No insurance but God's providence—no refuge but the Everlasting Arms. The Christian and Little Christian will be issued promptly, if the Lord will.

H. L. HASTINGS.

Temporary Office, No. 30 Hanover St.

THE WALLS FALLING.—In the "Advocate of Christian Holiness" for October, we find the following: "The lines of separation between the churches are fast fading away. Holiness is the grand extinguisher of these artificial distinctions." Of course this is not true of the churches as bodies, but of the best members of the various churches, who truly love Jesus. These are coming together on the true basis of christian union, and no variations in points of doctrine on which good men differ, will separate them again. It is a life union in Christ.

There is also another union taking place among the mass of professors, which is brought about by worldly policy, fairs and other pleasure parties. This union is the result of lukewarmness, and loss of interest in the "way of holiness." It is merely human. It is popular, opposed to the coming of Christ, and all other unpopular truths; and its doors are closed against those who are preaching these things. Their position is exceedingly perilous, but they see no danger, because blinded by the spirit and manners of the world. Many of these are favoring Spiritualism, and are full of doubts in relation to the inspiration of the Bible. They are strong obstacles in the way of sinners, and the spread of vital godliness. Says Paul: "From such turn away." Let us unite with all that is Christ-like; and keep on the whole christian armor, waiting for the coming of our Redeemer.

GIFT OF THE SPIRIT.

While looking over the Scriptures on the subject of the gift of the Holy Spirit, we found the fact very plainly taught that this gift is not the witness of the Spirit that our sins are forgiven, received at communion; but a special gift received upon certain conditions, after our sins are pardoned. All the examples in the Bible appear to be in harmony with this position. When this gift is received it produces perfect love, peace, patience, gentleness, meekness, long-suffering, and the other christian graces; removes all hatred, variances, fretting and scolding, and other evil things opposed to the Spirit of Christ. This gift may be properly called the gift of power, or the blessing of sanctification; that is, the blessing that follows our sanctification to the Lord. It is promised at baptism. "Repent and be baptized, every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." "This promise is unto you, and to your children, and to all that are afar off, even as many as the Lord our God shall call." Acts 2: 38–39. Here it is very plainly taught that the gift of the Holy Spirit is for all saints in all ages of the christian dispensation. In Luke 11: 13, we read—"If ye, then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him." There is no room to doubt the willingness of our heavenly Father to give the Holy Spirit to his children. Sinners are not called the "children" of God. The Scriptures say—"He that committeth sin is of the devil." 1 John 3: 8. We must become the followers of Christ before we can receive "the gift of the Spirit."

In Paul's letter "to the saints . . . at Ephesus, and to the faithful in Christ Jesus" (Eph. 1: 1), he says—"Be filled with the Spirit." Eph. 5: 18. If they could not be converted without being filled with the Spirit, why did the apostle exhort them to be "filled," after they became saints?" It is not sensible to urge persons to get what they have already received.

It cannot be said in truth that the one hundred and twenty disciples of Jesus, who assembled in "an upper room," on the day of Pentecost, were unconverted men; but previous to that time, they had not been "filled with the Spirit," for they were assembled for the purpose of receiving the precious gift. We read—"When the day of Pentecost was fully come, they were all with one accord in one place. And suddenly there came a sound from heaven, as of a rushing mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. . . . And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost. Acts 2: 1–4. These were among the most faithful disciples of Jesus, who had been his bosom friends, but they had not been filled with the Spirit till this time. This is the gift the Father is so willing to bestow upon every follower of Christ. The reason the gift is not theirs, is because they will not put themselves in a condition to receive it; or do not "ask for it; because they do not believe they can have it; others suppose they receive at conversion the best and fullest measure of the Spirit that is for them; hence look for nothing greater. Others are kept back, because some do not live right, who profess to be filled with the Spirit. Such might as reasonably refuse to take any bank bills, because there are some counterfeits. Let us seek and obtain the genuine.

When the apostles heard that numbers in Jerusalem and Samaria "had received the word of God," or been converted; they "sent unto them Peter and John, who . . . prayed . . . that they might receive the Holy Ghost." Acts 8: 14–15. On another occasion, while Peter was speaking to a company of Gentile believers, "the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the word." Acts 10: 44. When rehearsing the matter, he said—"As I began to speak, the Holy Ghost fell on them, as on us at the beginning" (Acts 11: 15); thus showing that the gift of the Spirit on the day of Pentecost was not one confined to that occasion. He goes on to say—"Then remembered I the word of the Lord, how that he said, John indeed baptized with water, but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost. Forasmuch then as God gave them [the Gentile believers] the like gift as he did unto us, who believed on the Lord Jesus Christ, what was I, that I could withstand God?" Acts 11: 16–17.

On examination, it will be found that the "gift" of the Spirit, the "baptism" of the Spirit, and being "filled with the Spirit," are but different terms to express the same thing; and that is what the Father is so willing to bestow upon "them that ask him;" but in all cases, so far as we can learn, this "gift," "baptism," or being "filled" with the Holy Spirit, is an event that takes place after conversion, and is not the same experience as the witness of the Spirit that our sins are forgiven. No one can be filled with the Spirit so long as he knowingly allows any evil thing to remain in his heart; such as hatred, variance, envy, covetousness, pride, selfishness, and such like, because these are contrary to the Spirit. While these evil things remain, there is internal strife and contention between the old and new man; between the flesh and Spirit; but when "filled with the Spirit," then the inside war ceases, and the old man lies completely subdued and passive at the feet of Jesus, the glorious conqueror. Satan will still continue his attacks outside, but so long as we are "filled with the Spirit," he finds no welcome response from within. "His goods" have been spoiled by One stronger than he, who now keeps and fills the heart by His holy presence. It is all peace, when the Prince of peace has the full control; and the peace is not "perfect" till this is the case.

When the "gift of the Spirit" is received, it is our privilege to have it continually as an abiding guest, unless we begin again to commit sin, and grieve it away, as is sometimes done. It cannot be pleasing to the Lord to be obliged to take away the gift from one who has enjoyed it. He is delighted to dwell in us, when we are willing to let him guide us in all things. The union between Christ and such persons is most heavenly. They are as two ardent lovers, ever delighting in each other's presence. They are "one." None can understand this blessed union but those who have felt it. It cannot be told. It "passeth all understanding." Praise "God for his unspeakable gift." "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" Acts 19: 4. This question of Paul was to "certain disciples" of Christ at Ephesus; thus showing that persons become "disciples" of Jesus before they receive "the gift of the Holy Spirit." On this point, we think the Bible is very clear. The apostle informs us, that in "the last days" professors of religion will have "a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." The Holy Spirit is the "power of godliness," without it we cannot be God-like. It is a sad fact that in these last days, a very large number of professors have nothing left but "the form of godliness." They have grieved away the Spirit. Is it not high time to "inquire for the old paths?" Let us all seek the gift of the Spirit, and be ready to meet Jesus.

THE HORSE DISEASE.

The horse disease is still spreading in all directions, and it is thought it will go over the continent. It is now spreading in the southern States, and taking hold of the mules also. It is reported from Baltimore, Md., Nov. 3d, that of eight hundred horses belonging to the city Railway Company, all were sick but eleven. There is yet no solution of this strange calamity. It is a new thing, and evidently designed to teach man some important lesson. Many horses have died.

This disease affects the horses about the same as diphtheria does men. They wilt down under its influence like plants set out in a sunny day. Their ambition and vigor, for which the horse is so noted, seem to depart at once, and the dashing steed becomes like an old worn-out horse in a few hours. When a man is prostrated with diphtheria, we should think it cruel to compel him to go to work in his weak state; it is equally so for the owner of the horse to make the poor dumb animal go from his sick stall into hard labor. It is no wonder that death follows in many cases.

The extent of this horse disease is remarkable. We passed through Portland, Me., Nov. 1st, and did not see a single horse in the street. Oxen were doing the work, and were slowly plodding along, looking this way and that, as though they felt they were out of their place, and wondered at their new calling. They are poorly fitted for city life.

It is becoming a serious question among the people, What does it mean? They begin to feel as though some other new and strange things might happen soon, that would even be more startling. They are perplexed at this state of things, and feel a deep foreboding that the worst has not yet come. This may be the beginning of the closing events of this dispensation. Let us wait and watch, and be ready. The end cannot be far away. O what a blessed hope is ours of soon seeing the dear Savior, who died that we might live for ever. The omens keep growing brighter in favor of his speedy return. We do not pretend to know the "day and hour" when he will come, and because of this uncertainty, and the fact that he is "near, even at the doors," there is a special need for careful watching, lest coming suddenly he find us sleeping.

THE SCIENCE OF HEALTH for November has a rich table of contents. Among the interesting articles are—Popular Physiology, illustrated; Drugged to Death, by Howard Glyndon; Physical Culture; Dislocations, with illustrations; an interesting article on the different Medical Systems; Intelligent Cookery; Offensive Breath, and how to make it pure; The use of Oatmeal for Human Food, and how to cook it; something about Sundry Humbugs; The cure of Stammering; Women Physicians in England, with rich miscellaneous matter, which is full of useful hints on health, making the No. worth many times its cost; only 20 cents, or for the year, $2. The Publisher offers the last three numbers of this year, on trial, for 25 cts. Address, S. R. WELLS, 389 Broadway, New York.

PERFECT LOVE.—We would again recommend our readers, who are interested in the subject of holiness, to read Bro. J. A. Wood's work, entitled, "Perfect Love." We think it is the best book we have ever read on the subject. It presents the truth in a clear manner, in harmony with the Scriptures and christian experience. Price, $1.50. For sale at the Crisis Office.

COATICOOK.—The meetings now (Nov. 5th) in progress in Coaticook have become specially interesting. Notwithstanding the general sickness of the horses, and bad traveling, we have large and remarkably attentive audiences every night. The prospect is very encouraging. We are giving the prophetic evidences that Christ is coming soon to set up his kingdom. The people are anxious to hear. Last evening, the Methodist minister asked several questions, and purposes to ask more to-night. The truth is taking strong hold of many minds.

GUIDE TO HOLINESS.—This monthly is a valuable one, and should be in every family. It is edited by Dr. and Mrs. Palmer, Jr., 14 Bible House, New York City. Price, $1.25 a year.

ADDRESS.

The Address of the President of the Adv. Chris. Pub. Society—Elder J. Couch—delivered before the Adv. Chris. Association, at its late annual meeting, and published in pamphlet form, by vote of the Association, is now ready. Friends desiring one or more copies of this excellent Address, will please order, enclosing stamps, to pay postage on those sent. AG'T.

WE take the following from the Bible Banner, and hope all will read and remember it. AG'T.

"NEARLY three millions of letters went to the dead letter office last year. They are partly classified as follows: Fifty-eight thousand letters had no county or State directions; more than four hundred thousand lacked stamps; and three thousand were posted without any address at all. The sum of $82,000 in cash, and more than $3,000,000 in drafts, checks, etc., were found in these letters. It appears, that, on an average, every letter that is misdirected, or that goes to the dead letter office from any cause, contains one dollar. When will people learn the simple art of writing a small business letter correctly?"

FEED MY SHEEP.

Christ, as the great Shepherd, would have his sheep fed; nor is it a matter of indifference with him what kind of food is dealt out to them. Certainly it would not please him to have them fed with that which would fail to nourish them, nor yet with that which would poison them. "Feed my sheep," said Jesus. "Feed the flock of God," said Paul. To take the figure off, the command stands in this form—Feed my church. The church must be fed in order to flourish. But what food will best strengthen and build it up? Let us consider this question both in a practical and doctrinal light.

1. In a practical point of view, the church needs something better than occasional fevers of excitement to keep it alive. This spasmodic religion, now boiling over, and now frozen up, is very poor food, merely stimulating for a time, to be followed by reaction. It merely stirs up the sympathetic stratum of human nature, without enlightening the judgment, leaving the man like a ship at sea without a rudder, to be blown in another direction by the next wind. He that "heareth the word of the kingdom, and understandeth it not," though he may be tickled with the brilliancy of the picture, and have his sympathies entranced, will soon relax into an inactive state, for his judgment has not been enlisted. But let the gospel be so presented as to enlighten the judgment, and secure the affections, then there is something stronger than a mere sympathetic excitement to hold man. Ministers can thus feed the church, while God can water it with the dews of divine grace.

2. The church must be fed with God's own truth, instead of feeding on stale fables. The cry which lovers of tradition are raising to get rid of the force of Bible truth—"It makes no difference what we believe if we are only honest"—is only a blind way of pleading for quarters after the battle has turned against them. The truth of God must not be smothered, nor undervalued. It must be faithfully dealt out to the church, in the form of "exceeding great and precious promises" from the God of heaven, to stimulate them on their pilgrimage. We have no right to hope for that which God has never promised; and how shall we know what to hope for, unless we first learn what God has promised? And in learning, and accepting, what God has promised, we are unavoidably placed in antagonism with tradition.

Let us never shrink from the contest; but let it always be conducted in the spirit of gentleness. We must feed the truth to the church, even if it does involve the abrogation of idolized errors. If tradition comes in collision with truth, must truth quit the field, or put a gag in its mouth, lest tradition-lovers complain? No; let the truth assert its divine origin, and look error in the face. W. S.

EXEMPTION AND REDEMPTION.

The two main pillars of the remedial economy, are the death and resurrection of Christ. Many theologians, however, make Christ's death the exclusive basis, and reduce his resurrection to a mere tributary appendage. Both are alike essential, and neither standing alone could procure full salvation for sinful and fallen man. The death of Christ, it is true, procures exemption from the penalty, since "the Lord laid on him the iniquity of us all," and "Christ died for our sins;" thus making pardon possible, provided we make an appropriation of Christ's death by faith; but if no other provision were made for man than simply his exemption from the penalty, or his pardon from sin, he would be left in a sad dilemma—pardoned, but not redeemed from mortality, or invested with immortality. Right here, in order to show the importance of Christ's resurrection, we inquire, What would have been the result if Christ had simply died, and had not risen from the dead? Would anything more than exemption from the penalty, or pardon, have been secured? Let us notice a few facts:—

1. Without Christ's resurrection, the saints would have no claim upon eternal life. "This is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." 1 John 5: 11. Then if that Son were eternally dead, What claim could we have on eternal life embodied in him as the life-giver? Said Christ—"I am the resurrection and the life;" or, I am the vivifier, and the giver of life eternal.

Again. "This is the will of him that sent me, that every one that seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day." John 6: 40. How could Christ have raised up the saints at the last day, to enjoy everlasting life, provided he had never been raised himself after his death?

2. Without Christ's resurrection, there would have been no kingdom for the saints to enjoy, for "when the Son of man shall come in his glory . . . then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom." Matt. 25: 31–34. He could never have thus come in his glory, to give the kingdom to the saints, if he had never been raised from the dead. "When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." This could never have taken place if Christ had never been raised.

3. The promised restitution could never have come, if Christ had not risen. "He shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you; whom the heavens must receive until the restitution." Acts 3: 20. This could not be the case if Christ had not risen from the dead.

4. If Christ had not risen, the city would not have been prepared for the saints. "I go to prepare a place for you." John 14: 2. He could not have done this if he had remained dead. Thus it is abundantly evident that though exemption comes through the death of Christ, full redemption was dependent upon Christ's resurrection as a prerequisite thereto. Christ's death warded off the penalty; he rose to redeem us from mortality, and fit up a home for us to live in. W. S.

SPIRITS AND SOULS.

"Millersville, A. A. Co., Md., Oct. 10, 1872.

BRO. SHELDON, Dear Sir:—The World's Crisis is my most welcome guest, for it has been my Alma Mater in the doctrines of Second Adventism. There are but two advocates of the Second Advent here—Mr. Henry Joyce, and myself. Of course we often get into discussions with the 'Orthodox,' and often are called hard names. I recently read a synopsis of Dr. Munsey's (of Baltimore) Lecture on Man, in which he said 1 Thess. 5: 23 plainly taught that man had an immortal soul. The verse offers some difficulties to me; and I would like to have your views on it.

1 Thess. 5: 23 reads—'And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.' Dr. Munsey says body, soul, and spirit, are three separate entities. 1 Thess. 4: 14 reads—'For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.'

My opponent contends that those whom God will bring with him are those who have died and gone to heaven. I contend that the Bible says this earth is our dwelling-place now and hereafter. J. E. N."

REPLY.

1. If "spirit," "soul" and "body" are really three separate personalities, which is the intellectual one, and which is the responsible one? Which is the head of the trio? Or does one know just as much as the other? And when one sins, is the other sure to sin, and sure to commit the same sin? As these two inside men do not love whiskey, and therefore would not prompt the outside man to drink it, which of the three men is responsible for the act of getting drunk? And if the outside man gets drunk on his own hook, against the choice of these two inside men, will God punish them for what the outside man does?

But to say that soul and spirit are inward personalities, or that both combined constitute a personality, is to assume just what needs proof, and just what cannot be proven. And to concede the claim that soul and spirit are inward personalities, would be to involve the idea that there are two such personalities in God, as well as in man; for he is often said to possess both a "soul" and a "spirit." Paul was not speaking of spirit and soul as distinct entities, but as appendages to the one man—"Sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved"—or your mind and life and person—all these being embodied in the words, "you wholly." All admit that spirit sometimes means mind, and soul sometimes signifies life; but neither mind nor life are personalities, but properties of a personality. Life exists alike in beasts, fowls, fish, and men; while mind results from a living organism; and the extent of mind possessed depends upon the order and perfection of the organization which gives it rise, aided by training to develope it.

2. Who will "God bring with him"? (1) Not living souls, but "them which sleep in Jesus." Do disembodied souls "sleep"? Is it true that souls go up to heaven to "sleep"? But this sleep is the sleep of death. Are souls sleeping the sleep of death up in heaven? Certainly not. (2) Where will he bring them from? As God "brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus" (Heb. 13: 20), and as he will bring the saints "even so"—even as Jesus rose—he will of course bring them from their graves, where they are sleeping, and not from heaven. The text says nothing about bringing souls from heaven; and if it really means that, then the conclusion is involved that souls sleep the sleep of death in heaven. Who is willing to admit that heaven is filled with dead souls in a disembodied state? And if dead, they cannot be immortal; so this effort to get souls into heaven before the judgment, results in robbing them of immortality, and leaves heaven filled with dead souls, if any at all.

This kind of argument acts like the overloaded musket, which kills at the breech first. An argument that will kill the theory of the user, cannot be long deemed valuable, or valid. W. S.

"THE OLD MAN."

Carnal nature is brought to view in Scripture as "the old man," in contrast with the divine nature, which is recognized as the "new man;" and only one of these natures can predominate at a time. The old nature must be exchanged for the new. "Knowing this, that our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin." Rom. 6: 6. "Ye have put off the old man with his deeds; and have put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him." Col. 3: 9, 10. "That ye put off concerning the former conversation the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts; and be renewed in the spirit of your mind; and that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness." Eph. 4: 22–24.

Here the two natures, instead of being two personalities, are simply personified. The old carnal nature is styled a "body of sin," and is represented as "corrupt," being "crucified," or "put off;" while the new nature is spoken of as being "created in righteousness and true holiness," after the divine image, and as being "put on," in the same sense in which we are said to put on Christ.

Have we really "put off" the old man, or merely compromised with him? He is so "corrupt" that a compromise will only give him a new victory. He is a "body of sin" that will develop itself unless "put off." His "deceitful lusts" will be cropping out here and there, unless he is "crucified." Let him neither rule nor live in the heart. Put off the carnal nature, and put on the new nature, which, by personification, is a body of righteousness, in contradistinction to the "body of sin." Have Christ formed in you the hope of glory, living in the heart by his Spirit. W. S.

OUR SOCIAL AND PRAYER MEETINGS.—They are pretty good religious thermometers. When the spirit of devotion is low, these meetings are thinly attended, and flag in interest; but when hearts are warm with holy zeal, it requires something more than trifles to keep people away from them. As "straws show which way the wind blows," so these meetings indicate the current of devotion.

Are your prayer meetings kept up? Are they well attended? Do you go there to do duty, or slight it? And which do you do when you get there? If you attempt to do duty, do you pray so long, or talk so long that you tire everybody out? Stop it. Jesus prayed short. All Bible prayers are short. You cannot improve on divine examples. Better speak three times than to get every one wishing you would stop. Your talk then only kills the meeting. W. S.

THE FAMILY ALTAR.—Is it erected? My heart has been pained in my travels to occasionally find a family altar lacking, even among our own people. This ought not so to be. God should be honored and worshiped at home, as well as abroad. And there ought to be a relish for this method of revering God. We want a religion that will exalt God everywhere.

But like other parts of devotion, family prayer is abused by man, made tedious by long prayers, running over the islands of the sea, into China, round to old Jerusalem, and then back home just in time to give the Lord a hint about a home blessing, after all are out of patience, and thinking about anything but a blessing. Do not preach to the Lord, but pray to him; do not say prayers, but pray in faith. W. S.

WHAT ARE WE COMING TO?

It would almost appear to the careful observer as he sends his thought abroad over our own country, and the nations of Europe and the world, that the times of tribulation spoken of in Scripture as annunciatory of the latter days, had already come. The foundations of industry, order, and prosperity seem to be tottering. Governments are corrupted, people rebellious, enterprise paralyzed, trade and commerce languishing, and individuals bankrupt. Suffering and distress prevail everywhere to a most unusual degree. Wars and rumors of wars, famines, pestilences, and earthquakes in divers places, increasing wickedness, and heart sickening casualties and crimes, startle the community, and lead multitudes to exclaim, what are we coming to? The answer seems plain. The world is hastening to its destiny. Prophecy is fulfilling, history completing. The kingdoms of this world are being disorganized, that they may become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ. The nations are filling up the cup of their iniquities, which shall turn in their hands into the cup of the Lord's fury. Leaders of false religions are binding upon their followers heavy burdens and grievous to be borne, which are designed to be thrown back with crushing weight upon their own heads. Communities are laying up for themselves "wrath against the day of wrath; and revelation of the righteous judgment of God," and individuals, sinning with a high hand against knowledge and love, are provoking the Almighty to a just retribution. Let the Lord's people be awake, zealous, and active for the Master, vigilant and uncompromising against evil, waiting for his appearing, by the brightness of whose coming the man of sin is to be finally destroyed.—Advocate and Guardian.

TO THE BRN. AND SRS.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS. IN CHRIST:—Are we willing to do what we can to inform and arouse our fellows of the approaching judgment? If so, there are various ways in which we can do so. Some, by preaching the unsearchable riches of Christ, the coming kingdom, the reward of the righteous, the destiny of the wicked, and the nearness of that great event. Others, by writing and scattering tracts; others, by giving of their means that the good Lord has put into their hands as stewards, for the promotion of his truth.

My labors for the year past have been mostly in entirely new places, where Advent preaching was a novelty; questions often being asked, What do Adventists believe? and a general inquiry for knowledge in relation to the things pertaining to our faith. I have traveled hundreds of miles without finding or hearing of any of like precious faith, in the State of Pennsylvania. Having also felt the necessity of having some one go into certain regions with a tent, but having failed thus far, and finding the results of the Wayne Co. Tent, N. Y., so good, I have again taken courage by going to see the tent-maker in Rochester, N. Y., and find that I can get a tent 40x60, all ready for erection, except masts and stakes, for $327. I therefore propose to my brethren and sisters the privilege of taking stock in the enterprise of having a tent the coming season in N. W. Pennsylvania, praying the blessing of God to attend the enterprise.

To those who are willing to assist in the matter, I would say, please send in your pledges to me at Lincolnville, Crawford Co., Pa., or to the Crisis Office; said pledges to be paid by the first of April or May, 1873, as the tent-maker would like to make it this winter. Therefore I should be glad to hear from the Lord's stewards as soon as possible, so as to give the order in time.

H. W. BEECHER gives some brief advice to those who write letters to busy people. "1. Don't write at all. 2. When you can't help it, be sharp, short and legible. 3. When you write on your own business, pay for the answer. 4. When you want money, don't begin with piety or flattery. Beg first and be pious afterwards. 4. Don't beg of any one with whom you are not personally acquainted. Die, but don't beg."

IT is no small commendation to manage a little well. He is a good wagoner that can turn in a little room. To live well in abundance, is the praise of the estate, not of the person. I will study more how to give a good account of my little, than how to make it more.—Bishop Hall.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, Aug. 22d, 1872, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

THE LAST DAYS.

O. R. FASSETT.

Notwithstanding the clear delineation given in the Scriptures of "the last days," their true character has been much misunderstood, and false impressions prevail because of the wrong and perverse teaching of the age.

The modern ideas which prevail, taking their cast from a corrupt theology, are that "the last days" will consist in a millennium of peace, righteousness and holiness among the nations, wherein there will be no perils of any description, no wars or rumors of wars, no vices or crimes; but there will be a pacific, holy and perfect state on earth. This is the fabled "good time coming," "the golden age," looked for by thousands on thousands both in the church and out of it. The scriptural description, however, is far different from this imaginary state. "This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away. For of this sort are they which creep into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts, ever learning, and never able to come to a knowledge of the truth. Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth: men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith." 2 Tim. 3: 1–8.

What a graphic description of a fallen, apostate humanity is here drawn by this bold apostle of the Gentiles, Paul. And how we see the portraiture in the present state of society! Verily he wrote under the illuminating influence of the Holy Spirit of God when he penned these remarkable words in description of the last days fulfilled before our eyes.

The pulpit, platform, and the press, still continue to predict in the face of all this state of things before us, and which cannot be denied in a single particular, that there is yet to come a period and state of universal blessedness and perfection among the nations of men on this planet, and in time. But they will have to learn (these modern prophets, who "prophesy out of their own hearts; and have seen nothing"; these "blind leaders of the blind"), that "evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived," until finally this world will end in complete apostasy from God,—when sin, unrighteousness, discord, malice and crime shall abound, and lead to indiscriminate violence and carnage. As the Spirit is grieved and withdrawn, and the gospel is rejected, then will the apocalyptic vision be fulfilled of "blood even unto the horse bridles," and a whole age of men shall pass away under the judgments of the Most High.

The church and world are at a loss to account for the present state of moral degeneracy, and the existing prevailing state of corruption in society at large, so different from what they have predicted and anticipated in their boasted visions of the world's progress; and they are perplexed also to explain the entangled state of things with their predictions and hopes. The christian ministry and christian press veil as much as possible the real state of the world, and put a false gloss upon all christian effort, in pride magnifying their puny success, and lauding their aims and purposes and influence, as still competent to win the world to Jesus, notwithstanding the increasing odds against them; and their pride and formality. The secular press, more honest, publish and bring to the public gaze the real state of things, but is hopeful that "the carnival of crime" and infidelity will yet give way to a better judgment, and the prevalence of righteousness, honesty and peace, in due time.

But why not at once be disabused of the error into which Christendom has fallen, and be undeceived before it be too late, and not look for good when evil comes, and for prosperity when calamity and judgment are to fall? Why not see things as God sees them, and "walk in the light as God is in the light," giving "heed to the sure word of prophecy" relating to the real character of the last days? Why deceive ourselves? There can be no advantage gained; no profit under the sun; or pleasure accrue from this, and from being continually and forever disappointed in our hopes, or what the future is to bring to us.

We should not be blinded to the moral and corrupt degeneracy of the times, by the intellectual development of the age, and think that the world of mankind are growing better because of the increase of knowledge, which is in fact to characterize "the time of the end." Dan. 12: 4.

The moral and religious progress does not keep pace with the intellectualism of the age. Providence has determined that the generation which is to meet God in the judgment shall be an intellectual generation, and so be without excuse. This generation, therefore, which is to be brought face to face with "the Judge of all the earth," and stand before "the great white throne," will be "exalted to heaven" in privilege above others, and thus be without excuse. Men are worse sinners to-day, with the gospel privileges and advantages given them, than in any preceding generation; and the sun never shone upon a generation more responsible and more wicked. If it could be said to the cities in the days of Christ, "Woe be unto thee; for if these mighty works had been done in Sodom, Tyre, and Sidon, they would have repented," what shall be said of "the cities of the nations" in our day? Will not all the generations of the former ages rise up in judgment and condemn them? Surely they will.

"We are living, we are dwelling,
In a grand and awful time;
In an age on ages telling,
To be living is sublime."

"The last days" have come. We are not in the infancy of time, but in time's old age; and his hoary locks and decrepitude give evidence of speedy decay and death. "Six thousand years are nearly past" since man was driven from Paradise, and Eden was cursed. The time has come for "the restitution." We are not in the beginning of the last dispensation of mercy. The gospel day is closing; its evening sun is setting to rise no more o'er the nations. The "Sun of Righteousness" himself will soon rise over our benighted world, and with that coming dawns the endless immortal day, which shall know no night of sin, sorrow, weeping, or death; and "there will be no more curse."

As a vessel at sea is in far greater danger as it nears the coast of its desired haven, specially amidst prevailing storms, from the presence of shoals, quicksands, and rocks; so now are we in far greater danger of shipwreck, and the loss of all dear to our immortal interests, than in the ages past, however perilous the times. "What meanest thou, O sleeper?" Awake from your slumbers. Look out for breakers! Look out for "perils"—the "perils" of "the last days." "Thus saith the Lord God, An evil, an only evil, behold, is come. An end is come, the end is come; it watcheth for thee; behold, it is come. O thou that dwellest in the land, the time is come, the day of trouble is near. Behold the day, behold, it is come; the morning is gone forth; the rod hath blossomed, pride hath budded, violence is risen up into a rod of wickedness. The time is come, the day draweth near; let not the buyer rejoice, nor the seller mourn; for wrath is upon all the multitude thereof. All hands shall be feeble, and all knees shall be weak as water—all of them mourning, every one for his iniquity." Ezek. 7.

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. A. Cleaveland.

Bro. Grant:—I have been thinking for some time past that we are very near the time when Jesus is to come to take his children home. Perhaps he will come in 1873. I cannot say he will not; although it has always seemed to me that when one of his children knew the time, all would know it. I think our work as ministers will then be done, as Noah's was when God told him to come into the ark. It is a very solemn thought. Brethren talk and ministers preach the speedy coming of Jesus, and we preach it also, and believe it is so; we have no doubt in regard to it; yet all this will not save us. We cannot be all covered up in the world, going headlong into all the speculations of life, completely swamped in business, and be much engrossed at the prayer-meeting once a week. It is almost impossible to get many, who profess to be expecting that day is just upon us, to say anything about it. Many are in a condition where they will rack their ingenuity to find fault with their brethren. It seems to me sometimes as though the entire professed church were bound to go to destruction. But, thank God, there are a few at their post, and they not only love Jesus, but they love one another.

It has been my privilege of late to visit some of this class in Woodbury, Marshfield, and Cabot. There is a little salt in each of these places, although few in number to what they were in past days. It makes one's heart sad to look back to the days of their prosperity, when the lamp was in full blaze, now all divided and sub-divided. We all ought to remember that none but the pure in heart can see God. Those who follow peace with all men will be saved. May God help us to look after this matter more earnestly.

I am in Morrisville, Vt., preaching this everlasting gospel to all who feel disposed to hear me. For the last year we have had some reformation in this place. Some have been reclaimed from a backslidden state, others converted to God, and many have renounced the hell-fire doctrine and embraced the truth of the Bible. They have been led to see that the wages of sin is death, instead of life in hell-fire; and that the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ, instead of our getting it through Adam, or by our having an immortal soul breathed into us when we were born.

The truth we preach at this place is not popular; the greater part of the people do not like it; yet we have our share of hearers, and we feel to thank God and to give him all the glory for what he has done in this place, in opening the eyes of so many to see the truth on the immortality question. All who have got light exclaim, "My Bible seems like a new book." They wonder why they have not seen it before.

My faith never was stronger in the truth than it is to-day. I seldom see any of the old Advent brethren. We are one side of where the truth of the soon coming of Jesus is preached much. I am breaking up a little new ground. When we came here one year ago, there was not one that fully believed the truth; but, thank God, to-day there are quite a number who know the truth and love it; and we expect, if Jesus comes in 1873, we shall with a little flock be caught up to meet him in the air; or, if he tarry longer, we will try to be ready.

From Bro. H. B. Sevey.

Bro. Grant:—Since my last letter to the Crisis, I have held meetings in Dexter Village, Me., with Bro. Rines. Found a few brethren and sisters striving for the kingdom of God. Our meetings were thinly attended, as there was much prejudice against our faith, and the place of worship was not what could be desired. Our meetings commenced Thursday evening, continuing over Sunday. We did the best we could, and left the event with God. Bro. J. Carr was with us part of the time.

With Bro. Rines commenced meetings in Palmyra, Tuesday evening, Oct. 22nd. This was a new field for our faith. Had very good attendance, with good interest to hear. Some were quickened, others convicted that we had the truth, and were blest. I left Bro. Rines to labor a few evenings with them, as our conference was to commence in Vienna the 31st of Oct.; and as it was in my neighborhood, it was my duty to be there. Several came to the first meeting. The rainy weather prevented many from coming. The first part of our meeting was not as lively as common for us in this vicinity. Some kept back when asked forward for prayers, when they confessed that it was their duty. The good Spirit was with us in power. Some received a blessing they never enjoyed before. Sinners came forward also. Four made a start for the kingdom. All praise to Jesus. Bro. G. W. Brown, Rhodes and Doughty were with us to help preach the word.

Mt. Vernon, Me.

Bro. Thos. J. Green writes from Olustee, Fla., Oct. 22nd, 1872:—"I have just returned from a very important field, which has just been opened to me. It has originally been occupied by the Baptists, but by some means they have opened their doors to me. I went among them with the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. They heard gladly. I preached ten times. The result is, the most pressing invitation has been given for me to preach for them, signed by twenty-six of the most prominent citizens, a portion of whom are Baptists, and one minister."

THINGS WORTH REMEMBERING.

Solomon says—"He that hath pity upon the poor, lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given, will He, the Lord, pay him again." Prov. 19: 17. "He that giveth unto the poor, shall not lack, but he that hideth his eyes, shall have many a curse." 28: 27. "Whoso stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry himself, but shall not be heard." 21: 13. "He that hath a bountiful eye shall be blessed; for he giveth of his bread to the poor." 22: 9.

Dear brethren and sisters, our Savior says—"The poor ye have always with you; and when ye will, ye may do them good." Let us remember his words, and also those of Solomon; if we wish to be blessed of the Lord, and at last saved with all the redeemed on the earth renewed. O that beautiful world! We long to be there, where no sorrow or care can disturb that sweet heavenly rest.

Obituaries.

Marston. Bro. Willard S. Marston fell asleep in Jesus, Oct. 25th, at his residence in Rye, N. H., aged seventy years.

Seldom have I heard such unqualified commendation of departed worth, as that bestowed on this brother beloved in Christ. He was converted in 1835, among the Methodists; but as his mind expanded and his scriptural knowledge advanced, he attached himself to the Christian Church, where he became their honored deacon. But on hearing the doctrine of the gospel system's triumph in our world, by Christ's second coming, he became identified with the Adventists, and remained a prominent "pillar" among them until his death. He was ever in his place, and faithful to his duty in the social and more public meetings of the church, so that the brethren mourn his loss; as to human view it seems irreparable. But they bow to the divine will, and cleave more firmly to God's gracious promise—"As thy day is, so shall thy strength be." Every one had a word of commendation for Bro. Marston. "As a citizen, a neighbor, and a christian, he was the best man I ever knew. I lived with him twenty years, and knew him as the best of men," said one—the nephew and adopted son of the deceased. "He was one of our best citizens," said the Justice of the Peace. "He was a man of sound judgment, and it seemed as if every word weighed a pound." His fellow townsmen distinguished him by placing him in positions of honor and responsibility, as selectman and appraiser of the property of the town. Yet his home was the centre of his most affectionate regards. His beloved wife, his adopted son and heir, and his son's son (now a cripple) were, with their beloved associates, the objects of his love and tender care to the last. He rests in hope of a speedy resurrection to glory, honor, and immortality, in the coming kingdom. The funeral service on John 11: 1-45 was conducted by the writer.

Hill. Died at Delavan, Wis., Sept. 29th, 1872, Miss Carrie Hill, aged forty-one years and seven months.

In very early life she was seriously inclined, but it was not until she was fourteen years old that she embraced Jesus as her Savior. Every power she had she gave to Jesus. During long years she was a sufferer, and while passing through a furnace of no ordinary trial she developed a most beautiful christian character. She rested in Christ with an undoubting trust. For nine months previous to her death she was confined to her room, but through all these days of suffering she never doubted her heavenly Father's love, with whom she left the matter of life or death. Her end was most serene and beautiful. She fell asleep in Jesus.

She was endowed with an intellect of unusual strength, and left many published articles of great beauty and worth. Living above the world, she did what she could in the world, and died giving up her spirit in faith and resignation to her Father. She sleeps in Jesus, awaiting the voice of the archangel and the trump of God to gather his saints to their promised reward.

D. E. Halteman.

Richardson. Died in Lawrence, Mass., Oct. 14th, 1872, John T. Richardson, formerly of Brunswick, Maine, aged eighty years.

Bro. Richardson seemed to be an Israelite indeed, in whom guile had no place. A quiet, cheerful, reverent, conscientious man, as for him and his house they served the Lord. Converted with his wife in Winthrop, Me., in 1817, for more than fifty years they trod the heavenward way together, and for twenty-nine years he had been numbered among those who wait for the Son of God from heaven. His house was a pilgrim's home, and his household a household of faith.

At the funeral service, brethren of "like precious faith" gathered around his sleeping form, read Job 10: 4; sang—"Mark that pilgrim lowly bending," talked of the hope that cheers the christian's heart; and the next morning his children bore him away to his early home in Winthrop, Me., and laid him beside his deceased wife, to await the coming of the resurrection morn.

H. L. H.

Miller. Fell asleep in Jesus, in Norwalk, O., on the 22d ult., of heart complaint, Sr. Hannah T. Miller, wife of Bro. George Miller, aged sixty-four years and six months.

She made a profession of the Christian religion about fifty years ago, and during all this period she was ever alive to the interests of her Lord. In autumn of 1842 she espoused the faith of the speedy coming of Christ, and subsequently other kindred doctrines, which she maintained to the last. She has left an affectionate husband, who sympathized with her in faith, to mourn her loss. Words of comfort were spoken at her funeral in our chapel, upon the blessed hope of the resurrection, to an attentive audience, by Bro. J. M. Judson. In her the church has lost a strong pillar, a mother in Israel, whose loss will be severely felt. Though dead, she will continue to speak, for her warm and forcible exhortations will be long remembered by saint and sinner.

P. Alling.

Edgerton. Died in Hartland, Niagara Co., N. Y., Aug. 20th, 1872, Martin Edgerton, aged sixty-four years and six months.

His loss is deeply felt by all who knew him, but he rests in hope of eternal life at Jesus' soon appearing. Words of comfort were spoken by C. W. Low, from Rev. 13: 14.

H. R. Tryon.

Wadsworth. Fell asleep in Jesus, at Hiram, Me., Oct. 21st, 1872, Sr. Eva Libbey Wadsworth, wife of Charles Wadsworth, and daughter of the late Bro. Tobias Libbey, of Kezar Falls, Me., aged twenty-five years and six months.

Our sister suffered much in her illness, which was long and distressing, but she endured it with much patience. Her gentle life closed calmly, peacefully, and blessed. She died firm in the faith that she, with a dear father who is sleeping, would soon with the whole family of God on earth be gathered into his heavenly kingdom. Words of comfort were spoken on the occasion of the funeral by Bro. T. W. Piper.

C. H. Hurd.

Young. Died in Lynn, Mass., Sept. 8th, 1872, of typhoid fever, Sr. Calista J., wife of John W. Young, daughter of Aaron and Rhoda Buzzell, aged twenty-seven years, seven months.

She leaves a husband, one child, and a large circle of friends to mourn their loss. She was beloved by all who knew her. She suffered in her last moments, but she bore it with christian fortitude. We mourn, but not like those without hope, for she sweetly sleeps in Jesus. Words of comfort were spoken on the occasion from Luke 20: 36, by the writer.

N. Glidden.

Calef. Died in Meredith, N. H., Aug. 23d, 1872, of heart disease, Bro. Samuel Calef, aged sixty-four years.

He sleeps in Jesus. He is sadly missed, not only by an afflicted companion and children, but by a large circle of friends. He was always ready to give a word of encouragement to any one in trouble. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer.

N. Glidden.

Hurd. Fell asleep in West Parsonsfield, Me., Oct. 25th, Sr. Lizzie Hurd, daughter of Bro. Samuel Hurd, aged about twenty-four years.

Her sickness was long, and at times very severe, and she desired to depart this life and be at rest until the morning comes, when life and immortality shall be given to all the dear ones who are sleeping in Jesus. Words of comfort were spoken on the occasion by Bro. Mark Stevens, from Rev. 14: 13.

C. H. Hurd.

Morrill. Died in Westfield, Vt., Aug. 14th, of paralytic shock, Samuel Morrell, formerly of East Bethel, Vt., aged seventy-three years.

My dear companion with myself embraced the doctrine of the soon coming of the blessed Savior when we heard Father Miller preach. It was his faith to the end. He was always comforted by the reading of the Crisis, which we have taken since it was printed. The funeral exercises by Eld. John Chapman.

A. P. Morrill.

Tucker. Died at Lebanon, Me., Oct. 18th, 1872, Carrie B., only daughter of Geo. W. and Eliza A. Tucker, aged three years and three months.

Of such is the kingdom of heaven. Words of comfort by

Edwin B. Wells.

Washburn. Died in Bethel, Vt., Oct. 6th, 1872, Amelia, wife of Bro. Jonah Washburn, aged sixty-nine years.

THE CHOLERA AT DRESDEN.

London, Nov. 9. Six cases of cholera had appeared in Dresden up to Sunday, and three of them proved fatal. Two of those who died were Americans—a child and a young lady.

Great Fire in London.

LOSS OVER HALF A MILLION OF DOLLARS.

London, Nov. 11., 2 A. M. A terrible fire broke out in this city to-day, causing general destruction and alarm. The flames originated in the extensive mills, and spread with great rapidity. The firemen were quickly on the ground, and were aided in their endeavors to suppress the conflagration by numbers of citizens, but without effect. The mills, together with a number of surrounding buildings, being entirely destroyed. While a number of persons were in a burning building, the walls fell with a terrible crash, carrying everything with them. All those in the building were buried beneath the ruins, and either crushed by falling debris or buried alive, all efforts to save them proving fruitless. The exact number of lives lost is not known, but it is believed that eight or ten persons perished in the burning mass. The fire burned for seven hours before the flames were entirely subdued. The work of removing the bodies commenced, and a large body of workmen are now engaged in the search. The total loss is estimated at over one hundred thousand pounds sterling.

France and Italy.—The expulsion of Prince Napoleon and his wife from France has aroused a very strong feeling against the Government of M. Thiers in the Italian press, and even the Ministerial paper Opinione severely censures the measure as a gratuitous offence to Italy. The Gazetta de Italia says M. Thiers' attempt to explain away "the insult offered to an Italian princess," by assuring M. Vimercati that he did not know the Princess Clotilde was in France with her husband, will deceive nobody, and that all Italy will believe that "he wished to revenge himself on the daughter because he could not strike at the father." "The times are past," pursues the Gazetta, "when insults and excuses could be sent to Italy in the same breath. This is not the way to maintain friendly relations between two kindred races, and M. Thiers may be sure that we in Italy are well aware how low the French nation must have sunk thus to use violence against a woman who commands respect by her virtues and her misfortunes." It is said that M. Thiers has sent further explanations of the matter by telegram to M. Visconti-Venosta, the Italian Foreign Minister, but whatever may be the disposition of the Government, there can be no doubt that the incident has produced a decided coldness towards France among the Italian people. The anti-French articles which were published in the press immediately after the war, and which had almost entirely ceased during the late reaction in favor of France, are now again making their appearance, and all the old grievances against the French Government, such as the presence of the French man-of-war Orenoque at Civita Vecchia, the laying down of mines at the entrance to the Mont Cenis tunnel, and the officious intervention of M. Fournier in the question of the religious corporations are brought up as so many evidences of the unfriendliness and sincerity of M. Thiers' policy.

In Brief.

—The Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, was attacked with a severe illness some few weeks ago, and has left London for the south of France for the benefit of his health.—The alarming spread of foot and mouth disease in England formed the principal topic of a speech delivered by Mr. St. Aubyn, M. P. to his constituents the other day. This gentleman urged the importance of vigorous repressive measures, and quoted statistics to show that the loss in England from the disease would this year amount to between £4,000,000 and £6,000,000.—Scotland is almost as unfortunate as Ireland in a ruined harvest. The past few months have been the wettest ones known since 1816.—The American Consul at Vienna has received under his protection thirty-five Jewish families who fled from persecution in Wallachia. A subscription has been opened at the consulate to enable the exiles to emigrate to this country.—A Bourbon petition to the National Assembly is in circulation in France, praying for the restoration of that unfortunate dynasty.—It is stated that the President in his annual message will recommend the repeal of such portions of the Ku-Klux laws as are very oppressive, and he will pursue a conciliatory policy toward the South.—A terrible drouth prevails in northern Wisconsin. The ground, and everything on it, is parched and dry, and the woods are ready for a great conflagration, unless rain falls copiously.—Rev. Mr. Stanley, Episcopal minister in Savannah, Georgia, has made arrangements for Sunday evening services in the theatre. Lectures are to be delivered to the young men of the city. The Bishop of the Diocese approves of the movement and will lecture as often as he can. Whether other denominations co-operate is not stated.—The headquarters of John Allen, once famous as "the wickedest man in New York," have been opened as an institution to aid poor men desirous to reform. Dr. Hall, Dr. Murray, and Rev. Mr. Tyng took part in the services marking their consecration to their new purposes.

LINES.

S. S. CRISTMAN.

"And so shall we ever be with the Lord."—PAUL.

While we linger here in sadness,
In this world of death and sin,
Scarcely knowing joy or gladness,
Where our Jesus once has been,
Where his weary feet once wandered
O'er the path we all must tread,
Till on Calvary he suffered
Ere he rested with the dead;

We are cheered by that great promise
He unto his loved ones gave,
First of his own resurrection,
Then their life beyond the grave;
While with grief our hearts are bursting
O'er the graves of those we love,
And our souls for peace are thirsting,
Jesus sends it from above.

Bless his holy name forever,
He our griefs and pangs must know,
Great high priest of ours, oh, never
Shall the fountain cease to flow;
He the first fruits, we the harvest,
Who unto the end endure,
To our rest in heavenly mansions
All his promises are sure.

We shall meet, but not to sever,
Far beyond this vale of tears,
We shall meet to part, oh, never,
Through the endless age of years.
Blessed Jesus! yes, we've seen him,
Not by faith alone, but sight;
As did God's own prophet Daniel,
In the visions of the night.

NEWS FROM ENGLAND.

(From our English Correspondent.)

THE WORK IN ENGLAND.—"A SCOURGE OF SMALL CORDS."—REFORMATION IN THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.—A HEBREW MS.—RITUALISTIC CONVIVIALITY.—THE POPE'S SPEECHES.—EXTRACT FROM WESLEY.

Yesterday, being Sunday, we were enabled to serve our Lord Christ in public testimony to his praise and our joy. Your correspondent preached in the afternoon on "the exceeding knowledge," showing that a knowledge of Christ, as the Son of God, and the sacrifice for our sins; the knowledge of Christ in the sense of being assimilated to him, having Christ in us; and the knowledge of Christ, in being transformed in person to his image at his coming, was the most excellent knowledge. It benefitted infinitely and eternally. It gave eternal life—the holy, happy, serene life of God. In the evening Bro. G. A. Brown preached on Paul's determination to "know nothing among men save Christ, and Him crucified." The Lord greatly used our brother, and honored himself and his servant. The congregations were not large, but those present were very attentive, and we are still exceedingly hopeful of great results. Should but a few dozen honest, earnest men be called out to know the rich grace of God, we shall feel amply repaid. One of the principal features of our meeting last evening was the singing of a sweet American tune and hymn, "We'll stand the storm." If our Lord enable we expect to sing a new one every evening. Thus we shall bring with oneness of expression our English and American brethren. The campaign is now fairly opened. We have taken a room for all this week, and have issued the following bill:—

"In the name of our Lord Jesus Christ."
YOUNG MEN'S READING ROOM, opposite Chalker's Furniture Store, Maiden Street, Weymouth.
Lectures on Prophecy will be delivered (D. V.) by Geo. A. Brown and Wm. Kellaway (servants of Jesus Christ), every evening during the week, commencing Monday, Oct. 21st, at half-past seven P. M.
SUBJECTS. Monday—Prophecy, and its use to the Church. Tuesday (at 7 o'clock)—The great Symbolic Image. Wednesday (at the Belle Vue Assembly Rooms)—The fall of Babylon the Great. Thursday—The ten Horns and the ending of the Papacy. Friday—The Signs of the Times. Sunday afternoon (at the Belle Vue Assembly Rooms—The Soul—What is it? Sunday evening, at the same rooms—The Judgment of the Great Day.
Meetings every Sunday at 3 and 6½ P. M., and Wednesdays at 7½ P. M., at the Belle Vue Assembly Rooms. Other speakers will preach, if the Lord will. "Whosoever will, let him come."
No seat rents; no box begging; no reserved seats. Hymn books provided. All heartily welcomed.

If our Lord will send in a people prepared to hear, and aid our infirmities so that we may speak his word clearly and energetically, in the force of the Holy Spirit and much assurance, we know good must be accomplished. The people ask us as we go about what denomination we are preaching for—who pays us—how we get a living, etc., and do not seem to understand the meaning of the words: (1) "Trust in the Lord"; (2) "and do good"; with the promise—(1) "So shalt thou dwell in the land"; and (2) "Verily thou shalt be fed." But we are made ensamples through grace of faith in our Lord, so that we are able to preach, "Have faith in God," "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ."

We have calls to go out into "the region beyond," into poor country places, where farm laborers only get from $2.00 to $2.50 or $3.00 per week, without board or lodging; but we shall go, and in the name of our God set up our banners. Let there be mighty wrestling for us, for we are facing deeply-rooted prejudices and proud imaginations. If any of our brethren wish us to send tracts or books to any of their English friends or relatives, let them send us their names and addresses to our central depot, 26 St. Thomas Street, Weymouth, England.

BROTHER A. KESTER,

Of Hull, Yorkshire, in the righteousness of his Lord, has made a "scourge of small cords," to whip those who though professing the name of Christ, do greatly dishonor him by getting up fairs, raffles, bazaars, parties, socials, etc., in aid of his cause (wicked presumption!) The castigation he would administer is purely for their profit, that they might learn to work righteousness. But I pass the "scourge" into your hands, that you might exhibit in your columns its fourteen strings.

BAZAARS FOR RELIGION: WHAT ARE THEY?
"A scourge of small cords."—JOHN 11: 14.
OR FOURTEEN ANSWERS TO THE ABOVE QUESTION.

Ans. 1st. A scheme for making God beg the patronage of the devil.
" 3rd. A church-egg hatched by the world.

THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

has come to the conclusion that it is time to reform in some of its drinking customs, and it is refreshing to learn from a responsible organ that the late Synod of the United Presbyterian church, when considering the temperance question, strongly urged upon all the office-bearers and members of the church the propriety of discountenancing the drinking customs which prevailed, and more especially the practice of drinking and toasting at ordination services, and of drinking at funerals. The end of the paragraph reads well, as follows—"The recommendation has been observed at many ordination services."

A FIND.

I do not know whether the following is old to you. At least I have not seen it in American weeklies, so I have ventured to send it. It may be of use to antiquarians; and I know if God should cause by it more light to break forth to us out of his word, it will be a good "find."

"A find, which may turn out to be an interesting one, has been made by Dr. Grant, of the American Mission at Cairo, in the shape of a Hebrew MS. of portions of the Bible. It was found in a synagogue in the neighborhood of Cairo, reported to have been built forty-five years before the second temple was destroyed. It was carefully deposited in a niche in the wall, ten feet above the ground, and had to be secured by means of a ladder. Portions, at least, of the MS., which still awaits proper examination, are supposed to be very old."

"THE ROCK."

A doughty religious weekly prints on its quarto page the following "copy" of a bill:—

"RITUALISTIC SOCIALITY.—The following is a copy of a handbill circulated in a district near Regent's Park, under the charge of a well known ritualistic clergyman:—On Thursday evenings, throughout the winter, our Girl's School will be open to all members of the S. Mary Magdalene's Society, from 8.30 to 10 P. M. Chess, draughts, papers, etc. Women are invited to bring their work (but not their babies) with them. They will be able to get tea and bread and butter at a small charge. Men are invited to bring their pipes and tobacco, and to send out for beer, if they like. God save the Queen! EDWARD STUART."

This is a specimen of ritualistic "fellowship." Any one might see it is quite distinct from the "communion of saints," and the work of the friends of Jesus. It savors of the conviviality expressed in topers' terms, thus—"Hale fellows, well met." And yet this is the nineteenth century Christianity, or is what it sanctions. O what will not Christ say to it when he comes? Will any words be too rough? He will certainly rebuke them sharply in the heat of his displeasure.

A LETTER

from Rome states "that a priest there has just published a collection of the speeches delivered by the Pope since the 20th of September, 1870, the date of the overthrow of the temporal power. The collection fills an octavo volume of five hundred and fifty pages. Most of the speeches are directed against the Italian government. The calculation is made that the Pope in the last two years has spoken at twenty times greater length than in all the previous years of his pontificate."

We should think it might pay an enterprising publisher to render the above in English. It would probably not only pay him, but be a great service to the cause of truth. We should be glad to have copies ourselves, and aid in its circulation.

WESLEY.

Reading one of John Wesley's sermons, I was struck with the blunt pungency of the following paragraph, which I copy:—

"Supposing a young man, having finished his studies at the university, is desirous to minister in holy things, and accordingly enters into orders. What is his intention in this? what is the end he proposes to himself? If his eye be single, his one design is to save his own soul, and them that hear him; to bring as many sinners as he possibly can out of darkness into marvellous light. If, on the other hand, his eye be not single—if he aim at ease, honor, money, or preferment—the world may account him a wise man, but God says unto him, 'Thou fool!' And while the light that is in him is thus darkness, how great is that darkness! One peculiarly dedicated to the God of heaven to mind earthly things! A mere worldly clergyman is a fool above all fools—a madman above all madmen. Such vile, infamous wretches as these, are the real ground of the contempt of the clergy. Indolent clergymen, pleasure-taking clergymen, worldly-loving clergymen, praise-loving clergymen, preferment-seeking clergymen,—these are the wretches that cause the order in general to be contemned; these are the pests of the Christian world—the grand nuisance of mankind—a stink in the nostrils of God. Such as these were they who made St. Chrysostom to say—'Hell is paved with the souls of Christian priests.'"

If John Wesley should appear among us to-day, I wonder how many of these "vile, infamous wretches"—these "pests" and "nuisances" he would find? O, the answer!

W. K.

WHO ARE READY?

C. B. BARNES.

"Lift up a standard for the people."—ISA. 62: 10.

Why lift up a standard? Because "the Lord hath proclaimed to the end of the world, Say ye to the daughter of Zion, Behold, thy salvation cometh; behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him."

In a previous article, I have set forth what I think is a correct statement in regard to sanctification; that is, as far as sanctification is an act to be performed on the part of men. It is an act in which the individual fully, completely makes a dedication of himself and his all to God, and which should be made when he firsts enters upon his service. This point I think was made clear in the prior article alluded to above—the object of the present one is to inquire who among the many professors of religion have thus consecrated themselves?

The title asks, Who are ready? Ready for what? Ready for the coming of our Lord. It is said in Scripture that when the marriage supper of the Lamb is come, the bride, the Christian church, will have made herself ready. Rev. 19: 7. It is worthy of notice that the readiness is said to have been attained when the time of the supper arrives, so of this we may be certain, that in whatever it consists it must be a state in which the church is to live, prior to this glorious consummation of all her hopes. This condition of readiness is described by Paul in his letter to Titus. Christ "gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." Chap. 2: 14. Here it is described as a state in which the subject is "zealous of good works," purified unto Christ, and redeemed from all iniquity. Blessed, thrice blessed condition!

The condition in which the church is to be in order to be in a state of readiness is further described in Ephesians. Christ gave himself for the church, "that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish." Chap. 5: 26, 27. Here the church is cleansed, without spot or wrinkle or any such thing, holy, and without blemish. These two passages bring to view a very high and exalted state of grace. It is useless to say they refer solely to the condition of the redeemed in glory, for the Revelator says that when the time for the marriage supper arrives the church will have made herself ready, bringing to view an act completed at that time.

Here is where we lack; not in knowledge of the Scriptures, not in zeal to disseminate our views, but in the spirituality which is necessary to adorn our profession. If as a people we were ever fully consecrated to the Lord, with all upon the altar; if sinful indulgences of all kinds were ever abstained from by us as a whole, we have sadly departed from that condition. The reason why the doctrine of holiness or sanctification is being urged so much of late upon the church is, because it is self-evident that it is not in that condition at present.

Brethren, the church needs to repent! If men be saved when Christ comes they must be in that condition which will render them worthy of his salvation. I do not mean by this that they of themselves can render themselves worthy, but inasmuch as Christ has come to earth for the very purpose of enabling his people to attain this condition, they are culpably negligent if they fail to attain it.

Brethren, if at conversion you consecrated your all to God, and have since withdrawn in part from your covenant, I pray you renew it at once. If you have never made this full consecration of yourself, then know that it is demanded of you; know that you are to love the Lord with all your heart, mind and strength, and that nothing is to be permitted to intervene between you and his full approval. To be thus doing is to be ready; to be not thus doing is to be not ready. Brethren, who are ready?

NON-ESSENTIALS.

M. H. MORRISON.

I confess it may appear assuming on my part to present views differing from those of some who have much more talent and learning than myself, yet I would beg leave to offer the following remarks; and would do so in love, and for the truth's sake.

Non-essentials, and think, and let think, etc., sound in my ears as if no rule were left to the church. But let us hear the rule God has given her to judge between truth and error. 1 John 4: 6—"We are of God; he that knoweth God heareth us [the apostles]; he that is not of God heareth not us. Hereby know we the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error." And in no part of the sacred volume will be found the contrary.

We do believe in the church of Christ there is no room for human contrivance to devise. "The law of God is perfect." Every truth the disciples of Christ are bound to believe, and every duty they ought to practise, is clearly and explicitly devised by God's wisdom; and every other contrivance and device of the most sage and learned of men, is by the King of Zion denominated vain. "In vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Matt. 15: 9. In Moses' day it was enjoined on him to see to it that he reared the tabernacle "according to the pattern showed to him in the mount." Heb. 8: 5. There was nothing connected with the Old Testament church left to the choice or discretion of any man, or body of men, and he must have read the New Testament to little purpose who fancies that this principle is relaxed.

In the beginning of our race, when the happy pair walked in the garden free from all sin, we understand it was itself a very simple command God gave them, to test their obedience, much more so than some gospel requirements, counted these "non-essentials," merely to have taken a little fruit from a tree and eaten it. But the sin lay not in the fruit. The awful crime was disobedience to so great and mighty a God.

Then when we see that disobedience in so small a matter brought the curse on our fallen race, how is it that so many will trifle with the word of God, and make out most of its merciful requirements "non-essentials"? And to such I would put the question—Has the Lord God spoken to us in the Bible, or has he not? Has he declared to us the dangerous state of all out of that way? Then let us consider well what we believe and how we speak. Not as some who lately asked me if I condemned those who could not see baptism, if good, pious christians? My reply was—It is not my place either to justify or condemn, but to adhere to the admonition of Paul—"Judge them that are within," and leave those without to the judgment of God. And to give credit to this professed piety, makes it the test, in place of obedience to the requirements of the gospel, God's unerring rule, which says—"He that saith I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him." 1 John 2: 4. And God by the prophet Isaiah (chap. 52) says—"The watchmen [the apostles] shall see eye to eye," which they began to do on the day of Pentecost, the beginning of the dispensation of the Spirit; by which Spirit the whole family of Christ is made of one mind. And Paul shows where there are divisions it is carnal, and we walk as men (1 Cor 3: 3); and in no sense of the word will that Spirit draw one into one view, and another into another view. This would be making God to contradict himself. 1 Tim. 2: 13.

So we cannot agree with the conflicting popular views of charity, in believing all creeds equally safe, provided those who adopt them respectively are sincere. In this abused sense of the word, an individual is charitable precisely in proportion to his or her indifference to revealed truth; uncharitable in this disposition to earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints. The devil, doubtless, has an agency in propagating this perversion of the word, because it has a powerful influence in promoting the spread of error.

True charity loves God and his truth; it considers God as really dishonored when his truth is assailed, as when his name is profaned. It therefore as firmly opposes the teaching of error as the advocate of immortality. None do so much mischief in the world, and none are so difficult to reclaim, as those who have learned to sin conscientiously. Charity is not blind. She does not believe all are going into the kingdom; but she seeks to induce them to go. She does not believe that every path will lead to the kingdom of heaven, but points men to the straight and narrow way. Our Savior has said—"Ye shall know the truth; and the truth shall make you free."

I know I have the truth; therefore I cannot say with some—"Who knows who is right, and who is wrong?" And, reader, if it is your position, what will you say for yourself when you meet your Judge face to face? Will it do for you to say you could not understand it? Stop now, I entreat of you. Go no longer on in this state of mind. The world evidently has more place in your heart than God and his word. For he says—"Incline thine ear unto wisdom, and apply thine heart to understanding. Yea, if thou criest after knowledge, and liftest up thy voice for understanding; if thou seekest her as silver, and searchest for her as for hid treasures; then shalt thou understand the fear of the Lord, and find the knowledge of God."

COME!

MINA WALKER.

"Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."—REV. 22: 17.

Thus the Savior of the world leaves his last message upon record at the close of the Book of the New Testament, which was purchased by blood. It commences with—"peace on earth good will to men," which fell like balm upon the hearts of the shepherds, after anarchy and strife, darkness and death. The day-star has risen; faith has changed to sight, hope to glad fruition. A child is born. The Messiah so long foretold has come. For thirty-three years, he went in and out among his own. How precious the record of his every day deeds of love and compassion, whether upon the sunny slopes of Olivet feeding the hungry multitude, by the pool of Siloam, anointing blind eyes; arresting the funeral train and raising to life the only son of a widow; or walking upon the storm-tossed waves of Gennesaret. Some heart felt less sorrow, some burden was lighter; joy followed in his train.

But the grandest work was yet undone. We have yet to pause at Gethsemane, yet to read of groans and tears, of mocking soldiers and crown of thorns; of a rugged cross; of cruel nails; of thirst, agony, and death; a pall of darkness, of stricken disciples, without a Shepherd.

Again the cloud is lifted. We hear him exclaim—"I am he that liveth and was dead, and, behold, I am alive forevermore." He has risen, and brought immortality to light. The debt is paid, the atonement complete. He has ascended on high as our Mediator until the consummation of all things. In him is life, and joy, and peace; out of him is corruption and death. He has made provision for all.

What the first Adam lost the second Adam redeemed. How full and free his salvation. He has compared it to water, that bubbles up out of the rock in the wilderness, and goes leaping along by the roadside, or tumbling and roaring in the cataract; everywhere present, plenty for all; nothing to do but drink.

There is but one condition,—"whosoever will." Whosoever includes all; none need think it is not for them. No matter how fallen, or far from God; it reaches into the lowest den of infamy, into the streets and lanes, cellars and garrets, into the gutters and rumshops. The poor in their destitution may drink and become rich, for "whosoever shall drink of the water I shall give him, shall never thirst again; it shall be in him a well of water, springing up unto everlasting life."

O the riches of his grace! "Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." Will you take it? It is free; it saves completely; makes new creatures; softens hard hearts; takes out pride, envy, malice, hatred, variance; gives peace and joy, love toward all; destroys the appetite for strong drink; makes fire on the hearth, and food for the hungry children in the drunkard's home; puts praises where curses were before. Will you take it? It has a hold on eternal life. You can have it if you will.

Jesus saves to-day. I am glad to have his mercy to offer you; but he is coming back very soon, to bring in eternal life and set up his kingdom, and reign on the earth. Too late then to find pardon. The unalterable decree will have gone forth—"He that is filthy, let him be filthy still." Too late? Mercies slighted, opportunities neglected, will only mock then. "Now is the accepted time." If you hear his voice, "harden not your hearts."

It is so free, how will you escape if you neglect to accept it? What excuse can you bring? It meets all your needs here; makes rough places plain; trials lighter; sorrows less poignant; comforts the bowed down, and in the end gives eternal life, sorrows, sickness and want are unknown; where tears are forever wiped away. O happy day! Will you be there, dear reader? Accept Jesus to-day. To-day begin to drink at the fountain of his love; to-day taste of his fulness, his power to save. To-day by faith grasp his bleeding hand extended to you, and trust to his guidance. Here a few trials, then a palm, a robe, and crown. Here a short thorny way; then golden streets. Here pain and weariness; there sunny skies and healing leaves. Will you come?

THE HOPE OF THE CHURCH.

The first advent of the Redeemer was the pole-star of hope, under the Old Testament, to the congregation of the Lord whose sacrifices pointed to him that was to come. The second advent is the pole-star of hope, under the New, to the church of God whose sacraments point to him "until he come" again. The prophets of the old economy often preach the second advent without allusion to the first, but never the first without including the second, and this they did without fully comprehending the import of their own message. "Of which salvation the prophets have inquired and searched diligently, who prophesied of the grace that should come unto you; searching what, or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow. Unto whom it was revealed that not unto themselves, but unto us, they did minister the things which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven; which things the angels desire to look into. Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind; be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ." The apostles of the New refer to the first advent as the only basis of christian faith, and to the second as the only object of christian hope.

We trust that we may may not be understood as wanting in due respect to the sacred office, when we suggest that the preaching which leaves out of view this doctrine as the substance of evangelical hope, is not the preaching of the whole gospel; and not only that, but the omission is an ignoring of the best part of the glad tidings. If the church of the old economy looked forward to Christ crucified, and the church of the new look forward to Christ glorified, surely both doctrines should be preached in due proportion, with revelancy and precision of statement. The former is no longer an object of hope, the latter is. And to show the prominence that ought to be given to it in these last days, we have only to refer to the fact that Christ himself spoke sparingly to his disciples of his own death, but frequently and publicly of his second coming. When he commissioned the apostles to preach the gospel, he sent them to proclaim what he had defined to be "the glad tidings of the kingdom," which clearly shows that the dispensation of "the glad tidings" is as different from the dispensation of the kingdom, as the coming of John the herald was different from the coming of Christ the King of righteousness and truth. So, it appears, they understood it; for we learn from the Acts and the Epistles how great a prominence they gave in their preaching to the coming and kingdom of the Lord.

Is it not, then, quite apparent that a doctrine so frequently, variously, and urgently expounded by our Lord and his apostles, a doctrine known historically to have been the guage of orthodoxy in the early age of the Christian church, must be essential to the integrity of the Christian faith? And does not its necessity, as an important part of revealed truth, assert itself in the fact of its being "set before us" didactically, teaching what is the nature and substance of "that blessed hope?" Is it right to overlay it with any thing else we may choose to call the hope of the church? "I trow not."

When we contrast the primitive age of Christianity with its subsequent history, "how has the gold become dim, and the most fine gold changed!" How has the "blessed hope" been obscured by a vicious exegesis of Holy Scripture, suppressing the doctrine that then prevailed, and substituting in its room a barren vagueness of speculation! It is an admitted fact that our doctrine was once the inspiration of the church's life, and that it has not now assigned to it the importance and prominence given it in the Scriptures. The apostasy, of which Paul speaks, first taught that the church is the kingdom of Christ, and the pope his vicegerent; but while the reformation rescued the church from the bondage of ignorance, she yet assumes to be the kingdom, and that we are to look for no other. This is her great mistake.

The evangelical ministry of our day laudably stand by the doctrine of the Godhead of Christ. They do not hesitate to affirm that he who preaches his first advent as a coming for the mere purpose of setting an example of virtue, emasculates the gospel. We agree with them; but think it equally clear that he who preaches the first advent of Christ to suffer, but omits the second, to reign personally where he suffered, mutilates the gospel, though far from intending it; for his second coming, with this intent, is the doctrine of the Scriptures, as we have proved. And if any addition to the proof be required, we refer to his own exposition of the parable of the tares, in which Christ teaches that the present mixture of good and evil will continue until the "harvest home." The battle shall not cease for an hour until his personal coming to destroy the enemy and the conflict together. In the first advent, Godhead was secretly embosomed in manhood; for "in him dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily." In the second advent, manhood shall be conspicuously embosomed in Godhead, for he will then appear as "our great God and Savior." Should we omit to preach the first, we should propagate a false faith; should we omit to preach the second, we should obscure the culminating glory of the gospel. Every act and energy of Christian sentiment, working out into holiness of life, should be expended upon that great fact, made sure to our faith "by two immutable things in which it was impossible for God to lie, that we might have a strong consolation, who have fled for refuge, to lay hold upon the hope set before us." "Seeing we have such hope, we use great plainness of speech," striving to set forth the authority of the Scriptures upon the point in question.

It is well understood that to the heart of the church, as she is now known to the world, the animation of this blessed hope is well nigh entirely wanting. How many hundreds of pulpits are there where it is never spoken of, and whence it is banished as a heresy! How many religious periodicals, professedly devoted to the cause of Christ, are profoundly silent on this subject; or if they notice it at all, it is for the sake of a witticism or a sneer! Never was there an age in which so much "religious machinery," as it is called, has been employed for the conversion of the world; but notwithstanding all, never was there an age since the Reformation more marked for ignorance of doctrinal truth and inaccuracy of evangelical sentiment among the professed followers of Christ. We have only to peruse the various reports upon the state of religion as set forth by the churches of our own land, to see what is the lamentable deficiency of the church in general.

In multitudes of christian families the Bible is not read, and household worship is entirely neglected; and in the most favored portions of Christendom, under the shadow of the walls of her sanctuaries, iniquity abounds. Explain it as we will, there is the indisputable fact. The church, it is true, makes large and commendable efforts in raising funds for the spread of the gospel, and exhibits much zeal in various directions; but explain it as we may, her influence over the masses is on the wane. We may be called "croakers" for this utterance, but our defence is in appeal to existing facts. Conformity to the fashions and pleasures of the world is a notorious blot upon our Christianity, and nothing is to be gained by concealing the truth. Despite of special effort, the Lord's day is horribly desecrated, and all forms of vice seem on the increase. Our daily prints daily chronicle the most astounding wickedness in high places, as well as the vulgarity of crime among the masses.

Surely if the entire world to-day were emancipated from its various forms of heathenism, and the entire state of human society made just like our own, it would be far from being converted to God. By all our popular efforts in this direction, should they realize a complete success, it is not to be supposed that they could effect a moral and religious condition superior to our own. But if by any means in human contrivance the present generation of the world could be actually converted to God, since grace does not flow in the blood, the work would have to be done over again in the third generation. Sin has lost none of its vileness or virulence; Satan is shorn of none of his power; and if Adam's grandchildren became idolaters, the grandchild of this generation, converted to our state of Christianity, would as assuredly apostatize.

How far this state of things, over which the whole church mourns, may be traceable to her errors in doctrine, discipline, or mismanagement, we do not know; but this we do know, that doctrinal preaching is not popular in her assemblies, catechetical instruction is largely laid aside, and she has long been turned away from her true position of looking for the coming of the Lord by false glosses upon his word. The world has not been confronted with "the great and terrible day of the Lord," as a restraint upon abounding wickedness. She has been led to believe that the conversion of the world depended upon her efforts so to popularize Christianity as to overthrow all the prevailing forms and powers of error, and thus bring in a millennium of her own making, which should be the era of "the spiritual reign of Christ," whose return to the world would be only to pass sentence upon the living and the dead, and end the whole by consuming this globe with the fires of annihilation. Believing her theoretical millennium is yet to be realized, and that it will last a thousand years before the coming of Christ, the beginning of which, at the present rate of progress, is not likely to occur before ten thousand years have passed away, it is no wonder that, having substituted such a device for the "blessed hope," she should be left to experience all the ill consequences of a popular delusion.—Selected.

Gems.

— Happy are they who dare venture out in the open streets with the name of Christ upon their foreheads, at a time when so many are ashamed of him, and hide him (as it were) under their cloaks, as if he were a stolen Savior.

— Men will never know us by our faith, for that is within us; they know by our works, which are visible to them.

— In the worst of times there is more cause to complain of an evil heart than of an evil world.

— Instead of asking what people will think or say if you do thus or so, let the inquiry be, what will be the thought or record which God will make?

— Be frank toward others; and do not resent it if they are frank with you. Sanctified frankness is a christian grace. Cultivate it.

— If a man be gracious to strangers it shows he is a citizen of the world; and his heart is no island cut off from other lands, but a continent that joins them.

— It is easy in the world to live after the world's opinion; but the great man is he who, in the midst of the crowd, keeps with perfect sweetness the independence of solitude.

— The spirit of true religion breathes gentleness and affability; it is social, kind and cheerful; far removed from that gloomy, illiberal superstition and bigotry which cloud the brow, sour the temper, deject the spirit, and impress moroseness on the manners.

— Time is short, and if your cross be heavy, remember you have not far to carry it.

THE POWER OF ONE GOOD BOY.—"When I took the school," said a gentleman, speaking of a certain school he once taught, "I soon saw that there was one good boy in it. I saw it in his face. I saw it by many unmistakable marks. If I stepped out and came suddenly back, that boy was always studying, just as if I had been there, while a general buzz and the roguish looks of the rest showed there was mischief in the wind. I learned he was a religious boy and a member of the church. Come what would, he would be for the right.

There were two other boys who wanted to behave well, but were sometimes led astray. These two began to look up to Alfred, and, I saw, were much strengthened by his example. Alfred was as lovely in disposition as firm in principle. These three boys began now to create a sort of public opinion on the side of good order and the master. One boy and then another gradually sided with them. The foolish pranks of idle and wicked boys began to lose their popularity. They did not win the laugh which they used to do. A general obedience and attention to study prevailed. At last, the public opinion of the school was fairly revolutionized; from being a school of ill name, it became one of the best-behaved schools anywhere about, and it was that boy, Alfred, who had the largest share in making the change. Only four or five boys held out, and these were finally expelled. Yes," said the teacher, "it is in the power of one right-minded, right-hearted boy to do that. He stuck to his principles like a man, and they stuck to him."

ALWAYS NEAT.—Some folks are very charming at evening parties, but surprise them in the morning when not looking for company, and the enchantment is gone. There is good sense in the following advice to young ladies:

Your every day toilet is a part of your character. A little girl who looks like a "fury" or a "sloven," in the morning, is not to be trusted, however finely she may look in the evening. No matter how humble your room may be, there are eight things it should contain: a mirror, wash-stand, soap, towel, comb, hair-brush, nail-brush and tooth-brush. These are just as essential as your breakfast, before which you should make good use of them. Parents who fail to provide their children with such appliances not only make a great mistake, but commit a sin of omission.

Look tidy in the morning, and after dinner-work is over improve your toilet. Make it a rule of your daily life to "dress up" for the afternoon. Your dress may not, or need not, be anything better than calico; but with ribbon or some bit of ornament, you can have an air of self-respect and satisfaction, that invariably comes with being well dressed.

A girl with fine sensibilities cannot help feeling embarrassed and awkward in a ragged and dirty dress, with her hair unkempt, should a stranger or neighbor come in. Moreover, your self-respect should demand the decent appareling of your body. You should make it a point to look as well as you can, even if you know nobody will see you but yourself.

SUPPOSE some cold morning you should go into a neighbor's house and find him busy at work on his windows, scratching away, and should ask him what he was up to, and he should reply—"Why, I am trying to remove the frost; but as fast as I get it off of one square it comes on another," would you not say, "Why, man, let your windows alone, and kindle your fire, and the frost will soon come off." And have you not seen people who try to break off their bad habits, one after another, without avail? Well, they are like the man who tried to scratch the frost from his windows. Let the fire of love of God and men, kindled at the altar of prayer, burn in their hearts, and bad habits will soon melt away.—Schoolday Visitor.

Hygiene.

"This is for your Health."—Paul.

HEATING SICK ROOMS.

Where the entire dwelling is heated by a furnace, or by steam, it will probably be unnecessary to have other means of warming the sick room; but the fire-place should be always open, and kept ready for a wood or a coal fire whenever the patient shall express a desire for one. The fire-places are excellent ventilating flues even without a fire, the brisk blaze of which creates a strong ascending current, and continually carries off the ever accumulating exhalations of the sick room.

If there is no fire-place, a window opened a short distance from the bottom, in the room in which the patient is lying, and one let down from the top in the other large room, with the doors opened between the two, will form an effectual draught during any but the warm days of summer, and will not be too strong for the most delicate patient who is protected from the direct draught by the high head-board of the bed. In cold weather the window opened from the bottom will often be found sufficient. On very cold days we may trust to an entire change of air several times each day, effected by raising all the windows for a few moments at a time, during which the patient must be thoroughly protected by extra blankets, and a shawl about the head.

If stoves are the only means of heating the apartments, a "perpetual burner" (coal) may be used in one room to keep both at an even temperature, during day and night, but the sleeping-room should be provided with a wood stove; the brisk blaze in this answering to some extent the purpose of a fire in an open fire-place.

Many lives have been cut short by exaggerated notions in regard to fresh air. Air must be pure, but it should also be warm. To effect this there should be, day and night, a steady but gentle heat in the room of an invalid, accompanied by an equally steady and gentle current of fresh air.—Home and Society, in Scribner's for November.

HYGIENIC DWELLINGS.

The opportunity to live out-doors is a privilege to which every human being is entitled by the nature and necessities of his organization. The pure air of heaven must fan his cheeks, the sunshine brown his skin, and the magnetic currents of the earth thrill his nerves, if he would become mentally, morally and physically capable and normal. Universal instinct, as well as universal experience, attests to the correctness of this idea. What else means life in the country, fishing, hunting, boating, excursions? What else the mortality in cities when compared with that of the country? What else the pale faces of easily fatigued clerks, book-keepers, jewelers, etc?

In-door life is the chief cause of the ennui, nervousness, inactivity and incapacity for exertion which characterize the great mass of the women of the country. While the skin is pale and the blood demagnetized for want of pure air and sunshine, we cannot expect women to compete successfully with men in any of the occupations that require energy of thought or of character. Strength and vigor under such conditions are both contra-indicated and impossible. Where competition is had between a person living in the open sunlight and breathing the unconfined atmosphere, and one shut up in the house, other things being equal, the latter must inevitably be eclipsed.

Woman has rights, we believe, and some which are not recognized and accorded to her by society, but none more important than the right to live and labor out-doors when nature demands it. She may be the equal of man in her natural gifts, but she certainly is not in her developed powers; and one very important reason why she is not, is that she lives in houses much more than men do.

Let every man and woman, therefore, who desires to win power and influence and success, get plenty of out-door life. But the inclemency of the weather will not permit us to remain out-doors all the time. Therefore, we construct houses. Domestic arrangements, as well as many occupations, must be carried on within their walls. It is, therefore, important that they should be constructed on principles which recognize and provide for the out-door influences that are necessary to human health and happiness.—Science of Health.

EXERCISE.

No remedy known to man has such a powerful and permanent influence in maintaining or regaining health as the judicious employment of cheerful, exertive exercise in the open air. If properly attended to in a timely manner, it will cure a large majority of all curable diseases.

When the body is diseased, it is because it is full of diseased, decaying, dead, and useless particles. The object of exercise is to throw off these particles. Every motion of the body, every bend of the arm, every crook of the finger, every feeling, every thought, every breath, is the throwing off of a greater or less proportion of the material body. All muscular motion implies friction, and where there is friction, there must be loss.

In proportion, then, as you exercise, you get rid of the old, useless, or diseased particles of the body; and, by eating plain, nourishing food, you supply new, healthful, life giving particles in their stead. Therefore, every step taken tends to your restoration, provided that step be not taken in weariness or fatigue. The exercise must always be adapted to the strength, and the rule imperative under all circumstances, stop short of fatigue.—Guide-board to Health.

RISE with the sun if you would keep the commandments. The sleep you get before midnight goes to virtue; after sunrise to vice. "It is wise," says Aristotle, "to be up before daybreak, for such habit contributes to health, wealth, and wisdom."

THE FREE GIFT.

GEORGE E. LEE.

"Therefore, as by the offence of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life."—Rom. 5: 18.

We bless thee, Lord, that e'er thy gift
To mortal man was given;
With joy and gratitude we lift
Our thankful eyes to heaven.
To sinners all, the gift is free,
No costly price to give;
The terms are, simply, "Come to me,
Believe, and thou shalt live."

Had not the Father giv'n his Son
To die upon the tree,
Redemption's work would ne'er be done,
And great our loss would be.
But while the world in death was bound,
No hope of life in view,
A pitying Savior then was found,
The Holy, Just, and True.

He came, but not to man condemn,
Nor mortal life secure;
'Twas "life eternal" brought to them,
Whom to the end endure.
This life in God with Christ is hid
And those that in him sleep,
Shall rise immortal, at his bid,
No more to die, or weep.

The shouts of victory then shall be,
"O death, where is thy sting?"
The pure in heart their God shall see,
And dwell with Christ their King.
The golden gates will open stand,
The City's just in view,
And yonder lies the promised land,
For all God's chosen "few."

O sinner, come! "just now" accept,
No longer stay away,
'Tis by the Father thou art kept,
And spared to see this day.
To you he calls, "O wanderer, come,
Be one among the blest,
And thou with them shalt find a home,
And there forever rest."

"BEHOLD, I COME AS A THIEF."

J. E. CLARK.

"Behold I come as a thief; blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked [exposed] and they see his shame."—Rev. 16: 15.

Question. To what does Christ come as a thief? I reply, to the battle of that great day of God Almighty. The subject spoken of in connection with the text is concerning the battle of that great day. The work of the three unclean spirits in this connection, is that of gathering the kings of the earth and of the whole world to this battle, then follows the text. We read under the sounding of the seventh trumpet "the nations were angry." But we do not find an account of this battle till we reach the nineteenth chapter of Revelation. Previous to this account of the battle, all appears to be a preparatory work—the gathering to the final conflict.

I do not suppose the kings of the earth, the beast, and the false prophet, see Christ during the battle of the great day, or that they will know they are fighting against Christ any more than the dragon (brought to view in Rev. 12.) knew he was warring against Michael and his angels. We are not to presume that a literal "sword out of Christ's mouth" is to be employed in this battle. Christ cautions his church to watch, and to keep their garments—that is, to keep far removed from the war spirit that will go from nation to nation. So that whoever shall allow themselves to fall into its current will become defiled, and all those who are not found watching the events and signs of the times this dreadful day will come upon them "as a thief in the night," and they shall not escape; while on the other hand all those who are found watching, will know and escape all those things coming on the earth. That class whose garments are defiled, will be stripped of those garments of meekness which characterize a christian, and thus stripped their shame will appear, because they will be manifest to be destitute of the peaceable spirit of Christ.

But in righteousness does Christ judge and make war. It is a righteous judgment and war. These anti-christian powers have made war on the saints and the truth for centuries, and done it in a most unrighteous manner, but the Lamb, now "King of Kings," maketh war on them, for their violence to his truth and people. He shall destroy them which destroy the earth. Rev. 11: 18—"And they [the kingdoms] shall become like the chaff of the summer threshing floors; and the wind will carry them away, that no place will be found for them." Christ now "treadeth the wine-press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God"; a full description of which had been prophesied of in Isaiah 63: 1–6. And now the time has come. But Christ comes to this battle as a thief, unseen, unknown by his enemies; while they will be the instruments one upon another of executing the judgments and wrath written.

We may illustrate this secret presence of Christ in this battle by the case recorded in 2 Kings 6: 15–17. The king of Syria had sent an army to seize Elisha the prophet. They came, "horses and chariots, and a great host by night" encamped about the city, and got Elisha all hemmed in. And when the servant of the man of God saw the host of the Syrians, he said—"Alas! my Master, how shall we do? And Elisha answered, Fear not, for they that be with us are more than they that be with them. And Elisha prayed that the eyes of his servant might be opened that he might see," and the Lord answered his prayer. And he opened the "eyes of the young man, and he saw and behold the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha." Here we see a great army from heaven, even more for Elisha than they that were against him; but they were there as a thief, invisible to the opposing army, exerting an invincible power, which made the victory sure.

Thus we apprehend it will be in the battle of that great day. Christ and the armies of heaven will be there, though invisible. Christ is represented (Rev. 19: 11) as seated upon a white horse (a symbol of conquest and power, white, denotes purity), "and the armies which were in heaven followed him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean." This language is all symbolical. In the case of the slaying of the first born in the land of Egypt—"For thus saith the Lord, I will pass through the land of Egypt this night, and will smite all the first born in the land of Egypt, both man and beast; and against all the gods of Egypt I will execute judgment. I am the Lord." Ex. 11: 12. No one supposes the Egyptians saw the Lord or any of the heavenly executioners that night the first born was slain. The unseen power struck the Syrian host with blindness, and they were all delivered into the hand of Elisha. The same unseen power did pass through the land of Egypt at midnight, and slew all the first born both of man and beast.

And so we conclude it will be in the last great conflict between Christ and the heavenly armies; though unseen and unknown by the angry nations, yet the destroying power will be most wonderfully felt among them. The great mass on earth will wonder at the mighty judgments of God being poured out. The commencement may be small, and will be increased, and the wicked inhabitants of the earth will exclaim as did the Egyptians—the such was never known in all the land of Egypt before this day. "And out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations; and he shall rule them with a rod of iron"; and the slaughter becomes so great that a call is made to the fowls of heaven—"Come and gather yourselves together unto the supper of the great God." And all the nations will be engaged, and the beast; "and the kings of the earth and their armies were gathered together to make war against Him that sat on the horse, and against his army." There will be a mighty strife between Christ, his church, and the powers of darkness. Christ will prove victorious over all the opposing armies. "And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet. . . These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone."

I believe we are entering upon the dreadful realities of that great day of God Almighty. It may be we have already entered upon that period called "the day of the Lord." Just how much has been fulfilled of the nineteenth chapter of Revelation I am unable to say, but it becomes us to watch and be found on the side of the conquering King of kings.

An interest in the once dying Lamb of God is worth more than all the honors that come from men. What we do for ourselves and our dying fellow men about us, must be done quickly. "Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me to give every man according as his work shall be." Then "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still, and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still." "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city."

HOW TO BE "KEPT."

Not so euphonious a title as might be, but it is the Scriptural idea as expressed in 1 Pet. 1: 5. It is the "abiding" in Christ as mentioned in John's gospel.

Having been cleansed by the Spirit through faith, there is still another thought, and that is how to remain in this condition of purity and to "perfect holiness," or "have our fruit unto holiness." The condition of holiness is not a condition of absolute perfection, as though a person never could be tempted again, or one in which there is no possibility to sin. Jesus was holy and pure all his life, yet he "was tempted in all points like as we are." No one is out of danger from sin in this life, even though he may be pure in all things. Yet the battle ground is no longer inside with indwelling foes, but the inside powers resist outward foes, and this resistance is in the strength of the Lord and the "power of his might," and not by our own will. When the enemy comes in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord lifts up a standard against him. Isa 59: 19.

It is a state of warfare and rest combined We rest in Christ, and Jesus conquers for us and gives us the victory. We "fight the good fight of faith" not the bad fight of works. We "cease from our own works as God did from his." God now works in us to do of his own good pleasure.

Thus, we are "kept by the power of God. through faith." We do not keep ourselves, but God keeps us. Therefore to be kept we must not look to ourselves but "look unto Jesus." We must watch, but it is "watching unto prayer." We do not watch to keep quiet the dispositions of our nature, but we watch to keep out any evil spirit. All within is pure and peaceable, and we need not watch lest evil rise up within, but lest it influence us from without, and thus get within again. This is only done on our part by constant prayer. Prayer is but the utterance or emotion of faith, and by it we keep with God, and then God keeps us.

Again, Christ says, "if ye keep my commandments ye shall abide in my love." John 15: 10. The Spirit of God is not a Spirit of idleness, but of work, and is ever prompting to labor, and duty becomes a privilege, and a labor of love. Any neglect on the part of those in whom the Spirit dwells, to obey its promptings, leaves an open door for the entrance of evil in the flesh, and then the person is not kept in perfect peace. But by prayer and watchfulness on our part, we may be kept by the Spirit free from sinful lusts. Prayer and watching are the fruits of faith, but the fruits of the Spirit are "love, joy, peace, long-suffering." Gal. 5: 22, 23.

Thus we see, in brief, that to be kept, we must continue to exercise the same faith that we did to obtain the keeping power; otherwise we grieve the Spirit and quench its power. As we receive Christ, so we must walk in him. Also, we must watch against outward foes lest they obtain a foothold in the flesh again. Also we must not shrink from any position or occupation the Lord directs for us.

This article is necessarily shortened more than I intended on account of many cares that press upon me at present, but I may yet write more upon this glorious subject, if the Lord will.—Frank Burr, in Advent Christian Times.

Again we stop to answer objections.

Nearly all writers on chronology leave out the eleven years reign of Zedekiah, and commence the "seventy years" with Jehoiakim's captivity. As there is so much authority against me here, I will try and show very clearly why the seventy years captivity cannot begin until after Zedekiah's reign. "And this whole land shall be a desolation, and an astonishment; and those nations shall serve the king of Babylon seventy years. And it shall come to pass when seventy years are accomplished, I will punish the king of Babylon." Jer. 25: 11, 12. This is the prophecy on which that captivity, and all that is said in relation to it, is based. The whole land was to be a desolation. Again—"Them that had escaped carried he away to Babylon, to fulfill the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah, until the land had enjoyed her Sabbaths; for as long as she lay desolate, she kept Sabbath, to fulfill threescore and ten years." 2 Chron. 36: 21. Here, again, we learn that the "seventy years" cover the time during which "the land" should be desolate. If, then, we can learn at what time the land became desolate, we shall know when the seventy years began.

It is assumed by these writers that the land was desolate when Jehoiakim and the principal part of the people were carried away. This, however, is not the time when God understood that the land was made desolate, for he distinctly says that it was not until after Zedekiah's reign. "And Zedekiah, king of Judah, will I give into the hand of the king of Babylon's army, . . . and I will make [in the future] the cities of Judah a desolation without an inhabitant." Jer. 34: 21, 22. So it appears that it was not until after Zedekiah's reign that the land was made desolate.

Now read the story, as told by Jeremiah, and see what God understood by a desolate land, and at what time this desolation was accomplished. Read from the twenty-ninth to the forty-fourth chapters inclusive, and see what became of the remnant of the people after Zedekiah was carried to Babylon, which was in the beginning of his eleventh year.

Those who were left in the land went down to Egypt, "even men and women and children; every person the captain of the guard had left." Jer. 43: 6. And in the second verse of the next chapter, the story is summed up with these words—"Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Ye have seen all the evil that I have brought upon Jerusalem, and upon all the cities of Judah; and, behold, this day, they are a desolation without an inhabitant."

The reason so many chronological writers began this seventy years captivity with Jehoiakim, is found in the following passage—"For thus saith the Lord, After seventy years be accomplished at Babylon, I will visit you, and perform my good word towards you, in causing you to return to this place." Jer. 29: 10. And this is spoken to those who had been carried away prior to Zedekiah's reign. If this passage stood alone, we might infer that this "seventy years," spoken of by Jeremiah, during which the land should be desolate, began with Jehoiakim's captivity. But the positive declaration that the land was not desolate until after Zedekiah's reign, makes such assumption groundless.

God was here telling the children of the captivity "to build houses, and plant gardens," etc., for their stay in Babylon would be long, and not to let false prophets deceive them. He had already fixed on the time when they should return, viz., when seventy years desolation of their own land had been accomplished. But he does not tell them that the "seventy years" began with their captivity. That has been purely an assumption of chronological writers, and against a perfect avalanche of testimony to the contrary.

If the "seventy years" had already begun, with Jehoiakim's captivity, and the land was desolate, why did God complain of the people under Zedekiah's reign; that the chief priests and people transgressed and polluted the house of God, and misused his prophets, until there was no remedy? "Therefore he brought upon them the Chaldeans, who slew their young men, and carried all the vessels of the house of God, great and small, to Babylon; and burnt the house of God, and brake down the walls of Jerusalem, and carried all that had escaped the sword to Babylon, to fulfill the word of the Lord by Jeremiah, until the land had enjoyed her Sabbaths; for as long as she lay desolate, she kept Sabbaths, to fulfill threescore and ten years." 2 Chron. 36: 13–21.

I say, if Jeremiah's prophecy was already being fulfilled, and the land had been enjoying her Sabbaths ever since Jehoiakim's captivity, why did God say that Zedekiah and the remnant of the people were carried away, and the house burnt, and the wall broken down, to fulfill that prophecy? I sometimes think modesty is very becoming a writer who takes issue with all or nearly all the world, on a given subject; but when supported from the word of God by such arguments as these, my modesty does not trouble me.

All I can say is, that the great mistake in rejecting the eleven years of Zedekiah's reign, as a part of chronology, must be accredited to the same cause which has kept the world in darkness on all other matters pertaining to the coming of the Lord.

Captivity to Cyrus, 70 Years.

As proof that the seventy years captivity ended with the first year of Cyrus, one would suppose that the reading of 2 Chron. 36: 20–22 would suffice. But it will not do to assume anything. The Bible is full of pit-holes. God spake dark and many times contradictory sayings, on purpose that the careless might stumble—so he declares. A good illustration is where God said by the mouth of one prophet, that Zedekiah "should go to Babylon, and there he should die"; and by another, that "he should be taken, and slain, and should not see Babylon."

Some have supposed these "seventy years" ended "the night Belshazzar was slain, and Darius the Median took the kingdom." And as God had said they should "serve the king of Babylon seventy years," this looks plausible. But to establish these dates, we want no plausibilities, but a "thus saith the Lord."

"Then I lifted up mine eyes, and saw, and, behold, there stood before the river a ram, which had two horns; and the two horns were high; but one was higher than the other, and the higher came up last." Dan. 8: 3. "The ram which thou sawest, having two horns, are the kings of Media and Persia." Dan. 8: 20. The Median horn was the first. "In that night Belshazzar was slain, and Darius the Median took the kingdom." Dan. 5: 30, 31.

In the sixth of Daniel, there is an account of this Median kingdom under Darius. Then in the tenth chapter the Persian horn, which came up last, under Cyrus, is mentioned. "And them that had escaped from the sword, carried he away to Babylon, where they were servants to him and his sons, until the reign of the kingdom of Persia; to fulfill the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah." 2 Chron. 36: 20. "Now in the first year of Cyrus, that the word of the Lord by Jeremiah might be fulfilled," he stirred up Cyrus to make a decree. After much testimony, there can be no question as to where the seventy years ended.

First year of Cyrus, b. c. 536.

With the first year of Cyrus, we reach a reliable historic era, and Bible chronology ceases. God helps us only until we can help ourselves.

A written language, based on the alphabet—which God gave to Moses on the Mount—was first introduced among the nations in the Persian era. Prior to that, the Babylonians, Egyptians, and other intelligent nations, wrote in hieroglyphics, a pictorial language, which necessarily left the details of history obscure. The Persian is a living language; it exists to-day; and the recorded facts of history from that time are accurate and clear. Almost as much is known of Alexander, for instance, who lived only about two hundred years subsequent to Cyrus, as is known of Napoleon. Since the beginning of the Persian era, events marked by scores and hundreds of eclipses have been carefully recorded; and thus the other great book of God, "the ordinances of heaven," are made to determine chronological dates.

Back of the Persian era, history immediately drops off into twilight. It is tolerably clear to the time of Nebuchadnezzar, but beyond that almost nothing of the dates or details of profane history are known with any certainty. Eclipses, which are not associated with events, cannot help us, and the Bible mentions none. If the darkening of the sun, so often spoken of in prophecy, is simply an eclipse, then it has been darkened too often to answer for a definite sign of the coming of the Lord; but, as only the prophecies, and not historical parts of the Bible, refer to any such thing, we could not fix their date, even if eclipses were referred to in such prophecies.

Previous to the first year of Cyrus, men differ widely as to the age of the human race. Since that date, "Ptolemy's Canon," based on eclipses, is the only standard of truth. Hence, from that time there is but one chronology, and this one is endorsed by all historians. Ptolemy's Canon, of which Smith, in his Bible Dictionary, remarks, "No intelligent man of the present day will question," places the first year of Cyrus, b. c. 536. Writers differ as to the length of the reign of certain kings, and other minor events under Ptolemy's Canon; some making one king's reign a year or two shorter than some other writers; but not in a way to touch the points established by eclipses. (When I say "all writers," I do not mean Adventists who have written within the last twenty odd years; since our Lord says they have "all slumbered and slept.")

The best light we have, and which has been endorsed by all the world, places the first year of Cyrus, b. c. 536, before the (so called) Vulgar Christian era; and there inspired chronology stopped. If it is not correct, it is too late for us to set it right. God knew this fact when he left us to ourselves; therefore we endorse it, as we do the other periods, unquestioned. We have not labored to attack either this, or any time, as given in the Bible, but to support every period as we find it recorded; hence no charge can be brought that we are endeavoring to make the six thousand years end with some cherished theory.

This date (536) has recently been questioned by some of our Advent brethren, on the ground that, "from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem, unto Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks." Dan. 9: 25. And they assume that this four hundred and eighty-three years, or sixty-nine weeks, began with the first year of Cyrus. And this assumption, at first sight, seems plausible. But it all rests on the answer to the following question, What did God mean by the "going forth" of that commandment? Some say the "going forth" was when it was given by Cyrus. Others think it "went forth" when it actually went into execution. This last view is certainly worth looking at, before we attack the authority of history, eclipses, and the universal opinion of all the Christian and Jewish churches, from the time the prophecy was fulfilled to the present hour. And all this on a special application of a prophecy made by a few Adventists since they have been asleep.

All that is known of a commandment "to restore and to build Jerusalem," is of a negative character. We must believe Cyrus gave such a commandment; for God had said, "He shall build my city." And though no such commandment is recorded in the Bible, yet the city was built, long after Cyrus was dead, and built by his commandment.

To say that the commandment recorded in Ezra 1, which was "to go up and build the house of God which is at Jerusalem," was the commandment referred to in Daniel, is an assumption from which I beg to differ. And yet, from Ezra 9: 9, we are sure there was a commandment to build the city. Ezra went up to Jerusalem b. c. 457. And it is at this time we get the first inkling of such a commandment.

I know while the Jews were trying "to build the house of God, as Cyrus the king had commanded" (Ezra 4: 3), Bishlam, Tabeel, and their companions, wrote a lying letter to the king of Persia, accusing them of building the "bad city." Ver. 12. But that was false. I do not deny, for I do not know, but what Cyrus wrote the commandment to build the city at the same time he commanded them to build the house; and they may have been part of one commandment. All I claim is, that we hear nothing of a commandment to "restore and to build Jerusalem" at that time.

During the late Rebellion, Lincoln made a proclamation (or commandment) to set free the negroes,—a perfectly parallel case. He had the document carefully drawn, showed it to his friends, and then laid it aside for a few weeks in his cabinet, until the proper time for it to go forth. It was then brought out from its resting-place and sent forth. Would you date "the going forth" of that document when he wrote it, after which it was lost sight of for a time? or at the time steps were taken to vitalize and put it into an active condition? I think no one would hesitate in saying that the latter point of time was when it went forth. Then why may not that be the time the commandment "to restore and to build Jerusalem" "went forth"? Even the decree to build the house was put aside until it was forgotten. See Ezra 5: 17—"Now, therefore, if it please the king, let search be made whether it it be so that a decree was made of Cyrus to build this house."

If the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem "went forth" at the time steps were taken to put it into effect, then the date, 536 remains intact. And actual facts of history, established by eclipses, which cannot lie, do not clash with the prophetic word.

With the end of the year 1872, or rather with the end of the true Bible year, as it began in Eden, partly synchronizing with our year 1872, we believe end the six thousand years from Adam.

The two fractions, amounting to six months and ten days, found in 2 Chron. 36: 2, and 9, we omit saying any thing about. Our brother, who advocates a chronology of six thousand years ending in 1875, claims a synchronizing of the "jubilees" with his chronology. But he is just two years out in his reckoning, as I will prove. Each seventh year was a Sabbath for the land. Lev. 25: 2. They were to number seven Sabbaths of years; then the trumpet was to sound to proclaim the fiftieth year a jubilee. See verses 8–10. Our brother begins to reckon these cycles of sevens when they had been seven years in the wilderness, or thirty-three years before they entered the promised land. Five times seven are thirty-five. Thus they would have been two years in the promised land at the end of the fifth cycle of seven years. He should not have begun these cycles of Sabbaths for the land until they entered the promised land. "Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye come into the land which I give you, then shall the land keep a Sabbath unto the Lord. Six years shalt thou sow thy field, . . . but in the seventh year shall be a Sabbath of rest unto the land." Num. 25: 2.

Here we see the brother begins the sixth cycle of seven, two years after they had entered the promised land, instead of "when ye come into the land," where God told them to begin to reckon; or two years in advance. Hence, all his arguments from the jubilees favor the chronology for 1873, instead of 1875.

The chronology here presented has one advantage, at least, over all others: it finds no break in Bible chronology, and therefore no trusting to man to patch up and fix God's word. Every year given in the Bible as chronology, is taken just as we find it. We have not tried to lengthen any single period, by arguing in a year or two; nor have we tried to squeeze them into less space than this full, round number, just as God has given them. And from Cyrus down to the present time, we take it as we find it endorsed by all the world. God left us there to human aid. Down to that time he carefully led, and we have as carefully followed, trusting all to him. Where he left us to help ourselves, we have taken the best light the world has. We do not claim to know this chronology is correct; but it is plain and direct, and looks like truth. It will not do to make chronology out of some theory of applying prophetic periods. History and facts cannot be made to suit prophecy. It is the other way; prophecy must meet history.

In closing, permit me, dear reader, to make one request. I believe this 1873 message is from God, and the last of the sweet story of the gospel. Let me beg of you to join some friend, one with the Bible to read the texts, the other with paper and pencil, and go over this chronology. Get it out of God's word and add it up for yourselves, and it will give you faith. "Faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God."

WHAT WE NEGLECT.

C. E. BARNES.

"And ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath, but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord."—Eph 6: 4.

The following thoughts are presented in the hope that they may be instrumental in calling attention to a feature of Adventism which is not as it should be. I refer to the little attention that is paid to the spiritual wants of the children among us on the part of both laity and ministry. And a very noticeable feature in all our churches is the lack of young people in attendance at the public services, and also the smallness of our Sunday-schools. In 1843, thinking the Lord was coming immediately, the children at that time were supposed to be in a salvable state without being instructed in the teachings of the gospel, and thus they were in a great measure neglected, while attention was directed mainly to the enlightenment of the older portions of the community. But when the "time" passed, the evil results of that course began to be apparent, and have continued to show themselves ever since.

One of our shortcomings has been the failure to properly instruct the young and rising generations in the truths of the Bible as we understand them, and the consequence is as stated above; but few young people attend our meetings generally, and but few children attend our Sunday-schools, and the worst of it is that but very few of our people seem to be troubled by it at all.

It is a fact well known that Adventist parents generally do not take a great deal of interest in the bringing up of their children in the faith which they themselves seem to hold so dearly. Parents sometimes say that if they had not an Adventist meeting to go to, they would not go to the other churches because they could not get fed; they would rather remain at home and read their Bibles than to go and hear the fables of men preached, etc., and yet it is notorious that the children of many of these parents are permitted to attend the Sunday schools of these same churches and be instructed in those doctrines which the parents deem so erroneous; and this is not only done in places where there are no Adventist Sunday schools for their children to attend (if it were only in such cases this would not have been written), but in places where there are Adventist Sunday schools, and where they are smaller than they ought to be because of this very indifference on the part of parents to the welfare of the children and the interests of the Sunday schools.

It is a fact also that the preachers manifest but too little interest in the children. But few comparatively attend the Sunday school even when there is one connected with the church to which they are going to preach. The efforts generally seem directed toward the older members of the community; the sermons are not adapted to the wants of the young; they are beyond their capacity to comprehend; and no special effort seems to be made to reach them.

While many of the scripture commands are insisted upon, and rightly too, we are inclined too much to neglect the injunction of the apostle to bring up the children "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Under the Jewish dispensation parents were required to teach the things of God to their "sons and their sons' sons." Deut. 4: 9. Concerning the religious truths of the Jewish worship they were commanded—"Thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down and when thou risest up." Deut. 6: 7. And this command was faithfully heeded by them. Paul alludes to the instruction Timothy received in childhood, "Knowing that from a child thou hast known the holy Scriptures." 2 Tim. 3: 15. Before Agrippa he alludes to his own life before becoming a christian—"My manner of life from my youth which was at the first among mine own nation know all the Jews, which knew me from the beginning, if they would testify, that after the most straitest sect of my religion, I lived a Pharisee." Acts 26: 4, 5.

Now if it were necessary that the children of Jewish parents should be made acquainted with the facts of their religion, is it not equally important that the children of Christian parents should be made acquainted with the truths of their religion? Surely it is, and therefore the New Testament as well as the Old bids parents bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord; and this is particularly important for Adventists to heed.

If you don't instruct your children in the truths of the Bible as you understand them, they will receive other ideas, and therefore instead of being in sympathy with you, and with you waiting for the coming of the Savior, will get other ideas instilled into their minds, and be led thereby to oppose the views which you regard as so important.

This subject demands the attention of the ministry. Brethren, preach on it. You often quote Paul where he declared he did not shun to declare "the whole counsel of God." Do you do likewise? Paul urged the claims of the children upon their parents; do you ever remind them of their responsibility in this particular? If not, never again say you will not shun to declare the whole counsel of God till you do do so. When enforcing the practical duties of christianity, don't pass this important duty in silence, but urge upon your hearers the responsibility that is resting upon them; advocate the claims of the Sunday school, and be not satisfied with merely preaching about it, but set them an example by attending the Sunday school and personally manifesting your interest in the young.

This subject demands the attention of christian parents. I appeal to you, and ask if it is right that the spiritual interests of the children should be neglected? Why then will you not join in the Sunday school labors? Some one must do these things; why not you be one to help? Don't you know it is discouraging for a few to meet Sunday after Sunday and endeavor to instruct the young, while the greater part of the church remain at their homes apparently uninterested, and indifferent whether the school be sustained or not, and where, in too many instances, the people send their children to other Sunday schools to the neglect of the interests of the one connected with their own church?

I would that I were wrong in my opinion, but I feel I am not, when I say that I think the Adventist denomination is behind all others in this great and important work. In other churches ministers and lay members endeavor to make their children feel that their religious home is with the church, and noble efforts are made to instruct them. Why cannot that same interest be manifested by us?

Let all who read this, whether preachers or lay members, examine themselves and see if they have not been negligent in this matter, and if so, let them neglect it no longer.

"THE DAILY."

These words are found in the prophecy of Daniel, and signify something that was taken away by a power that was opposed to God and his worship. The word sacrifice is found added to it in the translation, but as it is in italics, we understand that it is a supplied word and has no corresponding word in the Hebrew. Nevertheless, the translators must have had a reason in their own minds for inserting it, and the probability is that they thought the original implied it. And I do not know as it necessarily injures the force of the sentence, or misapplies the meaning, only as men may use it in a wrong application.

Whatever else might be said of it, I am satisfied that it was connected with the true worship of God. For notice its companions in the warfare. They are "the truth," the "sanctuary," the "host," and the "Prince of the host." The truth was cast down; the place of his sanctuary was cast down; the host was cast down; the Prince was opposed, and the daily sacrifice was taken away.

It seems to me from this that the daily sacrifice was neither Pagan or Jewish in its character, but most emphatically Christian. It is connected with Christ and his people, and is opposed by the same power that opposes them. By this its character may be readily known.

The power which does this work is evidently Roman, and as it is antichrist, it seems to be Papal Rome. For "arms shall stand on his part," or, "his power shall be mighty, but not by his own power"; which shows us the papacy supported by other powers, as it always has been when it has exercised any political power.

This power was to "pollute the sanctuary of strength," as well as take away his daily. The temple at Jerusalem was not polluted by Rome, but the Jews had polluted it by their wickedness. The "sanctuary of strength" was the place where Christ was worshiped. The "daily sacrifice" was evidently the true worship of God, in spirit and in truth. The "abomination that maketh desolate" was idolatry, or the worshiping of relics, and shrines, and images. Early in the sixth century, "arms stood on his part"—the places of true worship were polluted by pictures and images, and antichrist was fully developed. Against these things "the people that do know their God" opposed themselves; but many fell "by sword, by flame, by captivity, and by spoil, many days." F. B.

THE FREE GIFT.

GEORGE E. LEE.

"Therefore, as by the offence of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one, the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life."—Rom. 5: 18.

We bless thee, Lord, that e'er thy gift
To mortal man was given;
With joy and gratitude we lift
Our thankful eyes to heaven.
To sinners all, the gift is free,
No costly price to give;
The terms are, simply, "Come to me,
Believe, and thou shalt live."

Had not the Father giv'n his Son
To die upon the tree,
Redemption's work would ne'er be done,
And great our loss would be.
But while the world in death was bound,
No hope of life in view,
A pitying Savior then was found,
The Holy, Just, and True.

He came, but not to man condemn,
Nor mortal life secure;
'T was "life eternal" brought to them,
Whom to the end endure.
This life in God with Christ is hid
And those that in him sleep,
Shall rise immortal, at his bid,
No more to die, or weep.

The shouts of victory then shall be,
"O death, where is thy sting?"
The pure in heart their God shall see,
And dwell with Christ their King.
The golden gates will open stand,
The City's just in view,
And yonder lies the promised land,
For all God's chosen "few."

O sinner, come! "just now" accept,
No longer stay away,
'Tis by the Father thou art kept,
And spared to see this day.
To you he calls, "O wanderer, come,
Be one among the blest,
And thou with them shalt find a home,
And there forever rest."

"BEHOLD, I COME AS A THIEF."

J. E. CLARK.

"Behold I come as a thief; blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked [exposed] and they see his shame."—Rev. 16: 15.

Question. To what does Christ come as a thief? I reply, to the battle of that great day of God Almighty. The subject spoken of in connection with the text is concerning the battle of that great day. The work of the three unclean spirits in this connection, is that of gathering the kings of the earth and of the whole world to this battle, then follows the text. We read under the sounding of the seventh trumpet "the nations were angry." But we do not find an account of this battle till we reach the nineteenth chapter of Revelation. Previous to this account of the battle, all appears to be a preparatory work—the gathering to the final conflict.

I do not suppose the kings of the earth, the beast, and the false prophet, see Christ during the battle of the great day, or that they will know they are fighting against Christ any more than the dragon (brought to view in Rev. 12.) knew he was warring against Michael and his angels. We are not to presume that a literal "sword out of Christ's mouth" is to be employed in this battle. Christ cautions his church to watch, and to keep their garments—that is, to keep far removed from the war spirit that will go from nation to nation. So that whoever shall allow themselves to fall into its current will become defiled, and all those who are not found watching the events and signs of the times this dreadful day will come upon them "as a thief in the night," and they shall not escape; while on the other hand all those who are found watching, will know and escape all those things coming on the earth. That class whose garments are defiled, will be stripped of those garments of meekness which characterize a christian, and thus stripped their shame will appear, because they will be manifest to be destitute of the peaceable spirit of Christ.

But in righteousness does Christ judge and make war. It is a righteous judgment and war. These anti-christian powers have made war on the saints and the truth for centuries, and done it in a most unrighteous manner, but the Lamb, now "King of Kings," maketh war on them, for their violence to his truth and people. He shall destroy them which destroy the earth. Rev. 11: 18—"And they [the kingdoms] shall become like the chaff of the summer threshing floors; and the wind will carry them away, that no place will be found for them." Christ now "treadeth the wine-press of the fierceness and wrath of Almighty God"; a full description of which had been prophesied of in Isaiah 63: 1–6. And now the time has come. But Christ comes to this battle as a thief, unseen, unknown by his enemies; while they will be the instruments one upon another of executing the judgments and wrath written.

We may illustrate this secret presence of Christ in this battle by the case recorded in 2 Kings 6: 15–17. The king of Syria had sent an army to seize Elisha the prophet. They came, "horses and chariots, and a great host by night" encamped about the city, and got Elisha all hemmed in. And when the servant of the man of God saw the host of the Syrians, he said—"Alas! my Master, how shall we do? And Elisha answered, Fear not, for they that be with us are more than they that be with them. And Elisha prayed that the eyes of his servant might be opened that he might see," and the Lord answered his prayer. And he opened the "eyes of the young man, and he saw and behold the mountain was full of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha." Here we see a great army from heaven, even more for Elisha than they that were against him; but they were there as a thief, invisible to the opposing army, exerting an invincible power, which made the victory sure.

Thus we apprehend it will be in the battle of that great day. Christ and the armies of heaven will be there, though invisible. Christ is represented (Rev. 19: 11) as seated upon a white horse (a symbol of conquest and power, white, denotes purity), "and the armies which were in heaven followed him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and clean." This language is all symbolical. In the case of the slaying of the first born in the land of Egypt—"For thus saith the Lord, I will pass through the land of Egypt this night, and will smite all the first born in the land of Egypt, both man and beast; and against all the gods of Egypt I will execute judgment. I am the Lord." Ex. 11: 12. No one supposes the Egyptians saw the Lord or any of the heavenly executioners that night the first born was slain. The unseen power struck the Syrian host with blindness, and they were all delivered into the hand of Elisha. The same unseen power did pass through the land of Egypt at midnight, and slew all the first born both of man and beast.

And so we conclude it will be in the last great conflict between Christ and the heavenly armies; though unseen and unknown by the angry nations, yet the destroying power will be most wonderfully felt among them. The great mass on earth will wonder at the mighty judgments of God being poured out. The commencement may be small, and will be increased, and the wicked inhabitants of the earth will exclaim as did the Egyptians—the such was never known in all the land of Egypt before this day. "And out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations; and he shall rule them with a rod of iron"; and the slaughter becomes so great that a call is made to the fowls of heaven—"Come and gather yourselves together unto the supper of the great God." And all the nations will be engaged, and the beast; "and the kings of the earth and their armies were gathered together to make war against Him that sat on the horse, and against his army." There will be a mighty strife between Christ, his church, and the powers of darkness. Christ will prove victorious over all the opposing armies. "And the beast was taken, and with him the false prophet. . . These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone."

I believe we are entering upon the dreadful realities of that great day of God Almighty. It may be we have already entered upon that period called "the day of the Lord." Just how much has been fulfilled of the nineteenth chapter of Revelation I am unable to say, but it becomes us to watch and be found on the side of the conquering King of kings.

An interest in the once dying Lamb of God is worth more than all the honors that come from men. What we do for ourselves and our dying fellow men about us, must be done quickly. "Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me to give every man according as his work shall be." Then "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still, and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still." "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city."

HOW TO BE "KEPT."

Not so euphonious a title as might be, but it is the Scriptural idea as expressed in 1 Pet. 1: 5. It is the "abiding" in Christ as mentioned in John's gospel.

Having been cleansed by the Spirit through faith, there is still another thought, and that is how to remain in this condition of purity and to "perfect holiness," or "have our fruit unto holiness." The condition of holiness is not a condition of absolute perfection, as though a person never could be tempted again, or one in which there is no possibility to sin. Jesus was holy and pure all his life, yet he "was tempted in all points like as we are." No one is out of danger from sin in this life, even though he may be pure in all things. Yet the battle ground is no longer inside with indwelling foes, but the inside powers resist outward foes, and this resistance is in the strength of the Lord and the "power of his might," and not by our own will. When the enemy comes in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord lifts up a standard against him. Isa 59: 19.

It is a state of warfare and rest combined We rest in Christ, and Jesus conquers for us and gives us the victory. We "fight the good fight of faith" not the bad fight of works. We "cease from our own works as God did from his". God now works in us to do of his own good pleasure.

Thus, we are "kept by the power of God. through faith." We do not keep ourselves, but God keeps us. Therefore to be kept we must not look to ourselves but "look unto Jesus." We must watch, but it is "watching unto prayer." We do not watch to keep quiet the dispositions of our nature, but we watch to keep out any evil spirit. All within is pure and peaceable, and we need not watch lest evil rise up within, but lest it influence us from without, and thus get within again This is only done on our part by constant prayer. Prayer is but the utterance or emotion of faith, and by it we keep with God, and then God keeps us.

Again, Christ says, "if ye keep my commandments ye shall abide in my love." John 15: 10. The Spirit of God is not a Spirit of idleness, but of work, and is ever prompting to labor, and duty becomes a privilege, and a labor of love. Any neglect on the part of those in whom the Spirit dwells, to obey its promptings, leaves an open door for the entrance of evil in the flesh, and then the person is not kept in perfect peace. But by prayer and watchfulness on our part, we may be kept by the Spirit free from sinful lusts. Prayer and watching are the fruits of faith, but the fruits of the Spirit are "love, joy, peace, long-suffering." Gal. 5: 22, 23.

Thus we see, in brief, that to be kept, we must continue to exercise the same faith that we did to obtain the keeping power; otherwise we grieve the Spirit and quench its power. As we receive Christ, so we must walk in him. Also, we must watch against outward foes lest they obtain a foothold in the flesh again. Also we must not shrink from any position or occupation the Lord directs for us.

This article is necessarily shortened more than I intended on account of many cares that press upon me at present, but I may yet write more upon this glorious subject, if the Lord will.—Frank Burr, in Advent Christian Times.

Again we stop to answer objections.

Nearly all writers on chronology leave out the eleven years reign of Zedekiah, and commence the "seventy years" with Jehoiakim's captivity. As there is so much authority against me here, I will try and show very clearly why the seventy years captivity cannot begin until after Zedekiah's reign. "And this whole land shall be a desolation, and an astonishment; and those nations shall serve the king of Babylon seventy years. And it shall come to pass when seventy years are accomplished, I will punish the king of Babylon." Jer. 25: 11, 12. This is the prophecy on which that captivity, and all that is said in relation to it, is based. The whole land was to be a desolation. Again—"Them that had escaped carried he away to Babylon, to fulfill the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah, until the land had enjoyed her Sabbaths; for as long as she lay desolate, she kept Sabbath, to fulfill threescore and ten years." 2 Chron. 36: 21. Here, again, we learn that the "seventy years" cover the time during which "the land" should be desolate. If, then, we can learn at what time the land became desolate, we shall know when the seventy years began.

It is assumed by these writers that the land was desolate when Jehoiakim and the principal part of the people were carried away. This, however, is not the time when God understood that the land was made desolate, for he distinctly says that it was not until after Zedekiah's reign. "And Zedekiah, king of Judah, will I give into the hand of the king of Babylon's army, . . . and I will make [in the future] the cities of Judah a desolation without an inhabitant." Jer. 34: 21, 22. So it appears that it was not until after Zedekiah's reign that the land was made desolate.

Now read the story, as told by Jeremiah, and see what God understood by a desolate land, and at what time this desolation was accomplished. Read from the twenty-ninth to the forty-fourth chapters inclusive, and see what became of the remnant of the people after Zedekiah was carried to Babylon, which was in the beginning of his eleventh year.

Those who were left in the land went down to Egypt, "even men and women and children; every person the captain of the guard had left." Jer. 43: 6. And in the second verse of the next chapter, the story is summed up with these words—"Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Ye have seen all the evil that I have brought upon Jerusalem, and upon all the cities of Judah; and, behold, this day, they are a desolation without an inhabitant."

The reason so many chronological writers began this seventy years captivity with Jehoiakim, is found in the following passage—"For thus saith the Lord, After seventy years be accomplished at Babylon, I will visit you, and perform my good word towards you, in causing you to return to this place." Jer. 29: 10. And this is spoken to those who had been carried away prior to Zedekiah's reign. If this passage stood alone, we might infer that this "seventy years," spoken of by Jeremiah, during which the land should be desolate, began with Jehoiakim's captivity. But the positive declaration that the land was not desolate until after Zedekiah's reign, makes such assumption groundless.

God was here telling the children of the captivity "to build houses, and plant gardens," etc., for their stay in Babylon would be long, and not to let false prophets deceive them, He had already fixed on the time when they should return, viz., when seventy years desolation of their own land had been accomplished. But he does not tell them that the "seventy years" began with their captivity. That has been purely an assumption of chronological writers, and against a perfect avalanche of testimony to the contrary.

If the "seventy years" had already begun, with Jehoiakim's captivity, and the land was desolate, why did God complain of the people under Zedekiah's reign; that the chief priests and people transgressed and polluted the house of God, and misused his prophets, until there was no remedy? "Therefore he brought upon them the Chaldeans, who slew their young men, and carried all the vessels of the house of God, great and small, to Babylon; and burnt the house of God, and brake down the walls of Jerusalem, and carried all that had escaped the sword to Babylon, to fulfill the word of the Lord by Jeremiah, until the land had enjoyed her Sabbaths; for as long as she lay desolate, she kept Sabbaths, to fulfill threescore and ten years." 2 Chron. 36: 13–21.

I say, if Jeremiah's prophecy was already being fulfilled, and the land had been enjoying her Sabbaths ever since Jehoiakim's captivity, why did God say that Zedekiah and the remnant of the people were carried away, and the house burnt, and the wall broken down, to fulfill that prophecy? I sometimes think modesty is very becoming a writer who takes issue with all or nearly all the world, on a given subject; but when supported from the word of God by such arguments as these, my modesty does not trouble me.

All I can say is, that the great mistake in rejecting the eleven years of Zedekiah's reign, as a part of chronology, must be accredited to the same cause which has kept the world in darkness on all other matters pertaining to the coming of the Lord.

Captivity to Cyrus, 70 Years.

As proof that the seventy years captivity ended with the first year of Cyrus, one would suppose that the reading of 2 Chron. 36: 20–22 would suffice. But it will not do to assume anything. The Bible is full of pit-holes. God spake dark and many times contradictory sayings, on purpose that the careless might stumble—so he declares. A good illustration is where God said by the mouth of one prophet, that Zedekiah "should go to Babylon, and there he should die"; and by another, that "he should be taken, and slain, and should not see Babylon."

Some have supposed these "seventy years" ended "the night Belshazzar was slain, and Darius the Median took the kingdom." And as God had said they should "serve the king of Babylon seventy years," this looks plausible. But to establish these dates, we want no plausibilities, but a "thus saith the Lord."

"Then I lifted up mine eyes, and saw, and, behold, there stood before the river a ram, which had two horns; and the two horns were high; but one was higher than the other, and the higher came up last." Dan. 8: 3. "The ram which thou sawest, having two horns, are the kings of Media and Persia." Dan. 8: 20. The Median horn was the first. "In that night Belshazzar was slain, and Darius the Median took the kingdom." Dan. 5: 30, 31.

In the sixth of Daniel, there is an account of this Median kingdom under Darius. Then in the tenth chapter the Persian horn, which came up last, under Cyrus, is mentioned. "And them that had escaped from the sword, carried he away to Babylon, where they were servants to him and his sons, until the reign of the kingdom of Persia; to fulfill the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah." 2 Chron. 36: 20. "Now in the first year of Cyrus, that the word of the Lord by Jeremiah might be fulfilled," he stirred up Cyrus to make a decree. After much testimony, there can be no question as to where the seventy years ended.

First year of Cyrus, b. c. 536.

With the first year of Cyrus, we reach a reliable historic era, and Bible chronology ceases. God helps us only until we can help ourselves.

A written language, based on the alphabet—which God gave to Moses on the Mount—was first introduced among the nations in the Persian era. Prior to that, the Babylonians, Egyptians, and other intelligent nations, wrote in hieroglyphics, a pictorial language, which necessarily left the details of history obscure. The Persian is a living language; it exists to-day; and the recorded facts of history from that time are accurate and clear. Almost as much is known of Alexander, for instance, who lived only about two hundred years subsequent to Cyrus, as is known of Napoleon. Since the beginning of the Persian era, events marked by scores and hundreds of eclipses have been carefully recorded; and thus the other great book of God, "the ordinances of heaven," are made to determine chronological dates.

Back of the Persian era, history immediately drops off into twilight. It is tolerably clear to the time of Nebuchadnezzar, but beyond that almost nothing of the dates or details of profane history are known with any certainty. Eclipses, which are not associated with events, cannot help us, and the Bible mentions none. If the darkening of the sun, so often spoken of in prophecy, is simply an eclipse, then it has been darkened too often to answer for a definite sign of the coming of the Lord; but, as only the prophecies, and not historical parts of the Bible, refer to any such thing, we could not fix their date, even if eclipses were referred to in such prophecies.

Previous to the first year of Cyrus, men differ widely as to the age of the human race. Since that date, "Ptolemy's Canon," based on eclipses, is the only standard of truth. Hence, from that time there is but one chronology, and this one is endorsed by all historians. Ptolemy's Canon, of which Smith, in his Bible Dictionary, remarks, "No intelligent man of the present day will question," places the first year of Cyrus, b. c. 536. Writers differ as to the length of the reign of certain kings, and other minor events under Ptolemy's Canon; some making one king's reign a year or two shorter than some other writers; but not in a way to touch the points established by eclipses. (When I say "all writers," I do not mean Adventists who have written within the last twenty odd years; since our Lord says they have "all slumbered and slept.")

The best light we have, and which has been endorsed by all the world, places the first year of Cyrus, b. c. 536, before the (so called) Vulgar Christian era; and there inspired chronology stopped. If it is not correct, it is too late for us to set it right. God knew this fact when he left us to ourselves; therefore we endorse it, as we do the other periods, unquestioned. We have not labored to attack either this, or any time, as given in the Bible, but to support every period as we find it recorded; hence no charge can be brought that we are endeavoring to make the six thousand years end with some cherished theory.

This date (536) has recently been questioned by some of our Advent brethren, on the ground that, "from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem, unto Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks." Dan. 9: 25. And they assume that this four hundred and eighty-three years, or sixty-nine weeks, began with the first year of Cyrus. And this assumption, at first sight, seems plausible. But it all rests on the answer to the following question, What did God mean by the "going forth" of that commandment? Some say the "going forth" was when it was given by Cyrus. Others think it "went forth" when it actually went into execution. This last view is certainly worth looking at, before we attack the authority of history, eclipses, and the universal opinion of all the Christian and Jewish churches, from the time the prophecy was fulfilled to the present hour. And all this on a special application of a prophecy made by a few Adventists since they have been asleep.

All that is known of a commandment "to restore and to build Jerusalem," is of a negative character. We must believe Cyrus gave such a commandment; for God had said, "He shall build my city." And though no such commandment is recorded in the Bible, yet the city was built, long after Cyrus was dead, and built by his commandment.

To say that the commandment recorded in Ezra 1, which was "to go up and build the house of God which is at Jerusalem," was the commandment referred to in Daniel, is an assumption from which I beg to differ. And yet, from Ezra 9: 9, we are sure there was a commandment to build the city. Ezra went up to Jerusalem b. c. 457. And it is at this time we get the first inkling of such a commandment.

I know while the Jews were trying "to build the house of God, as Cyrus the king had commanded" (Ezra 4: 3), Bishlam, Tabeel, and their companions, wrote a lying letter to the king of Persia, accusing them of building the "bad city." Ver. 12. But that was false. I do not deny, for I do not know, but what Cyrus wrote the commandment to build the city at the same time he commanded them to build the house; and they may have been part of one commandment. All I claim is, that we hear nothing of a commandment to "restore and to build Jerusalem" at that time.

During the late Rebellion, Lincoln made a proclamation (or commandment) to set free the negroes,—a perfectly parallel case. He had the document carefully drawn, showed it to his friends, and then laid it aside for a few weeks in his cabinet, until the proper time for it to go forth. It was then brought out from its resting-place and sent forth. Would you date "the going forth" of that document when he wrote it, after which it was lost sight of for a time? or at the time steps were taken to vitalize and put it into an active condition? I think no one would hesitate in saying that the latter point of time was when it went forth. Then why may not that be the time the commandment "to restore and to build Jerusalem" "went forth"? Even the decree to build the house was put aside until it was forgotten. (See Ezra 5: 17—"Now, therefore, if it please the king, let search be made, whether it it be so that a decree was made of Cyrus to build this house."

If the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem "went forth" at the time steps were taken to put it into effect, then the date, 536 remains intact. And actual facts of history, established by eclipses, which cannot lie, do not clash with the prophetic word.

With the end of the year 1872, or rather with the end of the true Bible year, as it began in Eden, partly synchronizing with our year 1872, we believe end the six thousand years from Adam.

The two fractions, amounting to six months and ten days, found in 2 Chron. 36: 2, and 9, we omit saying any thing about. One brother, who advocates a chronology of six thousand years ending in 1875, claims a synchronizing of the "jubilees" with his chronology. But he is just two years out in his reckoning, as I will prove. Each seventh year was a Sabbath for the land. Lev. 25: 2. They were to number seven Sabbaths of years; then the trumpet was to sound to proclaim the fiftieth year a jubilee. See verses 8–10. Our brother begins to reckon these cycles of sevens when they had been seven years in the wilderness, or thirty-three years before they entered the promised land. Five times seven are thirty-five. Thus they would have been two years in the promised land at the end of the fifth cycle of seven years. He should not have begun these cycles of Sabbaths for the land until they entered the promised land. "Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye come into the land which I give you, then shall the land keep a Sabbath unto the Lord. Six years shalt thou sow thy field, . . . but in the seventh year shall be a Sabbath of rest unto the land." Num. 25: 2.

Here we see the brother begins the sixth cycle of seven, two years after they had entered the promised land, instead of "when ye come into the land," where God told them to begin to reckon; or two years in advance. Hence, all his arguments from the jubilees favor the chronology for 1873, instead of 1875.

The chronology here presented has one advantage, at least, over all others: it finds no break in Bible chronology, and therefore no trusting to man to patch up and fix God's word. Every year given in the Bible as chronology, is taken just as we find it. We have not tried to lengthen any single period, by arguing in a year or two; nor have we tried to squeeze them into less space than this full, round number, just as God has given them And from Cyrus down to the present time, we take it as we find it endorsed by all the world. God left us there to human aid. Down to that time he carefully led, and we have as carefully followed, trusting all to him. Where he left us to help ourselves, we have taken the best light the world has. We do not claim to know this chronology is correct; but it is plain and direct, and looks like truth. It will not do to make chronology out of some theory of applying prophetic periods. History and facts cannot be made to suit prophecy. It is the other way; prophecy must meet history.

In closing, permit me, dear reader, to make one request. I believe this 1873 message is from God, and the last of the sweet story of the gospel. Let me beg of you to join some friend, one with the Bible to read the texts, the other with paper and pencil, and go over this chronology. Get it out of God's word and add it up for yourselves, and it will give you faith. "Faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God."

WHAT WE NEGLECT.

C. E. BARNES.

"And ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath, but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord."—Eph 6: 4.

The following thoughts are presented in the hope that they may be instrumental in calling attention to a feature of Adventism which is not as it should be. I refer to the little attention that is paid to the spiritual wants of the children among us on the part of both laity and ministry. And a very noticeable feature in all our churches is the lack of young people in attendance at the public services, and also the smallness of our Sunday-schools. In 1843, thinking the Lord was coming immediately, the children at that time were supposed to be in a salvable state without being instructed in the teachings of the gospel, and thus they were in a great measure neglected, while attention was directed mainly to the enlightenment of the older portions of the community. But when the "time" passed, the evil results of that course began to be apparent, and have continued to show themselves ever since.

One of our shortcomings has been the failure to properly instruct the young and rising generations in the truths of the Bible as we understand them, and the consequence is as stated above; but few young people attend our meetings generally, and but few children attend our Sunday-schools, and the worst of it is that but very few of our people seem to be troubled by it at all.

It is a fact well known that Adventist parents generally do not take a great deal of interest in the bringing up of their children in the faith which they themselves seem to hold so dearly. Parents sometimes say that if they had not an Adventist meeting to go to, they would not go to the other churches because they could not get fed; they would rather remain at home and read their Bibles than to go and hear the fables of men preached, etc., and yet it is notorious that the children of many of these parents are permitted to attend the Sunday schools of these same churches and be instructed in those doctrines which the parents deem so erroneous; and this is not only done in places where there are no Adventist Sunday schools for their children to attend (if it were only in such cases this would not have been written), but in places where there are Adventist Sunday schools, and where they are smaller than they ought to be because of this very indifference on the part of parents to the welfare of the children and the interests of the Sunday schools.

It is a fact also that the preachers manifest but too little interest in the children. But few comparatively attend the Sunday school even when there is one connected with the church to which they are going to preach. The efforts generally seem directed toward the older members of the community; the sermons are not adapted to the wants of the young; they are beyond their capacity to comprehend; and no special effort seems to be made to reach them.

While many of the scripture commands are insisted upon, and rightly too, we are inclined too much to neglect the injunction of the apostle to bring up the children "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Under the Jewish dispensation parents were required to teach the things of God to their "sons and their sons' sons." Deut. 4: 9. Concerning the religious truths of the Jewish worship they were commanded—"Thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down and when thou risest up." Deut. 6: 7. And this command was faithfully heeded by them. Paul alludes to the instruction Timothy received in childhood, "Knowing that from a child thou hast known the holy Scriptures." 2 Tim. 3: 15. Before Agrippa he alludes to his own life before becoming a christian—"My manner of life from my youth which was at the first among mine own nation know all the Jews, which knew me from the beginning, if they would testify, that after the most straitest sect of my religion, I lived a Pharisee." Acts 26: 4, 5.

Now if it were necessary that the children of Jewish parents should be made acquainted with the facts of their religion, is it not equally important that the children of Christian parents should be made acquainted with the truths of their religion? Surely it is, and therefore the New Testament as well as the Old bids parents bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord; and this is particularly important for Adventists to heed.

If you don't instruct your children in the truths of the Bible as you understand them, they will receive other ideas, and therefore instead of being in sympathy with you, and with you waiting for the coming of the Savior, will get other ideas instilled into their minds, and be led thereby to oppose the views which you regard as so important.

This subject demands the attention of the ministry. Brethren, preach on it. You often quote Paul where he declared he did not shun to declare "the whole counsel of God." Do you do likewise? Paul urged the claims of the children upon their parents; do you ever remind them of their responsibility in this particular? If not, never again say you will not shun to declare the whole counsel of God till you do do so. When enforcing the practical duties of christianity, don't pass this important duty in silence, but urge upon your hearers the responsibility that is resting upon them; advocate the claims of the Sunday school, and be not satisfied with merely preaching about it, but set them an example by attending the Sunday school and personally manifesting your interest in the young.

This subject demands the attention of christian parents. I appeal to you, and ask if it is right that the spiritual interests of the children should be neglected? Why then will you not join in the Sunday school labors? Some one must do these things; why not you be one to help? Don't you know it is discouraging for a few to meet Sunday after Sunday and endeavor to instruct the young, while the greater part of the church remain at their homes apparently uninterested, and indifferent whether the school be sustained or not, and where, in too many instances, the people send their children to other Sunday schools to the neglect of the interests of the one connected with their own church?

I would that I were wrong in my opinion, but I feel I am not, when I say that I think the Adventist denomination is behind all others in this great and important work. In other churches ministers and lay members endeavor to make their children feel that their religious home is with the church, and noble efforts are made to instruct them. Why can not that same interest be manifested by us?

Let all who read this, whether preachers or lay members, examine themselves and see if they have not been negligent in this matter, and if so, let them neglect it no longer.

"THE DAILY."

These words are found in the prophecy of Daniel, and signify something that was taken away by a power that was opposed to God and his worship. The word sacrifice is found added to it in the translation, but as it is in italics, we understand that it is a supplied word and has no corresponding word in the Hebrew. Nevertheless, the translators must have had a reason in their own minds for inserting it, and the probability is that they thought the original implied it. And I do not know as it necessarily injures the force of the sentence, or misapplies the meaning, only as men may use it in a wrong application.

Whatever else might be said of it, I am satisfied that it was connected with the true worship of God. For notice its companions in the warfare. They are "the truth," the "sanctuary," the "host," and the "Prince of the host." The truth was cast down; the place of his sanctuary was cast down; the host was cast down; the Prince was opposed, and the daily sacrifice was taken away.

It seems to me from this that the daily sacrifice was neither Pagan or Jewish in its character, but most emphatically Christian. It is connected with Christ and his people, and is opposed by the same power that opposes them. By this its character may be readily known.

The power which does this work is evidently Roman, and as it is antichrist, it seems to be Papal Rome. For "arms shall stand on his part," or, "his power shall be mighty, but not by his own power"; which shows us the papacy supported by other powers, as it always has been when it has exercised any political power.

This power was to "pollute the sanctuary of strength," as well as take away his daily. The temple at Jerusalem was not polluted by Rome, but the Jews had polluted it by their wickedness. The "sanctuary of strength" was the place where Christ was worshiped. The "daily sacrifice" was evidently the true worship of God, in spirit and in truth. The "abomination that maketh desolate" was idolatry, or the worshiping of relics, and shrines, and images. Early in the sixth century, "arms stood on his part"—the places of true worship were polluted by pictures and images, and antichrist was fully developed. Against these things "the people that do know their God" opposed themselves; but many fell "by sword, by flame, by captivity, and by spoil, many days." F. B.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

We learn that some have not received the Crisis of last week. To such we would say that the papers were delivered to the Post Office officials in good time, and as directed by them; but we learn that there has been delay at the Post Office in sending out the mails, occasioned by the removal of the Office, it having been burned out in the late fire.

We hope there will be no delay after this.

With thanks to our heavenly Father, we would say that our Office was not injured in the least, neither the Office where our printing paper was stored; and although most, if not all, of the paper manufacturers were burned out, we had a good supply on hand, and nothing to cause delay excepting at the Post Office.

OUR EXPERIENCE.

"Repent and be baptized, . . . and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."—ACTS 2: 38.

We do not believe a person is a fit subject for baptism till after he is pardoned or justified, and he cannot know that he has obtained pardon before he has the witness of the Spirit to that fact. The next step is baptism. In our own case, a very bright evidence was received of pardon and acceptance by the Lord. Our baptism did not take place till several months afterwards; yet during all that time the evidence that our sins were forgiven was clear and satisfactory. At baptism, we believe we received for the first time "the gift of the Spirit." We did not understand it, because we had heard nothing said on the subject; but when we remember what we experienced at that time, and the results that followed, we are satisfied now that the promised gift was then received, and enjoyed for some time, producing its precious fruits. For want of proper instruction on the subject, when mesmerism came up, we became perplexed, because some teachers made no distinction between the two; or, in other words, what we now believe was the work of the Holy Spirit, they attributed to mesmerism. With this state of things before us, we became so fearful of being brought under the influence of mesmerism, or some species of fanaticism, that we braced against all outward manifestations of inward emotions, until we found a gloomy darkness taking the place of the blessed fulness of peace that we had felt after we received the gift of the Spirit at our baptism. We went sometime in this sad condition, while others were free in Christ. In this state of mind we went to the Lord in prayer, sincerely asking him to let us know whether we were right in attributing the joyous emotions, and various other things that are witnessed in lively conference meetings, and elsewhere, to human, or mesmeric power, as some ministers affirmed. If we had been wrong in our position, we earnestly desired that we might be set right by some clear evidence that would remove all doubts. The Lord heard and answered. When in a quiet meeting one day, we unexpectedly felt a power coming upon us, which increased till our physical strength was nearly exhausted. This was something new in our experience. We had seen many others in that situation, but had called it the fruits of mesmerism. At this time, we were shown the wide difference between the power of the Holy Spirit from God, and the mesmeric spirit from man. We were overwhelmed with the divine presence, producing great love for the Lord and all his children. We believe we then received again the "gift of the Spirit," as at our baptism, but the manifestation was somewhat different. But with all our experience, we did not understand at that time that it was the gift of the Spirit, because no one gave us any instruction on the subject. Since that experience, we have not been troubled about mesmerism, which is Satan's counterfeit of the Holy Spirit.

Not understanding the subject, we did not confess the gift, and after a time lost its fulness again; but remained as firm as ever in our faith in Christ and his word, and our purpose to serve him, and do whatsoever he required. Most of the time we lived without condemnation, so far as it may result from the commission of known sin; but felt a lack of the special presence of the dear Savior.

At various times, as we now see, the gift was restored and lost, till we settled down in the belief, and so preached, that these extra sweet, heavenly seasons were but the result of varying circumstances, and not the fruit of a special gift of the Holy Spirit. But we were not satisfied. We felt something was lacking, but supposed there was no remedy in this world; yet we met those who spoke of a "higher life," and gave good evidence that their statement was true. But we thought it might be owing to their temperament, their happy natural organization; and concluded it was our misfortune to be otherwise constituted.

In this state we lived for years, believing there was no higher condition for one having an organism like ours, only as it might be gained by steady growth, in the faithful performance of every known duty. At times we felt an earnest longing for the return of those heavenly, precious seasons, such as we felt after our baptism, and on other occasions for many days at a time; when it seemed as though we were in the arms of Jesus,—he in us, and we in him, completely bathed in his love and peace; but we knew of no way to secure that state of mind, only by works, and self-denial. Accordingly we endeavored to live in the strictest possible manner, avoiding everything we thought displeasing to the Lord, and doing just what we thought he required. In this state we felt no condemnation, and had no doubts of our acceptance by the Lord; but still felt as though something was lacking. We could not see why. So far as works were concerned, we did not feel condemned for what we had done, or feel conscious of refusing to do what the Lord had commanded; still the hungering and longing increased for the same feast of love and peace that we had enjoyed at times in the past.

At length we became satisfied that what we wanted was the "gift of the Spirit," and endeavored, if possible, to do better than ever; watching every word, deed, and thought, so that the Lord would consent to bestow the gift. We lived in this way most of the time for years, till we became pretty well satisfied that we had been seeking and longing after what we should not receive in this life, and must be contented to remain as we were till the coming of Jesus. But this decision did not quench the ardent longing to be "filled with the Spirit."

In this state of mind, we heard of the National Campmeeting for the promotion of holiness, to be held at Round Lake, N. Y., in July 1871. We felt a strong impression to go. We had heard very favorable reports from a former meeting of the kind, held at the same place, and had seen those who had received great benefit by their attendance. We went to the meeting, and found three other of our preaching Brn. present. We arrived Thursday morning, July 6th, and for two days acted mostly as a spectator, watching with deep interest the progress of the meeting. Various denominations were united in christian harmony and brotherly love. After two days of close criticism, which served to dry up instead of increasing our peace, we became most fully satisfied that we had made no mistake in coming to the meeting; that we had fallen in with a company of christian men and women who were tremendously in-earnest, and enjoying just what we had at our baptism some twenty-eight years since, and on other favored occasions. Said one of our dear preaching Brn. present, "This is nothing new; it is just what we had twenty-five and thirty years ago." We ultimately came to the conclusion, if what we saw, heard and felt at Round Lake was not of the Lord, then all our experience had been wrong, for the spirit of this meeting was the best we had ever enjoyed. Like Peter, when the sheet was let down to him containing all manner of four-footed beasts, we learned the Lord had some clean people, who did not think just as we did about all doctrinal matters; and what he had cleansed we should not call "common or unclean." We have never been in a meeting where Christ was more highly exalted. This we knew was certainly pleasing to the Father. In short, everything seemed to remind one of old-fashioned christianity, which made men new creatures, such as we read of in the days of Wesley, that leads men to come out from the world and be separate.

We have great reason to thank the Lord that our steps were directed to Round Lake campmeeting. Peter would have as much reason to be ashamed of the lesson he learned from the manifestation of the sheet and its contents, as we should have of what we received at that meeting, Saturday morning, July 8th, 1871; for then and there we were again filled with the Spirit; and now we can say of a truth, that longing, hungering feeling, of which we have spoken, and had felt for years, is satisfied and fully met by the "gift of the Spirit." If it be asked, By what means was it obtained? we answer, not by more and greater works, but by simple faith in Christ.

CLEANSING OF THE SANCTUARY.

In Dan. 8: 13, 14, where the prophet is speaking of the vision of the ram and rough goat, he says—"Then I heard one saint speaking, and another saint said unto that certain saint which spake, How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice, and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot? And he said unto me, Unto two thousand and three hundred days; then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." The word "then" shows that the cleansing of the "sanctuary" is either commenced or completed at the end of the twenty-three hundred days. Judging from the use of the word "then" in the Bible, we can come to no other conclusion than that it refers to the commencement of the cleansing; and that there is no space of time between the ending of the days and the beginning of the cleansing.

The first question to settle is this; What is meant by the word "sanctuary" in Dan. 8: 13, 14? The word is first found in Ex. 15: 17, where Moses addresses the Lord in relation to the children of Israel, and says—"Thou shalt bring them in, and plant them in the mountain of thine inheritance, in the place, O Lord, which thou hast made for thee to dwell in; in the sanctuary, even to this mountain, which his right hand had purchased. He cast out the heathen also before them, and divided them an inheritance by line, and made the tribes of Israel to dwell in their tents." These scriptures teach very plainly that the land promised and possessed by the children of Israel, after they came out of Egypt, is called the sanctuary, which had Jerusalem for its capital. When referring to this subject, Jesus said—"Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Luke 21: 24. Here we have again the sanctuary and its treading down brought clearly to view; and it follows that the twenty-three hundred days allotted to the treading down of the sanctuary must close up when the Gentiles cease to tread it down. As the sanctuary is still trodden down by the Gentiles, it follows that the twenty-three hundred days are not yet ended. We see no evidence in the Bible to show that the cleansing of the sanctuary can take place before the coming of Christ.

The sanctuary is also called "the kingdom." In "the end of the world," when Christ shall come, he will "send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity." Matt. 13: 41. This gathering "out of his kingdom all things that offend" is evidently the same as the cleansing of the sanctuary at the end of the twenty-three hundred days; therefore this period of time cannot run out before the coming of Christ. We see no reason to doubt that the twenty-three hundred and the one thousand three hundred and thirty-five days run out together at the coming of Christ.

PERSONAL.—BRO. H. L. HASTINGS, in the late terrible fire in our city, suffered almost literally the "loss of all things." His brethren and friends have only to know of the trial which has come to him, to help, at once, to bear his burden. His new printing presses, type, plates, paper, publishing material, books, tracts, valuable manuscripts, indeed, the exterior fruit of a life's work, all swept down to ruin in a single night. And into this loss, how much must enter that money can never replace. But Bro. H. is not destroyed, neither cast down. As he says, his "future is with the Lord." He hopes to issue a number of The Christian in good time, and continue its publication,—as also that of the Little Christian,—if means are supplied. His present address is 30 Hanover St., where he is already cheerfully and hopefully at work, believing "all things" work together "for good" to them that love the Lord.

THE FRIENDS of Sr. (Howell) Burdick, of San Francisco, Cal., will be pained to hear of the bereavement which has come to her, in the death of her venerable father, in Harvard, Ill.

HOW LONG?

How long does it take to obtain pardon, and become a follower of Christ? It takes some from sixty to seventy years, or even longer; others six or seven; others some weeks; others several days; while others accomplish the same thing in a few hours. Why all this difference? No one who believes in Christ can say it is his fault. Then why are some so long in securing pardon? Simply because they do not submit to Christ, and accept him as their all-sufficient Savior. It takes but a short time, when we are in earnest. The following from the "Christian at Work" illustrates this point:—

"I knew an earnest minister, firm in the faith, and abundant in labors to win others to Christ, who tells his story on this wise:

'I was a deist of the Tom Paine school. I wrote and talked against Christ and his followers. One evening, with my wife, who, like myself, was a deist, was attracted to a meeting. Toward the close, an invitation was given to all who wished to seek salvation to come forward. I rose, and went. My wife followed. I asked what I must do to believe in the Bible and in Christ.

The answer was, pray. I knelt and prayed—"O God! if there be a God, save my soul, if I have a soul." I was sincere, and really prayed. In a moment, my whole life, in all the guiltiness of its unbelief toward Jesus, and lack of love and gratitude to God who had so loved the world, passed in review before me, and I gave myself up to Jesus to be his forever, and was saved.

When I bowed down I was an unhappy deist, in all the darkness and coldness of a positive rejection of Jesus as the Son of God. When I rose up I was a happy believer in Christ, filled with his love, and full of the joy of the Lord. And in my wife's case, the result was much the same; both of us went to the meeting deists, and left it christians.'

Think not that this is strange. It does not take Jesus now in his spiritual presence any longer to make the spirit whole of whatsoever disease it has, than it did when he was here in the body to make the bodies of men whole."

What has been said concerning the time necessary to obtain pardon for sins is equally true in relation to the receiving of "the gift of the Spirit." Some professors of religion go without it for many years after conversion, while others seek and receive it in a few days after their sins are forgiven. The reason they did not have it earlier, was from a lack of submission or faith. Some sanctify all to Christ, and then listen to Satan, who tells them the Lord is not willing to bestow the gift of the Spirit. Such should read Luke 11: 5–13, where we learn the great willingness of our heavenly Father to "give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him." Let doubts be gone, and by faith receive the promised blessing. It is just what all need, and without which none will be satisfied.

NIGHT APPARITIONS.

A lecturer on Spiritualism, who claimed that the Bible was his main fort in support of the system, recently set up the claim in a public speech, that the angels referred to in the Bible were simply disembodied men, being often called men; and that like the spirits of the present day, they always manifested themselves in the dark, and never in the daylight.

That they are often called men, and have even been mistaken for men, is evident; "the man Gabriel," and the "men" that visited Abraham and Lot, are also called angels; but that they were disembodied men, is purely assumption; and the fact that angels preceded man's creation, positively negates this claim. Unless angels were in existence before man was made, the following allusion to man's creation cannot be correct: "Thou hast made him a little lower than the angels." Ps. 8: 5. If man was made a veritable angel, and simply shut up in a prison of clay for a short time, to be finally released, how could he have been made "lower" than the angels, without being made lower than himself, seeing he was an angel in prison already? Could he have been made lower than himself? The force of this text cannot be dodged by setting up the claim, as some do, that it means man was made lower than the angels were afterwards to be made; for (1) this claim would negate the assumption that God made at creation an angel to put into the body; and (2) the text does not speak of contemplated angels, but of those already in existence before man's creation. This agrees with the Lord's talk to Job—"Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth . . . . and all the sons of God shouted together for joy?" (Job 38: 7.) What sons had God back there, before man's creation, except his angelic sons? Let it also be remembered that the cherubim, a species of angels, were in existence before a single human being had died, to guard the tree of life; so it is certain that angels existed before men died, and therefore cannot be the disembodied spirits of men.

Nor is it true that the ancient angels, like the modern spirits, always confined their manifestations to darkness. Those that appeared to Abraham came in the daytime. It was in the daytime that an angel appeared to Gideon. It was mid-day when Balaam saw an angel. And the angel that appeared to Manoah, so far from seeking the darkness as a thing essential to his manifestation, stood by the blazing fire upon the altar, and even ascended in the flame of fire. And so we might multiply instances where angels came on missions from God in the daytime. Jesus, instead of telling us that we shall leave the body as real angels at the hour of death, points forward to the resurrection as the time when we shall be "equal to the angels;" and he certainly could not have meant that we should exist as veritable angels a long time before the resurrection, and then be "equal" to ourselves; nor that we should be let out of the body at death, as imprisoned angels, and then be equal to ourselves. What an elevation, to be equal to one's self!

GENUINE RELIGION.

A spurious article may deceive men, but will never pass divine inspection. A religion that will merely secure for us the applause of men in this world, and be finally repudiated by the Searcher of hearts at the close of time, is worse than worthless. We had better consent to an examination now, than to wait till we are weighed in the infallible balances of Deity, and be found wanting. We may possess many good religious traits, and still not possess the character that will give us a passport into God's holy paradise.

We may possess the highest type of morality, and yet be void of saving righteousness; for Jesus said—"Except your righteousness shall exceed the righteousness of the Scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter the kingdom of heaven." Their righteousness was good so far as it went, but was restricted to a system of good works, omitting and ignoring experimental holiness. We may have our intellects fully enlightened with the brilliant truths of revelation, and may admire the system of sacred truth, and even be ambitious for its promulgation, and its triumph over error, and yet lack the righteousness that will pass inspection before the judgment seat of Christ, owing to the fact that the heart has not been renovated by the Holy Spirit, but has simply submitted to the theoretical power of truth, instead of the experimental power of the Spirit.

It is not only right, but important that we should "understand the word of the kingdom;" but it is possible to possess this understanding, and still lack vital godliness, carnality being only curtailed by the light of truth in the heart, and not eradicated by the gift and indwelling of the spirit, which enlists the affections for God, and spoils our relish for sensuality in all its forms and phases. Regeneration removes us from the control of carnality, and fills the heart with the sweetness of our "first love," which should never be allowed to "wax cold." Moreover we can rise to a higher and richer experience, and "be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye may be filled with all the fullness of God." Ephesians 3: 17–19. This is "perfect love," or a fulness of love which is not experienced in the lower atmosphere of religious experience. Let us rise above the fascinations of earth, and live in the sunlight of perfect peace.

Genuine religion is inseparably interwoven with ardent love to God. It has no affinity with the world. It has no relish for carnality. It has no thirst for the spirit of the world, or its forbidden pleasures. It seeks to know the will of God, and takes pleasure in doing it. Have we the genuine kind? Or are we contenting ourselves with a spurious article? Let us make this a personal thing, and not refer it all to our neighbors. Who will do it? Are we holy? No compromise is admissible.

TITUS ON SOUL-IMMORTALITY.

At the time Jerusalem was besieged by the Romans, Titus made a speech to the Romans, of which the following is a part:—

"I shall at present waive my commendation of those who die in war, and omit to speak of the immortality of those slain in the midst of their martial bravery; yet cannot I forbear to imprecate upon those who are of a contrary disposition, that they may die in time of peace by some distemper or other, since their souls are condemned to the grave, together with their bodies. For what man of virtue is there who does not know, that those souls which are severed from their fleshly bodies in battles by the sword, are received by the ether, that purest of elements, and joined to that company which are placed among the stars; that they become good demons and propitious heroes, and show themselves as such to their posterity afterward? While upon those souls that wore away in and with their distempered bodies, comes a subterranean night to dissolve them to nothing, and a deep oblivion to take away all remembrance of them, and this, notwithstanding they be clean from all spots and defilements of this world; so that in this case, the soul comes to the utmost bounds of life, and of its body, and of its memorial also. But since fate has determined that death is to come of necessity upon all men, a sword is a better instrument for that purpose than any disease whatsoever." Josephus' Wars, b. 6, chap. 1, s. 5.

This testimony will not afford much comfort to the believers in soul-immortality for several reasons, to which we call attention.

1. Immmortality is here attributed to only one class of souls—the souls of those who are slain in battles—nor are those souls recognized as indwelling personalities, but simply as "elements," to be "received by the ether," and thus be wafted to the stars, to be manufactured into "good demons" and "heroes."

It is said that the souls of all who experience ordinary death come to "nothing"—"their souls are condemned to the grave"—whether they were virtuous or vile. Thus nothing but military glory cut short by the sword, according to this speech, could give the soul immortality; and that only by having it merged in "ether," and then made into demons and heroes. The natural immortality, and the present personality of the soul, is here virtually repudiated. The highest claim here made is that it may, under certain considerations, become immortal, and become a demon after being received "by the ether;" while, otherwise, it will come "to the utmost bounds of life," as really as the body.

So much for soul-immortality as held by the Romans at the last overthrow of Jerusalem, if rightly set forth by Titus in his speech.

SHEEP GOING TO A SPIRIT LAND.—Those who insist that sheol is a realm of disembodied spirits, instead of the region of physical men after death, will find a difficult task to reconcile the following text with their theory: "Like sheep they are laid in sheol; death shall feed on them; . . . . and their beauty shall consume in sheol from their dwelling." Ps. 49: 14.

1. Do sheep go to sheol, provided it is a realm of disembodied spirits, and not the receptacle of corporeal men after their death? Who will claim that disembodied sheep are here referred to?

2. If only spirit-men go to sheol, instead of physical men, what shall be done with the statement, "Death shall feed on them?" Will death feed on spirit-men?

3. If sheol is a receptacle of spirit-men, or disembodied souls, instead of dead bodies, what shall be done with the statement, "Their beauty shall consume in sheol"? Will the beauty of disembodied souls consume away in the spirit land?

Is it not better to admit that sheol is the state of the dead, and not of the living shades of the dead, than to admit that disembodied sheep go to sheol, that "death shall feed on" spirit-men, and that their beauty shall consume away in the spirit land?

BRO. GEO. THOMSON.—Bro. Thomson, of Arena, Wis., we regret to hear, is still confined to his house, and mostly to his bed. Wisconsin can ill afford to be deprived of his labors. He is one of our true men. Pray the Lord of the harvest to rebuke disease, and once more send him into the field. Meanwhile, let those who have been cheered by the gospel message from his lips in former days, now cheer his heart in seeing that he is supplied with temporal comforts.

BRO. D. N. CLARK.—We regret to learn that Eld. Clark of Amboy, Ill., who has been some months on the sick list, though now improving, is not yet able to preach. While in consequence of this the cause may suffer for want of help, we trust our brother's temporal wants will not be forgotten by those to whom he has ministered in spiritual things. This is too often the case.

WHEN THE SACRIFICE CEASED.—It was to cease in the "midst of the week." It did cease at the right time to fulfil the prophecy, even before Jerusalem was destroyed, as the result of a raid made by the Romans which drove the priests from their work, which was never resumed, though the temple was not destroyed till a later date. We have the following statement by Josephus:—"For he [Titus] had been informed, that on that very day, which was the seventeenth day of Panemus [Tamuz], the sacrifice called the daily sacrifice had failed, and had not been offered to God for want of men to offer it." Wars, b. 6, chap. 2, s. 1.

Since then the Jewish temple worship in Jerusalem has been extinct, in fulfillment of prophecy. Though it ought to have ceased at the cross, it continued till the time here specified.

PERILS OF THESE DAYS.

THE GREAT FIRE IN BOSTON.

M. MUNGER.

Probably no one will write for this paper that had a better chance to know about this awful conflagration than I had. I had put up with Eld. Farrell, 101 Chauncy St., who gave me a good room and board. My appointment was at Branch Chapel, Nov. 10th.

We were seated by a fire reading about the evidence of an awful murder just committed in a stable opposite the Branch Chapel, where my meeting was to be held next day. It appeared that a man by the name of Alley killed a Mr. Ellis; then chopped him up and put the body into two barrels, headed them up, and rolled the barrels into Charles river, where they were found. This was as awful as the Parkman murder by Webster several years ago, in this same city of Boston.

We had just finished reading this terrible tragedy, when Bro. Farrell's son said there was a fire on the next corner, within a few rods of us, the corner of Summer and Kingston Streets. We went out and saw a fire in the attic of a five-story block where they worked at paper collars. We were on the ground before the firemen. It was some time before the water was thrown, as the heavy steamers had to be drawn by men, the horses all being sick.

Here commenced one of the greatest fires in the world. We could do nothing to help. The firemen could do very little, although they all worked faithfully and in good order. Still it kept spreading, and was unquenchable.

At ten P. M., when we left the scene, it was terrific. Large stone buildings would fall in a short time. The wind shifting, Bro. Farrell's people made preparations for clearing their large boarding house; but more engines had arrived and turned toward the south. As I could not help, I went to bed, expecting to be called up to help clear the house. Was awaked two or three times by explosions of gas, and gunpowder blowing up buildings. After human nature is wrought up to a certain pitch of terror and excitement, fear ceases and nerves quiet down. On getting out at daylight, I found the fire raging worse than before. Over seventy acres had been burnt over in the morning. The churches were filled with goods. Some paid one hundred dollars a load to get their goods out to a place of safety. Many wholesale stores were burnt down without being unlocked, the owners being out of the city. Some, seeing it impossible to get their goods out, threw them out for any one to take. Many goods were stolen from wagons while passing through the dense crowd.

But few of the readers of the Crisis have ever seen such a great fire. Over eighty acres of buildings, from four to eight stories high, burned down in fifteen hours, with a loss of $100,000,000! How uncertain are the riches of this world in these days of peril. We had much better have a policy in the great Insurance that can never fail. Take the great wickedness in the land, the strange epidemic among men and beasts, the trouble seen, and the groaning and quaking earth; who can fail to see the scriptural and prophetic times of trouble begun? We had better get ready for worse times coming.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, Aug. 22d, 1872, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

THE TRACT FUND.

I see by the Crisis that $29.24 have been sent in for the "Tract Fund" this year. Nearly three months of the year are gone. Brethren, look at this matter. It ought to have been at least one thousand dollars. How many poor preachers want tracts to carry into new fields, and cannot have them because they cannot buy them; and as there is no money in the Tract Fund treasury they cannot ask for them.

Is our truth important? Is our message of God? Is our strength divided? Are there other questions being raised of more vital consequence than our faith and hope? You who love the truth, and have money, send in your offerings, that we may have tracts to carry into new places the coming winter. "This gospel of the kingdom" must be preached in "all the world," and "then shall the end come." Are you willing to help send it? Then send in your offerings to the Tract Fund at once. Let us see five hundred dollars acknowledged before the new year.

TIME CONFERENCES.

AN APPEAL.

These meetings, as the name indicates, are for the special object of considering the times and dates connected with the prophetic periods. It is, of course, very desirable that all the light which the Scriptures give upon this, as every other subject, should be made by the faithful Watchmen in Zion to shine as clearly as possible upon the pathway of the church. It is the undoubted duty of the Watchmen to "search the Scriptures" diligently; to "watch" the "signs of the times" closely; to pray much and earnestly for the guidance of the Spirit; to sit meekly and patiently at the feet of the Master, learning of him; to strive to possess his spirit, and to "know of his doctrine"; to "have the testimony of Jesus," which "is the spirit of prophecy"; and when thus equipped to promptly and faithfully cheer the church and warn the world of coming weal or impending woe; at the end, that "the morning cometh, and also the night"; morning of joy, and night of woe; joyful morn to the church, and woeful night to the world.

To facilitate their work, it is both proper and essential that the Watchmen should meet together often; that they should compare the results of their investigations, on all subjects, carefully and candidly; instruct, or receive instruction, with equal cheerfulness; in the language of the apostle, "considering one another, to provoke unto love and good works: not forsaking the assembling of yourselves together as the manner of some is, but exhorting one another; and so much the more as ye see the day approaching. For ye, brethren, are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief."

Now if the prophets (as we are told, 1 Pet. 1: 10–13) inquired and searched diligently—"searching what or what manner of time [it being symbolic, connected with symbols] the spirit which was in them did signify, when it testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ [seventy weeks reached to the first Advent] and the glory that should follow" (2300 days reached to the second Advent); and if "the angels desired to look into these things," how much more should we, who are so much more directly interested, desire and strive to fathom the divine import of the periods and the scriptural signs and symbols that portend the coming both of glory and of judgment.

We have been disappointed in past calculations, and we are exhorted to "hope perfectly unto the end." The vision has seemed to tarry, but we are told that "at the end it shall speak and not lie." All christians are ready to rectify all wrongs, and confess all faults and mistakes, when they become apparent; but the wise man cannot be browbeaten out of his faith in the unerring counsels of God relating to time or judgment; for "his heart discerneth both." I say browbeaten, because anything but cant and sarcasm are so seldom attempted by those who feel no interest in these things but to oppose them. They have time to jeer of "cracked wheels" and "broken spokes" (which nevertheless have served their time), who have no need or care for sounder ones. Soft words in hard arguments would serve a better purpose.

No discerning soldier will cower or falter just at the hour of victory, however hot the battle. A noble army of "Millerites" and "Adventists" have fought a long, hard battle; they have contested every inch of ground in their advancement, but they have steadily advanced; they have encountered every peril incident to soldier-life by sea or land, save one; they have never lacked bread; and that is the secret of their success. But as the crisis nears, the enemy spurs each jaded steed to turn the tide of battle; and there is need now of a special effort all along the lines, by every regiment, for more of the spiritual bread,—more light, a more perfect unity of views, and plans, and concert of action. The appeal is to every Adventist, and especially to those of the writer's own (New York) State and conference, for stout-hearted, strong-handed and concerted action among us to know and advance the truth on the question of time. Time (in the sense I speak) is in the Bible; this all admit; but mistakes have made us doubtful and careless of finding it out. But, "the wise shall understand," and a multitude of like passages will cover the sin (?) of our honest endeavor in the day of accounts.

Unless Adventists are wrong! wrong! wrong!—wrong as to the moral condition of this world; wrong as to the physical condition of this "groaning" earth, and any indications of her speedy dissolution; wrong as to any omens of approaching judgment legible in the scroll of the skies; wrong as to the "year-day theory" and its application to Roman Catholic domination and blood; wrong as to the co-incidental significance of these things (a vital point if yielded); indeed wrong, fundamentally so, in all their expositions and adjustments, historico-prophetic, of dates, events, and periods; all of which, or any part of which, the weakest of us could not a moment suppose;—then, truly, on the other hand, we have now, in the light of events, abundant reason for a lifting up of heads and a strengthening of hands; for firmer faith, and energy of action—a zeal according to knowledge—and for no uncertain sounding of trumpets.

We must either abandon our position,—and that of the Protestant world as well,—relative to "the Abomination of Desolation," or admit,—admit! let me rather say claim, and that with equal assurance,—that its limits are A. D. 538—1798. There are no other corresponding dates and events that stand connected with that power, and that also perfectly tally with all our supposed (?) signs. If we have "slumbered and slept," the "CRY" is OUT, let us wake up to a trimming of lamps. If what I have said is true, with what a sickly assumption of ministerial modesty, with what "prudential" puerility, do any hesitate to proclaim 1873 in the ears of a sleeping but judgment-bound church and world. The rashness of any can afford no covering for the withholding of our better judgment.

To our brethren of New York I would say that the appeal for a time conference (one or more) in this State is heartily seconded by Brn. J. Wendell, A. C. Newell, J. E. Wells, and doubtless others, could we consult them, both of preachers and laymen. And some of our eastern brethren have signified a willingness to come on should we have such a meeting. We desire a free expression of opinion. Please correspond with the writer, or those mentioned above. May the Lord guide us, is the constant prayer of yours, "waiting,"

WM. E. BROWN.

VINELAND, N. J.

I wish to answer some of the questions that are frequently asked in reference to this somewhat celebrated place. It is located about twenty-five miles from the Atlantic ocean on the east, forty-five miles from Cape May—a noted ocean watering place—on the south, and twenty miles from the Delaware Bay on the west. It is thirty-four miles from Philadelphia, and one hundred and fifteen from New York. The West Jersey and the New Jersey Southern Railroads intersect each other at this point. The former extends from Philadelphia to Cape May. The latter stretches from New York to Delaware Bay, with a prospect of a speedy extension further South.

Those wishing to visit this place from the north and east will take the steamer at the foot of Murray St., New York, at eight o'clock in the morning. After a pleasant ride of twenty miles over the entire length of New York harbor and across Raritan Bay, you will land at Sandy Hook, where you will take the cars. These are always on the spot, as the boats and cars are owned and run by the same company, under the general management of G. W. Bentley. In the summer two through trips are made each way, but in the winter only one.

Vineland village is undoubtedly the most beautiful in all the country. The village plot consists of one square mile of land, laid off in streets at right angles. The streets are wide and straight, and all actual settlers are required to ornament the road-side with trees. I should put the village population at three thousand. But the adjoining territory is thickly settled for miles around. The land is mostly cut up into small fruit farms, varying in size from five to twenty acres.

The soil is peculiar. It is much better than it looks. It appears to be a mixture of sand, gravel, clay, and loam. It may not be the best for general farming purposes, although some claim that it is good for anything, but it is certainly good for fruit. Trees grow very rapidly, and large quantities of strawberries, black raspberries, peaches, pears, and grapes, are annually produced and sent away. Sweet potatoes are also raised in considerable quantities. Corn and other grains are raised to some extent.

The roads are the best I ever saw. The subsoil, which is thrown up for sidewalks and wagon roads, becomes very hard and smooth. It is a real pleasure to ride over such thoroughfares. The surface of the land is not hilly, nor yet is it a dead level. It is gently rolling. The grades do not generally rise to a greater perpendicular height than twenty or thirty feet.

The climate is considered one of the best. This consideration had much to do with the decision to make Vineland my home. Many invalids have recovered by coming here. This is not saying that I have found a paradise. Of course there is sickness here. Physicians are to be found, of every school, who have more or less to do. Neither the skill of the doctors nor the wholesome air of this latitude can wholly rob death of his prey. Still, there are many and strong testimonials to the unusual healthfulness of the climate. The winters are said to be mild and pleasant. The sea-breezes, modified by the distances above specified, must give us some of their invigorating effects. The water—which is all drawn from wells—is pure and soft. It is used for washing purposes without the least trouble.

Vineland is not so driving a business place as some others where there are more mills and factories. There are, however, several shoe-factories in successful operation, and more in contemplation. The usual line of mercantile and mechanical business is carried on with considerable enterprise. Permanent improvements are being made, and the place is doubtless destined to grow while time continues. It has had its feverish fits, passed the wildness of its youth, and has now settled upon a firmer basis, and is likely to exhibit more of manly wisdom and strength.

The educational advantages of the place are good. A public school-house is located on each corner of the "mile square," and a high school has been established in a more central position. A capacious building is soon to be erected to accommodate it.

Grog shops are considered a public nuisance, and are not allowed to exist in the community. The absence of these drunkard-making dens must certainly tell favorably on the morals of the place. It is seldom that you see such staggering specimens of humanity as are sure to be produced where alcoholic drinks are dealt out under the farcical shield of a "license." Thank God for the privilege of living where the fumes of whisky do not rise from a single business place in town!

There is such a variety of churches that almost every one can find a congenial home somewhere. It may be well to say that there are established societies of the following denominations:—Baptist, Presbyterian, Methodist, Unitarian, Congregational, Episcopal, Swedenborgian, and Spiritualist. There are a few, also, who are interested in the great doctrine of Christ's second coming to raise the dead, judge the world, destroy the wicked, and crown the saints with immortal life in the kingdom to come. Of these, however, there is no regular organization. I believe there ought to be one church in Vineland which shall take the Bible as its only creed and make Christian character the sole test of membership. I have some reason to hope that such a church will be constituted "not many days hence." A. A. Phelps.

Some curious statistics about small birds have recently been laid before the English Parliament. The thrush is said to work from 2.30 in the morning until 9.30 in the evening, or nineteen hours. During this time he feeds his young two hundred and sixty-six times. Blackbirds work seventeen hours. The male feeds the young forty-four times, and the female fifty-five times a day. The industrious titmouse manages to spread four hundred and seventeen meals a day before its voracious offspring. According to one naturalist, their food consists largely of caterpillars. These statements, and one hundred more quite as curious, were made in an eloquent plea for a law to protect small birds from being snared and shot.

What an active world we live in, and how plainly this promiscuous creation of animate beings bespeaks a great Creator. W. S.

THE BIBLE BANNER.

This paper is edited by Elds. John Couch, Wm. Sheldon, and A. A. Phelps, and is published monthly, at $1 a year, with a choice book, or fine lithograph engraving, given to each subscriber. Furnished to subscribers of the Crisis three months free, or both one year for $2.50, or $2.75 with a book or engraving free. All orders for the Banner and Crisis should be addressed to Geo. T. Adams, 160 Hanover street, Boston, Mass. All orders for the Bible Banner alone should be addressed to H. A. King, 14 Murray street, New York.

Bro. F. H. Chamberlain writes:—"After having (as I thought) nearly recovered, I am down again with a relapse. From over-exertion and a combination of unfavorable circumstances, I was prostrated, and rendered helpless—confined to the bed for some days, and suffered very severe pain. I am now trying to get about again, but with feeble steps.

I wish to acknowledge, very gratefully, the receipt of the following letters since my last report: Friends at Newton Lower Falls, $2. H. Dickie, $3. W. L. Hersey, $1. Bro. Jones, $2. Bro. Miller, $1. Rebekah D. Peko, $2. H. H. Hemenway, $1.

Evidences of the near approach of the final day abound on every hand. Many of those who will not see these evidences, yet realize with me the truth of Jacob's reply to Pharaoh, and its special application to their own case. "Few and evil are the days . . . of my pilgrimage." Yet hope of a home in the coming kingdom cheers us in our night of trial, and we shall soon see the end of the conflict, and the last of the storm. Pray for me and my scattered family."

The Post Office.—Faneuil Hall will be used only a month for the P. O., and then the department will occupy the Old South Church, which has been procured by Postmaster Burt and Mr. Petherbridge, chief special agent of the Post Office Department, and will be the seat of the department until the new building is completed. The church will be arranged at once for its new occupants, and, it is thought, will make a better office than the one just left. The yard belonging to the estate will be built upon and used by one branch of the department.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

FRANCE.

COMPLICATED STATE OF AFFAIRS.

Nov. 13. The affairs of the French government are again threatened and are likely to become complicated by the movement contemplated by the opposition party in the Assembly. The monarchist party in the Assembly have become considerably agitated over the annual address of President Thiers, which was read in reassembling that body yesterday, and contemplated a combined movement on the part of members in the Assembly opposed to the present policy of adminstration for the adoption of an address to be promulgated in opposition to the message of Thiers, declaring that France is not republican in its present form of government. The movement has developed considerable strength.

ITALY.

FEARS OF CHOLERA.

Nov. 13. A despatch from Rome says that in consequence of reports of cholera in the southern part of Austria, the government has issued orders requiring all vessels arriving at ports in Italy from the former country, to undergo quarantine.

GERMANY.

Gales and snow-storms are reported from various points along the coast. At Lubeck the River Trave rose to a great height, overflowed its banks, and laid a large tract of country under water, destroying crops and property generally. The streets of Lubeck were flooded and the vessels in port badly damaged by the storm.

A despatch from Stralsund reports eighty vessels totally wrecked in the gale. The town is considerably damaged by inundation. The fishermen on the islands of Zingst, Dars and Hiddensee lost all their property, smacks and apparatus. The houses and contents were heavily damaged by high water. Nearly all the cattle on the islands were drowned. The wells were flooded from the sea, and the inhabitants are suffering greatly for want of fresh water, food and shelter. The government has despatched steamers with supplies to their relief. The island of Rugen also lost heavily. Many of the fishing boats were destroyed, and the fields near the coast are flooded. The loss of life, both on the islands and the mainland, is very great.

GREAT BRITAIN.

FEARFUL STORM.

London, Nov. 14. The heavy gales on the British coast, last night, were very destructive to life and shipping. Reports of the wreck of many vessels are already received. Fifty lives are known to be lost, and it is feared that this number will be increased by additional disasters. The gale was also very severe on the Prussian coast.

DENMARK.

DESTRUCTIVE STORMS.

A Kiel despatch says that destructive floods and inundations, accompanied by severe gales and heavy snow-storms, have been experienced in that locality and the surrounding districts, causing great damage to shipping and other property. A number of the vessels in harbor here have sustained serious damage, some having been torn from their moorings and dashed against the piers or swept to sea by the violence of the storm. Vessels bound to various seaports in the Baltic have been driven into ports of shelter. Numerous wrecks are reported along the coast, attended by loss of life. The Holstein canal, two miles north of Kiel, was flooded, and submerged the adjacent districts for a considerable distance.

SPAIN.

THE SITUATION.

The political situation in the province of Cadiz is becoming critical. The strength and influence of the Carlist movement is on the increase. Insurgent bands are reported as having done serious damage to property, and depredation and outrage are frequent throughout the province. It is stated that the government will shortly issue an order to the commandant of the royal troops at Cadiz, authorizing him to take active measures for the suppression of the rebels in that province. Fresh disturbances are reported in Andalusia and Aragon.

DOMESTIC.

THE GREAT FIRE.

GENERAL NOTES.

The number of publication offices destroyed by the recent conflagration was twenty-seven; among them were one daily newspaper, thirteen weekly papers and ten magazines.

Of the nine million pounds of wool burned, about five million pounds was domestic fleece pulled, and two million California and Oregon, all valued at about four million five hundred thousand dollars.

The stores between Hovey's and the corner of Washington street are completely ruined, only a part of the front of Shreve, Crump & Low's store remaining. On the opposite corner, A. C. Mudge's and the American Watch Company's stores are intact, and are the only ones on Washington street between Summer and Milk, on the east side.

The mails for Europe are heavily freighted with newspapers giving accounts of the Boston fire. One steamer, which left New York on Wednesday, carried nearly 5000 pounds of mail matter.

One large firm who were burnt out have made seven removals since they started with what goods they could save on Saturday night, and are not yet permanently located. They lost some of their property at every move. Only the most valuable articles were selected, and they were fastened on the teams with velvet costing thirteen dollars per yard, for lack of cord.

No more violent measures will be taken to reduce standing walls until the search for valuables is finished.

A Chicago special says the subscriptions there for the relief of Boston will reach $400,000.

Among the waiters at a restaurant in Ward IV., to-day, may be noticed two men who, Saturday, were worth twenty thousand dollars, and, to-day, are penniless.

Harvard University has lost heavily by the Boston fire. It held property in the burnt district to the amount of $562,000. This amount includes the value of the land. It will cost $300,000 to rebuild.

A poor widow woman, who was burned out on Saturday night, managed to save a portion of her household goods by moving them to the sidewalk, and after a weary search found a room in which to live, but was unable, with the scanty means at her command, to employ a team to take her furniture to her new abode. At last she applied to a Mr. Milmore of Somerville, who is himself a poor man and has been without employment for the past three weeks by reason of his horse being disabled. She told her story to him, and he generously offered to do the work if she would find some one to help load the goods; and this when he could command any price he chose to ask from merchants who were anxious to save their goods.

The signal box No. 52, from which the alarm announcing the breaking out of the terrible conflagration was pulled in on Saturday night, was found among the ruins in perfect working order, with the exception of the "circuit wheel."

It is estimated that there will be an advance in the price of brick, the past season having been very unproductive and coast navigation being nearly ended for the year. The advance will probably be three dollars per thousand on common, and five dollars per thousand on face brick. With regard to stone, a large amount will be required to be cut and prepared, if the buildings are to be similar to those which have been burned. There is plenty on the district which can be used for foundations.

The proprietors of the Transcript have hired the building in Court avenue, known as the Sears House, and will remove thither as soon as it can be got ready for their use.

The city put a force of about fifteen hundred men at work in the streets through the ruins Thursday morning; the Water Board has also several gangs engaged in shutting off the water that is running to waste in the cellars; the fire alarm and despatch lines of telegraph are in process of restoration, and private parties have taken advantage of the general cooling off to get at their property under the debris.

"Carleton" is writing an account of the fire, which is to be issued in a few days by Shepherd & Gill.

The general aspect of the burnt district is, at present, suggestive of rejuvenation and reconstruction, and doubtless, from this time forward, the rate of improvement will increase day by day.

The committee for affording relief for women thrown out of work by the late fire, respectfully request the ministers or other representatives of churches, which propose to take action in affording such relief, to put themselves in communication with the Executive Committee at the vestry of Park-street Church, at any hour between nine and four o'clock.

The valuable plates of Worcester's Dictionary in the possession of Messrs. Brewer & Tileston, with those for their school books were saved, while their entire stock of books was destroyed.

THE YOUNGEST VICTIM OF THE FIRE.

The funeral of Mr. Frank D. Olmsted took place on Thursday from his mother's house in Cambridge. It was largely attended by sympathizing friends and by others who wished to pay respect to the generous purpose which cost him his life. For eighteen centuries the simple statement "the only son of his mother and she a widow," has gone straight to the hearts of millions, and rarely been more felt than in this event. Young Olmsted had recently entered the counting room of Messrs. Nevins & Co., and on Saturday night, finding that their building was not immediately exposed, he went to Federal street, and seeing there was danger that a wall next Walker's carriage depot might fall, he volunteered to rush in and give warning to the firemen, who were at work there. He was called back, but kept on, gave the warning, and was nearly out, when the wall fell. It did not bury him, but he was hit by fragments, receiving fatal wounds, of which he died on Sunday. Some of the firemen of engine No. 1 of Cambridge, who recognized him, brought him out at peril to themselves, and tenderly put a fireman's cape over him. This led at first to the mistake that he was a fireman, and he was reported as "the young fireman" who lost his life in the discharge of his duty. That indeed would have been a credit, but to him is due the honor of having volunteered in a perilous act of humanity. The deceased, who is a cousin to Mr. R. H. Dana, had recently left the High School of Cambridge, with flattering testimonials, to begin business life, and was only in his eighteenth year. He was known and loved for good conduct, pleasant manners, fearlessness in adventure, and for bodily activity. So much were the Cambridge firemen affected by his brave and generous effort, that, on the day of the funeral, they dressed their house in black, and set their flag at half-mast, and the City Government of Cambridge voted to make the funeral a municipal charge.

Services for the Troops at the Old South.—At the request of the troops at present performing guard duty in this city, a special soldiers' service was held in the Old South Sunday afternoon, at half-past four. Besides the soldiers, who occupied the body of the house, the galleries were well filled by citizens. The pastor, Rev. Dr. Manning, assisted by Rev. Mr. Murray of Park Street Church, conducted the services. Music was furnished by a choir of soldiers.

The following table presents the most accurate statement yet obtained of the losses by the insurance companies in each State, and by the foreign companies:—

New York companies	$6,850,500
Massachusetts companies	29,710,000
Connecticut companies	2,952,800
California companies	75,000
Illinois companies	30,000
Maine companies	400,000
Missouri companies	25,000
Minnesota companies	50,000
New Jersey companies	17,000
Ohio companies	205,000
Pennsylvania companies	2,776,500
Rhode Island companies	920,000
Wisconsin companies	50,000
Foreign companies	4,510,000
Total	$48,572,300

A Fowl Distemper.—Along the line of the Hudson River a terrible disease has broken out among the poultry. Chickens are dying by hundreds, and turkeys, geese and ducks in the market show signs of the malady. The disease appears to be assuming a form of destructive pestilence. It has also appeared in New York City.

In Brief.

—— Two of the largest snow-plows in the world are rapidly approaching completion at Omaha, for the use of the Union Pacific road.——Government is rapidly reducing its internal revenue force, and thus economizing running expenses.——The foreign governments requested by Great Britain to co-operate in the movement for the suppression of the East African slave trade, have sent replies expressing sympathy with the cause, but declining to unite in the active measures contemplated by England.——The horse disease still rages in the West. At Cincinnati business is greatly checked by it, and the fire department is organizing companies of fifty men to draw the engines. All along the Hudson River railroad the depots are crowded with freight which cannot be drawn away.——The French Assembly met at Versailles on Monday, and greeted M. Thiers with cheers. The Republican deputies claim that Republican sentiments are spreading in all the departments of France.——Mr. Spurgeon's sister is preaching at Willingham, England, with such success that the police authorities there have expressed their thanks to her for effecting a decrease in the number of criminal cases.

THE DIVINE LOVE.

O patient God, whom men forsake,
All kind, all gracious as thou art,
How soon our faithlessness would break
A human heart!

How vast must be the love so strong,
Its yearning, oh how fathomless,
That sin prolonged should yet prolong
Thy tenderness!

Though we may slight that love with doubt,
Thy paths of sweet commandment spurn,
Thou wilt in no wise cast him out
Who would return!

The uttermost thy love doth reach;
And oh, the pathos of its cry,
All humbled to our human speech—
"Why will ye die!"

Why not Thy wide compassion more
Than even all the powers of sin,
These feet would never find thy door,
And enter in.

We see thee as the suffering Christ,
With cross and passion bowed down!
Earth's meanest things for thee sufficed,
And sorrow's crown,

If only famished souls might flee
Life's husks for love's eternal feast,
And all might dwell in bliss with thee—
The very least!

"Lord, we repent!" "Lord, we believe!"
And thou acceptest even this?
And faithless wanderers will receive
With heavenly kiss?

O Love! we sink from thine embrace,
Thy feet to kiss forevermore!
The humblest is the fittest place
When souls adore!

LETTER FROM ENGLAND.

(From our English Correspondent.)

LECTURES.

Yesternight was the last of a week of Lectures delivered in Weymouth, on Prophecy. "Satan hindered" on one evening, and on the others we proved that the citadels of error and prejudice, if not impregnable, are very solid and adamantine in this country. As we see such a torrent of people pouring on in sin and ignorance of the day of God and the death eternal, our hearts are bowed down with sorrow. The "spirit of hearing the word of the Lord" has almost departed from the people; and it is only by the greatest and most persistent efforts that outsiders can be reached and be persuaded to listen to God's truth. Though we were the bearers of such important and momentous messages as those published in your last, yet the meetings were very thinly attended, so that sometimes, instead of preaching, it would have been more consonant with our feelings to have gone out and wept. Yet, spite of all appearances and discouragements, we keep up good hope concerning some, and believe the word spoken will not be completely lost on those who heard.

The best of attention was paid by the audience, though small; and we trust, if no converts were made, some saints were socketed more deeply into Christ, righteousness, and truth. Thus the work of God is forwarded. A deep, carnal security has grown upon the people. "Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the hearts of the children of men are fully set in them to do evil." Added to this, an alarming self-complaceney rules supreme in the country, and professors drug themselves into an easy, dreamy Christianity—a mere spiritless, powerless form, without the unction from on high.

The former unsecularity of the Church is now become flabbiness; its ancient manhood is exchanged for superstitious idiocy and servility. The fable potions dealt out to it Sunday after Sunday by Divinity Doctors, act as an opiate on its inherent power, and soothe and lull—I fear to say it—to damnation! I cannot but "stand in doubt" of many, though God forbid we should be censorious. We are inclined to endorse the conclusions of Father Ignatius, as uttered in the large Music Hall at Brighton on Sunday last, although we have no faith in the work of that celebrity. From a report of that lecture, we glean the following as the deductions of an observant and independent man:—

"The Rev. father came to the 'Unrealities of 19th Century Christianity.' Describing the effects of Christianity on the early converts, in leading them to sacrifice to the cause of Christ, he asked whether such Christianity gave the faintest outline of Brighton Christianity at the present time. He had not far to go to prove that it did not, and repudiating any wish to be personal, alluded to the fact of several persons having just left the room, as a proof of the shallow interest they took in religious matters. The world had patronized Christianity and conformed to its own views. Young men of the present day were denounced as the most miserable moral cowards, who joined in the corruptions which prevailed in modern society, because they were afraid of the ridicule and contempt of their companions. In proof of the moral degeneracy of the time, significant allusions were made to 'little law proceedings,' and the ugly tales which sometimes found their way into the papers. . . . With regard to the religious view of the question, he said that the majority of Christians in Brighton are humbugs—people who pretend to be what they are not. . . . He said that Christianity, which is the established religion of England, is established 'humbugism.'"

These thoughts were addressed to two thousand five hundred people; and surely if there were no cause for them, father Ignatius would be the last to step boldly to the front and charge home upon Episcopalian and nonconformist alike their terrible degeneracy.

Yet we hope to "labor on at God's command," "in season, and out of season." We have thought if we cannot get the people out in any other way, if we could arrange a discussion with an advocate of perverted theology, we might get their ear for old orthodoxy, and their heart for Christ.

CAST DOWN, BUT NOT DESTROYED.

We have just had news from some of the little bodies of believers who live in "regions beyond," but who have "like precious faith" with ourselves. It is far from sunshine with them. They have much to endure. Many of them are like the man whom the "religious world" of Christ's day cast out for owning the Messiah they professed to love and wait for. Many of them are excommunicated for their "dangerous heresy," as flippant tongue express it. They write us it is with them the day of small and feeble things; but there is a note of joy with their mourning. The cry of a King is among them. They rejoice in the assurance—"The Lord of hosts is with us; the God of Jacob is our refuge." Only one word ought to be supplemented to this; it is, "Alleluia!"

CATHOLICITY.

The following is an advertisement cut from a stinging Catholic organ. I presume it is native, and a true specimen of Catholicity, so called:—

"NEW CHURCH, STOURBRIDGE.

For the love of God and our Blessed Lady, I still ask a trifle, if only a few postage stamps, for my Church. After seven years' struggling it is now, thank God, opened; but there is a heavy debt upon it, which cramps and cripples us. To assist me in paying off this debt, I still therefore solicit a helping hand,—a donation, a contribution in any way, a laid-aside gold ring, a watch-chain, a bracelet, a locket, an article for my next Bazaar, anything. On my part, I promise most faithfully to all benefactors a priest's best return—two Masses every week and a Daily Remembrance so long as God spares me to stand at his altar. WALTER KEEN.

Catholic Church, Stourbridge."

This is what I call "value for money received"!

ONE OF MANY.

In this day of wickedness and adulterations, merchants and store-keepers are just as faithful to adulterate their wares as the ministry are to deal out "mixtures" from the pulpit. I commend the following as a sign of the business honesty of the day, auguring the looked-for time when man with man shall be scrupulously just, in a fabled millennium:—

"TEA IN SCOTLAND.—The chances of getting a cup of good tea in Glasgow may be calculated to a fraction. They are as six to twenty-one. Out of twenty-seven samples of black tea analyzed for a local paper, six alone were genuine, while twenty were more or less adulterated. There remained only one sample more, and that valuable packet was found not to contain a single leaf which ever grew upon a tea tree."

DIARIES.

Perhaps I am now "sending coals to Newcastle," as the phrase goes; but I consider the following too good for your readers to lose. It has not appeared in your widely distributed weekly; and I am sure it is so true and just, and a trifle sarcastic also, that the parties concerned cannot find fault with its tale. It may make them wince, however; but if this wincing results in shame and reformation, no one will be sorry for the expose, where some may be positively benefited.

"The late appearance in the Congregationalist of one or two 'ministerial diaries,' has called forth several rejoinders, one of which, from the Tribune, we produce below, which will be read with a smile more than with a smart.

"New England clergymen are comparing accounts of a week's labor, both of the sort they are willing to consider light and heavy work. One pastor, among the duties of an easy week, carefully enumerates visits to his mother, and the hours passed in reading to his wife, also the evenings he took tea out, and the concert he enjoyed. Is the inference from this that other men ought to look on reading to their wives and visiting their mothers—possibly also their mothers-in-law—as a sacred obligation, or that clergymen find these rather crosses to be borne, than pleasures to be indulged in? This by the way: Among the more arduous tasks were writing seven letters in one day, and attending a minister's meeting of two hours. Duty of a heavier sort performed by 'the incumbent of a small country parish in New Hampshire,' may be summed up in four letters written in one week, the first in German to a Berlin professor asking for the loan of a Hebrew grammar, twelve calls, made mostly in the evening, one sermon written, five weekly papers read, beside divers readings in German for 'my article on Galilee, on which I have been at work more or less for a year,' and a half hour of writing 'Hebrew on my blackboard,' with Father Lacordaire in French, and an afternoon in Syriac. The philological demands of country parishes in New Hampshire are extensive.

But the question occurs in reading these diaries—Is it manly to parade the ministry as an example of labor? Compared with the daily work of any thriving merchant who receives and answers twenty to fifty letters a day on an average the year through, and who does not count newspaper reading as part of his labors exactly, the record does not seem very heavy. Most editors on daily journals write every twenty-four hours as much matter as would amount to a weekly discourse, and that showing as much wear of brains as many of the sermons the public listen to every Sunday. Perhaps the preparation of statistics, or collection of facts for a 'leading editorial' is as real hard work as making 'notes on the word hevel translated vanity.' Indeed, looking at the earnestness and effort which business men put into their concerns, and the anxiety they endure, ordinary clerical routine, by the showing of those who follow it, is a mere trifle. The cry of ministerial overwork rises from the bodily and spiritual feebleness induced by a sanctified neglect of every rule that is necessary to health, together with the enforced adoption of an unnatural tone of feeling—that gravity which is still considered the chief christian virtue by many good people."

THE OPPOSITION.

Some time ago, just as the truth was beginning to take root in many minds, there came out a work in England to crush it in the birth. The name of that work was—"The Religious Tendencies of the Times." The author seemed to understand all about the "newly-revived but oft-exploded heresy" of the final extinction of the wicked. But, strange to say, although said to be often exploded, it was whole enough to cause him to make another attempt to shatter it. We need scarcely say there was plenty of fizz in the work in question, but it did nothing. Its merits were spread all over the country. But looking at a copy, we found it a polemic fight with men of straw. Positions were misrepresented, arguments were falsified, views were distorted, and then an analysis was made of the faiths thus tampered with.

The name of the author was Mr. James Grant. And now this champion for orthodoxy has set himself the task to edit a paper, to keep up his reputation as a redoubtable warrior for heathen orthodoxy, such as the immortality of the soul, transmigration of spirits from clay houses to celestial ones, and all the long catalogue of errors that pluck from the gospel its distinctiveness and glory, till a scholarly Hindoo could see little difference between Brahminism and Christianity. The Rock thus notices the sheet referred to:

"The first number of Mr. James Grant's new paper has been issued. The introductory address states that—'All those great central truths which constitute the glory of the gospel, and which God has in every age honored and blessed, are either openly denied and assailed, or habitually ignored in most of the pulpits of our land,' and that 'the bulk of the religious press comes no less under the same condemnation.'"

If Mr. Grant has any strength of mind to spare, we could point out to him a better use for his abilities.

A DRUNKARD'S CHILD.

The following is as touching a story of a drunkard's child as can be read. Knowing that many supporters of the Crisis are interested in the drinking reform, we think they might like to read it:—

"On the 24th ult. a sprightly little girl, aged ten years, who had been noticed sitting modestly on a back bench in the Jefferson Market Police Court during the discharge of the watch, stepped up to the bench when the rush of business was over, and bashfully told the judge that her mother had been arrested the previous evening for being intoxicated on Seventh Avenue. The family, consisting of herself and little brother, aged eight, and her father and mother, reside in a tenement house in West Thirty-first street. She and her little brother support the father and mother, who are both drunkards. The little boy makes pen-wipers, which she sells in the evenings. She wanted to get her mother out and had no money. All she had was a pen-wiper, which she presented to the urbane justice, who listened attentively to her artless and sorrowful story. He took the wiper and directed the clerk to make out a discharge for the woman. He then gave the little girl a bank note, telling her to buy something for herself and brother, but not to give it to her father or mother lest they should procure liquor with it. With gratitude and joy beaming from her eyes she thanked the kind-hearted magistrate and promised to bring him some pen-wipers; then taking the hand of her unfortunate parent she led her out of the court room."

ITALY.—The Congregation of the Index Expurgatorius has published a decree mentioning twenty-one literary works which are henceforth prohibited.

THE GREAT FIRE IN BOSTON.

ORIGIN OF THE FIRE AND ITS SPREAD.

At quarter past seven o'clock on Saturday evening the alarm was first sounded from Box 52, corner of Lincoln and Bedford streets. The fire had been discovered in the large five story granite building on the corner of Summer and Kingston streets, which was surmounted by a wooden building called a mansard roof, and that a very high one, which overtopped all other edifices in the vicinity. This store was numbered 87, 89 and 91 Summer street. It ran along Kingston street about one hundred feet. The lower floor and the basement were occupied by Messrs. Tebbetts, Baldwin & Davis, wholesale dry-goods dealers; the second and third stories by A. K. Young, corset and hoop-skirt maker.

It was in the engine room of this building that the fire began. The open fall way or elevator served as a chimney. Before the fire was discovered the flames were rushing up the elevator with tremendous power, and in ten minutes the fire was not only in every story, but the lofty tinder-box on the top of edifice was a roaring mass of flame.

The engines were promptly on the spot, but the roof was so high up that it could not be reached. The heat radiated from the burning building was intense, and especially from the roof. From cellar to roof it was a mass of flames.

Then the disadvantage of mansard roofs on such an occasion, began to be manifested. The buildings across Kingston street on one hand and across Summer on the other, caught from the heat. The window casings and the French roofs got on fire, and these roofs, like the first, being of light material and high up beyond the reach of the water, were soon masses of flames. The heat caused a strong current of air to spring up, and the flames lay down across the streets in every direction, and skipped like things of life over other mansard roofs.

Before this the firemen in the streets in front of the first building that caught had been terribly annoyed by the heat. Only a few could stand it, and they only by the fact that another fireman lay in the gutter, with a hand hose showering them continually with water. When the other corner of Kingston street had caught, and was burning, and when the fire had gone at right angles the other way across Summer street, and the great square formed by Summer street, Otis street and Winthrop square was in flames, being Nos. 56, 68, 70 and 72 Summer street.

To live in the streets now seemed impossible, and yet the firemen, behind barricades, pressed boldly forward, and held their position until the whole block was in flames, a hot-bed of destruction, beyond all human control, radiating the heat of ten thousand furnaces in every direction. The French roofs of the next northerly structures, forming the rest of the square, viz., Winthrop block, the magnificent granite structure owned by J. M. Beebe, and the finest block of stores in the city, were soon burning like kindling wood. Here Haughton, Perkins, Wood & Co., had $800,000 worth of goods, and Anderson, Heath & Co. had dress goods worth $1,000 000. The fire ran around the eaves, descended to the next story, and within fifteen minutes was coming down the broad stairway like a stream of molten lava. A burning board was carried across Devonshire street, lodging in the window opposite Anderson, Heath & Co.'s, and the block was soon in flames.

From Winthrop square, down which the fire came in a wedge-shaped column, the fire advanced steadily forward, spreading to the right and the left. Half an hour from the bursting out of the flames in Beebe's buildings it had spread on the one side to Franklin street, and on the other to Federal street. The advance toward the water was very rapid, and within two hours the line reached all the way from Franklin street to the Boston, Hartford and Erie depot at the foot of Summer street, just in the range of the wind blowing from the Beebe building. The further progress of the flames was eastward and northward toward Fort Hill and State street, and westward toward Washington street, where high buildings, with mansard roofs, facilitated their progress, and defied the stoutest efforts of the firemen. Hour by hour the flames fought their way, beating back the lines of men who stubbornly resisted their progress. That the firemen worked well and bravely is not questioned—whether they were skilfully directed is a proper subject for official investigation.

THE CONFLAGRATION RENEWED.

At midnight last night, three and then another, making four alarms, were rung out from Box 42, summoning the department again to the scene of the fire. The gas from the supply pipes in the stores of W. B. Storms & Co. and R. S. Stearns & Co., at the upper and southerly end of Summer street, having been running for hours, suddenly exploded, knocking out into the street the entire front wall of the building, and setting the premises again on fire. From Storms' establishment the flames speedily communicated to the extensive building on the corner of Summer and Washington streets, occupied on the ground floor by Messrs. Shreve, Crump & Low, jewellers and dealers in elegant gas fixtures. The upper stories were occupied by Wheeler & Wilson, sewing machine warerooms; Lowell & Brett, engravers, and by two or three custom tailors.

Their efforts to stay the progress of the devouring element were unavailing, and in less than half an hour the magnificent block on the corner of Summer and Washington streets, in the windows of which thousands have feasted their eyes on displays of rare jewelry and articles of vertu, was to be fated. The Park House was close to the rear of the burning building, while Jordan, Marsh & Co.'s retail store, an immense structure, stood only forty feet distant from the hottest of the fire. Just at this point the efforts of the firemen seemed to be concentrated. Fortunately there were a score of steamers that could be drawn from other points. The range of three story brick buildings, lately occupied by Jordan & Marsh, but within a few days taken possession of by Crosby & Morse, who were to throw the whole into a grand store in connection with their Washington street establishment, took fire and were very soon in flames. All the people occupying buildings on Avon street were promptly ordered by the firemen and police first to extinguish the gas, and then to vacate their houses as soon as possible, as explosions similar to the one in Summer street and elsewhere were likely to occur. At this time the flames from the rear of the burning buildings were breaking over the Park House in Central Court, and threatening to communicate with the immense building of Jordan, Marsh & Co. The scene beggars description. Men, women and children were fleeing in every direction, half frantic with fright, and looking only for personal safety. The Adams House proved itself a house of refuge for many who were destitute. Mrs. Martha Woodson and her aged mother occupied a room in the second story of the Shreve, Crump & Low building. They were awakened by the explosion, and the daughter, in her bewilderment, jumped to the sidewalk, receiving severe bruises and burns. Her mother perished in the flames. Further down Summer street a woman appeared at a fourth-story window with an infant in her arms, and made preparations to jump. Fortunately she was rescued from her perilous position. The occurrence of this explosion necessitated the shutting off of the gas throughout the city, and, for a time, Boston was left in darkness. The telegraph offices are shut up, and candles were in general use everywhere.—11th inst.

The News Elsewhere.

SYMPATHETIC WORDS FROM LONDON.

London, Nov. 11.—The news of the terrible fire in Boston has caused general consternation in this city. A deep feeling of sympathy is expressed by all classes. Relief committees are being rapidly formed in this as well as other cities for the purpose of sending substantial assistance to the sufferers. A meeting will also be held this evening, when resolutions expressive of the sympathy of the English people with the people of Boston in their calamity will be adopted. The afternoon papers generally write in sympathy with America in her affliction, following so closely upon the Chicago disaster last year. They express the belief, however, that Boston will not succumb to the calamity, but again rise to her former position as one of her grandest cities of the Union.

At New York.

NEW YORK, Nov. 11.—A meeting was held at the Chamber of Commerce at noon today, to express sympathy with the sufferers by the Boston fire, Hon. William E. Dodge, president. Resolutions were introduced and adopted, resolving, that it becomes this mercantile community promptly to tender to merchants of Boston and to all the sufferers, expression of our deep and hearty sympathy, and to proffer such generous measures of relief as circumstances of case and urgencies of time demand; also resolving that committees be appointed to consider measures for these purposes. A committee of ten was appointed, the president of the chamber being chairman of committee. Several speeches were made. Mr. Law moved a preamble and resolution, referring to the danger of Mansard roofs, and proposing that a committee of the chamber be appointed to visit fire insurances, and recommend measures to be taken to secure the early establishment of a board of engineers, who shall be authorized, in case of fire, to enter upon and blow up any building when fire shall have passed beyond the control of the fire department.

At Washington.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 11.—The Secretary of the Treasury this morning received a telegram from the President of the Merchants Bank of Boston, saying that there is no reason for a panic. The banks stand firm. The loss is large, but falls upon persons who are generally able to stand it. Another telegram to the Secretary, from New York, says the disposition to create a panic is abated.

Chicago.

At a meeting in Chicago on Monday, Mayor Medill presiding, speeches of sympathy were made, and $100,000 was donated for the relief of the sufferers. Robert Laird Collyer, N. K. Fairbanks, and Dr. H. V. Johnson were appointed a committee to convey the money to Boston, and started Monday evening.

The Times calls upon merchants owing notes in Boston, to pay at once without waiting for them to come due.

The following from the Chicago Typographical Union has been received by the President of the Boston Union: "Five hundred dollars ready for you. How shall we send it?"

The following speaks for itself:—

"AMERICAN LECTURE BUREAU,
114 Washington street.

To the Editors of the Boston Journal:—

I am instructed by James A. Froude to state that the proceeds, belonging to him, of his whole course of lectures in Boston will be given to the sufferers by the fire.

Incidents, Items, etc.

CLEARING THE STREETS.

Laborers were at work Monday clearing the sidewalks and streets of the bricks and stone which came down with the falling walls, burying the horse railroad tracks in Washington, Summer, Kingston and Chauncey streets and the Union Freight Railroad in Broad street. Not many days will elapse before the street passenger cars can run on their accustomed routes, and platform cars brought down into the burnt district to remove the ruins.

A MILITARY CORDON AROUND THE BURNT DISTRICT.

The police and soldiers were posted at all the streets leading to and surrounding the burnt district, forming a complete cordon around the ruins.

Along the water front the great piles of coal burned brightly, emitting intense heat, to subdue which several tug-boats, including the Argus, H. W. Workmen, and Guide, threw streams all day.

BOSTON IN DARKNESS.

The terrible glare of Saturday evening can never be forgotten while those live who saw it. Last night (Nov. 12th), Boston presented a picture, the inky blackness of which will ever be associated with the brilliancy of the conflagration. The gas throughout the city was turned off, the moon was obscured by clouds, and the only light for the two hundred and fifty thousand of people were the primitive candles and the later-day lamps. The scenes all over the city were curiously picturesque. Many citizens illuminated with campaign lanterns; the theatres, lecture rooms, libraries and lyceum halls, and a great number of stores usually open evenings were closed, and the dim light over the burnt district was the brightest of the night. As a matter of course there were but few promenaders on the streets.

GUNPOWDER.

When the fire threatened State street, Gen. Benham counseled the blowing up of different buildings on Kilby street, and also the destruction of buildings above and below the old Post Office building, but this was not done. At another time, under charge of the fire authorities and citizens' detail, the Post Office itself was mined with the intention of causing its destruction, but this plan was not carried out, as the onward march of the flames was checked.

A large amount of powder was used in the various operations in Milk, Water, Congress, Lindall and Kilby streets. At least one hundred pounds of powder were used in each building, and sometimes two hundred pounds, three hundred and even a greater amount was brought into requisition. Most of the powder was brought from the Navy Yard and other United States depositories or from the powder boat in the harbor. General Benham also ordered up two tons of the material from Fort Independence, and it was brought up on the Engineer's steamer "Tourist" and landed at Central wharf.

Shipmasters, who arrived Monday, report that they saw the light of the fire ninety miles off.

The fragments of burned paper from the fire were carried a long distance in a southeasterly direction, the course the wind was blowing at the time. A gentleman from North Weymouth says that fragments of burning paper fell in that vicinity like snow flakes. Among the pieces of paper, checks, etc., gathered in his yard was a portion of the page of a ledger from No. 56 Franklin street, and he thus learned the exact location of the fire.

One gentleman who met a friend Monday afternoon, wrung his hand and said, as his voice choked with emotion, "Yesterday at this time I was worth $20,000. Now I have not money enough to pay a grocery bill."

It appears that the work of rebuilding the burnt district has actually begun—not on a large scale, of course, but enough to say that a beginning has been made.

The first official aid tendered to Boston was from distant Chicago. Her people gratefully remembered the generosity of Boston at the time of their own great calamity.

As soon as the Old South Church can be fixed up, the Post office will be moved to that place.

Insurance.

As nearly as can be ascertained, the distant insurance offices that have risks in Boston, are instructing their agents to settle in full. Philadelphia, Hartford, Western Massachusetts and Eastern offices are especially prompt in these notifications, and if there are any failures among New York offices, they will be very exceptional instances.

Capitalists are offering prompt relief to insurance companies in numerous instances. Meetings of directors are held in nearly every company, and the results of their consultations will be made known at an early hour.

Savings Banks.

The savings banks of Boston are all safe to-day. Their losses by the fire are very small indeed compared to their means.

It is a matter for congratulation that six of the seven Boston banks whose banking rooms were destroyed by fire, have entirely escaped injury except the loss of office furniture.

The New Post Office.

The damage to this building is confined to the exterior walls on Water and Milk streets. The front on Devonshire street is intact. Mr. G. J. F. Bryant has already received orders to recut the stone. The total loss will be about $50,000.

Mayor Gaston.

From Saturday evening up to this time Mayor Gaston has been at the City Hall, issuing orders and giving advice to the thousands who have thronged his office. One of his earliest acts was to send to Adjutant General Cunningham with a request for a military force to assist the police. Although greatly exhausted, he is still at his office, and intends to remain until all danger from the conflagration has passed, and the city is restored to order and safety.—12th.

Home Relief.

The Young Men's Christian Union rendered efficient and valuable aid to the laborers at the fire on Saturday night. Long tables were set in the front room, upon which were spread plentiful supplies of bread and butter, meats coffee, and other substantials, and to which all the firemen were made welcome. Not only this, but baskets of eatables were sent by messengers to those firemen who could not leave their posts to visit the rooms.

The chapel of Hollis street church was opened early Sunday morning for a similar purpose, and abundant stores of meat, bread soup and coffee were despatched to the firemen at their engines throughout the day. The Rev. Mr. Chaney, the pastor, substituted for the usual Sunday school lessons an assignment of each teacher and her assistants to a particular street, to collect cooked food for this purpose, and himself, with two boys and a handcart, went among the men at their posts and distributed the food thus gathered.

The Children's Mission, at 227 Tremont street, was promptly opened Sunday for the reception of children whose homes had been burned.

Jordan, Marsh & Co. donate $10,000 through Chief Damrell for the benefit of the firemen.

The Mayor read a communication from the town of Woburn, that the citizens had voted to dispense with the town celebration, and devote the funds to the aid of Boston.

The managers of the home for Little Wanderers give notice that they will furnish a home for one hundred children who may need temporary assistance.

The Mayor received a check from Blake Brothers & Co., at 28 State street, presenting the city with $10 000, to be added to the General Relief Fund.

The Lumber Dealers' Association held a meeting at the Lumber Exchange yesterday, and adopted resolutions tendering to all who wished to rebuild the stock of lumber now in possession of the association at such prices as have recently ruled in their respective establishments, and pledging themselves to stand firm against any advance in price, unless made by absolute necessity.

Any one having work of any kind for the sufferers can speedily communicate with them by applying to or addressing the Free Employment Bureau of the Boston Young Men's Christian Association, corner of Tremont and Elliot streets.

The superintendent of the Boston News Association, No. 14 Tremont street, offers the free use of its rooms to reporters connected with New York, Western and Southern papers, and to those city journalists who have been burnt out.

PROMINENT BUILDINGS destroyed by the fire: Trinity Church, Transcript Building, Macullar, Williams and Parker's clothing establishment, Lovejoy's carpet store, Merchants' Exchange, and St. Stephen's church, all massive structures of stone and marble.

The Globe says—"Boston owes its great fire of Saturday night to its high buildings with wooden mansard roofs. Narrow streets, it is true, were unfavorable to the efforts of the firemen, but it was the creeping of flames along these roofs, and thence down to the lower stories, where strength was gained for a further advance, that gave the conflagration its terrible sweep."

Allegations that the firemen were not prompt in reaching the spot where the fire began and in getting to work there, are emphatically denied by the members of the board of fire engineers. The chief was perfectly satisfied with the promptness of the response.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12. The following telegram to-day was sent from the Treasury Department:— WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.

To General B. F. Butler and Thomas Russell, Collector, Boston, Mass.:

The President authorizes me to say that every possible means of relief and aid will be afforded to the citizens of Boston by the government, and should circumstances appear to demand action by Congress, such action will be recommended by him.

(Signed) GEO. S. BOUTELL,
Secretary of Treasury.

It is believed that the amount of insurance in London companies upon property in the burnt district of Boston is two and a half million dollars. A commission is to be sent to Boston by London companies to make an investigation of the facts in relation to the origin and progress of the conflagration, as a matter of general importance to insurance interests.

The high wind Tuesday night blew down many of the fragments of wall, and this morning (13th), several gangs of men with ladders, ropes and tackle, commenced systematically to pull down others. W. M Rumney & Co., razed the granite front of the store of William H. Horton & Co., Franklin street, and David H. Jacobs did the same with the remaining walls of Mercantile Building, corner of Summer and Hawley streets. A portion of the walls of Capen's Post Office Building, corner of Summer and Chauncy streets, fell during the gale Tuesday night, and this forenoon the front of the block was pulled down, falling with a terrific crash into and across Summer street.

There is, perhaps, no place where the fire retains its hold more firmly and tenaciously than on that portion of Broad street which suffered, the huge mounds of coal which remain bare and uncovered on the dismantled wharves continuing to burn, notwithstanding the efforts of several engines stationed in that locality. At night some of them burn brilliantly, while others like smouldering volcanoes remain enveloped in dense masses of smoke, through which at times dart blue tongues of flame, producing a strange, almost earthly effect.

Citizens' Relief Committee.

The Citizens' Relief Committee held its third daily session at the City Hall Wednesday forenoon, Hon. Wm. Gray in the chair.

A dispatch was read from Jackson, Miss., stating that $500 had been contributed to the relief of the Boston sufferers by the citizens of that city.

A check for $20 was received from the First Congregational Church of West Newbury, to aid negro women rendered houseless by the fire.

A dispatch was read from Mr. Henry D. Cone, of Housatonic, Mass., contributing $200 to the Relief Fund.

A dispatch was read from Rev. Abbott E Kittredge, of Chicago, stating that the Third Presbyterian Church of that city had contributed $1100 to the Relief Fund.

A Testament, charred and blackened by the great fire, together with other fragments of the ruin, were found in a field at South Hingham on Sunday, fifteen miles distant.

San Francisco is to hold a special meeting with reference to the relief of sufferers by the fire.

The Lowell Manufacturing Company had about six hundred rolls of carpeting in the warehouses of their agents, which were destroyed. They had also four cases of lastings.

A VALUABLE BOOK.

"DESTINY OF MAN."

By William Erwin, Painted Post, N. Y.

This is another contribution to literalism from the Methodist church. We are heartily glad to see such omens of reform in theology amid the strange strides of Spiritualism, which has wrought such mischief in the church in these days. This new book gives evidence that its author is fully awake to the evil brought upon the Christian Church by the terrible error she has imbibed that the soul of man is immortal. This book will do much to correct that error. It presents the penalty of the law and all the terms which involve future punishment, in a new form of examination, one which cannot fail to strike deep conviction into the heart of every candid reader who believes the Bible to be good authority for doctrine. He begins with Genesis and quotes every text in course, touching future punishment, to the close of Revelation, giving brief, clear comments and reflections on them as he passes, intermixed with references to the strange and unscriptural notions and teachings of those who try to attach a doctrine to the texts which is directly antagonistic to them.

In some places our brother uses strong and severe terms of wonder and denunciation, that men will dishonor God and his Son by such views as they teach. Yet none but those who feel implicated will feel injured by them, and this will possibly help them to seek reform.

He goes through without seeking to fortify or strengthen his points by any man's opinion or comments; none are quoted or referred to. The Scriptures alone stand out in their plain statements to speak on the death, destruction, and extinction of all wicked men in the second death. Without any effort for it, it explodes the notion of the immortality of the soul, the ideas of Universalism, Spiritualism, future age probation, and non-resurrectionism.

We bespeak a good sale (and much good resulting) for this book. 312 pp. Price, $1.25. Sold at the Crisis office.

A CHILD'S FAITH.

A lady had taken a homeless little girl to bring up as her own. When the hard time came, the lady, who was not at all rich, was afraid she could not sustain so large a family. One day she said to the little girl that perhaps she would have to get her another home if she could find a good place.

"No, mother," answered the child, "you won't have to send me away; God will give you something so you can keep me; I know he will."

The mother thought no more of it at the time, but a little while after, hearing a sound up stairs, she opened the door and listened. It was the little girl at prayer.

"O God, good God, do send mother something so she can keep me; I don't want to go away, O good God, do send mother something!"

Pretty soon she came down stairs with a very happy face, saying, "God will send you something, mother; I know he will."

That evening a neighbor came in with a little present, just for neighborly kindness, of flour.

"There, mother, I asked him, and I knew he would."—Little Christian.

WHAT THE HALL CLOCK SAYS.

The clock's loud tick
Says—"Time flies quick;"
"Listen," says the chime,
"Make the most of time;
For remember, young and old,
Minutes are like grains of gold;
Spend them wisely, spend them well,
For their worth can no man tell."

SOLD INTO SLAVERY.

"Carl Marsh is sold into slavery," said a man to me one day.

"Sold into slavery!" I cried. "Is there any thing like that now-a-days?"

"Indeed there is," was his answer.

"Who bought him, pray?"

"Oh, it is a firm; and I make bold to say they own a good many slaves, and they make shocking bad masters."

"Can it be so in these days? Who are they?"

"Well, they have agents and runners everywhere, who tell a good story, and so get hold of folks; but the names of the firm,—I dare say you have heard of them,—are Rum and Tobacco."

I had heard of them. It is a firm of bad reputation; and how extensive are their dealings! What town or village but has felt their influence? Once in their clutches, it is about the hardest thing in the world to break away from them. Some, it is true, do make good their escape; but the greater part are caught and go back to their chains.

To the young I would say, have nothing to do with them at all. Fight them; give them no quarter, and do all you can to destroy their influence. It is in your power to take a firm stand against them, and be sure that you do take it.—Selected.

Hygiene.

"This is for your Health."—Paul.

SICKNESS AND DEATH.

Everywhere the inevitable decree, "Thou shalt surely die," is proved by daily experience. Man is born unto trouble; and greatest of all ills is that of disease, sickness, and death. The infant, the youth, the old and the decrepit—all must die. All forms of disease prevail, and yearly these forms become complicated more and more. . . .

But need sickness come so often? Can death be delayed? Is it necessary that our houses should be made hospitals, and that our grave-yards be peopled by such multitudes of youth and children? Is it necessary for two-thirds of our families to be invalids, and often the remaining fraction in nearly the same condition? Is it necessary to have all sorts of sicknesses, and to take all sorts of mineral poisons to cure disease? If we must be sick, shall we swallow mercury, arsenic, lobelia, opium, salts, etc., to restore health?

Health reformers of the hygienic school do not propose to abolish sickness or death. They do not suggest the possibility of restoring humanity to its first estate. That is not their province. Man has fallen. He has lost his primitive strength and vigor.

Health reformers of the hygienic school do propose to put off death as long as possible. They propose to point out a mode of life calculated to promote health and vigor of mind and body. They suggest means of restoring health without nauseous and poisonous medicines, and to so economize and improve the condition of the vital forces as to make the most of this fleeting life.

The professional M. D., as a general thing, is a remorseless money-getter, speculating in poisons, and gleaning his sheaves amid the tombs. His heart grows callous in an increasing ratio as his fortune increases, and he sheds no tear over his victims. But there are honorable exceptions; and most honorable of all are those who conscientiously renounce the idea of gain as a ruling principle, and adopt the principle of doing good, however great the pecuniary loss.

If a man can, by dealing in pills and powders, conveniently make a fortune, surely he must have some strength of principle to leave the beaten track, and pursue the track of self-denial and labor pointed out by health reformers.

To tell people that they need not be sick, and that when they by carelessness and imprudence become so, to direct them to simple means of cure—restoration to health—without the agency of the physician, surely this is not extremely lucrative to the physician.

If the principles advocated by health reformers of the hygienic school were put into daily practice by people generally, sickness, as a general thing, would disappear; people would gradually recover from existing disease, and men would die of old age as a shock of corn fully ripe. We should see in every neighborhood joy and gladness instead of the oft-told tale of pain and woe, of death and sorrow. . . .

The laws of man's physical being are calculated to apply to his body, while the moral law applies to his mental powers and moral capacities. To rationally and permanently heal his maladies, you must touch the moral powers. . . . He who obeys moral law intelligently obeys physical law; and so closely are these laws connected that they seem part and parcel of the same great system of order, put in motion by the Creator of the universe.

Seeing that these things are so, it follows that the physician and his patient should be in harmony with both these systems of law, moral and physical, and that those in health, who wish to retain this precious boon, must be in harmony with the same.—Health Reformer.

WINTER SCHOOLS—BAD AIR.—Now that our winter schools are in full session, let parents who have children in them not forget to know whether the air in them is kept pure or not. If the children complain of headache, lassitude, dullness, want of appetite, be sure that something is wrong. The following fact regarding a school in Switzerland shows how fearfully at fault teachers are there, and it is not much better in some places in this country:

Dr. Breiteng, in Basle, Switzerland, has examined the air of school-rooms in that city, in order to establish how far the complaints were well founded, which had been so often expressed, with regard to the injurious quality of the air in school-rooms. We give below some of the results of this investigation for a room of 8512 cubic feet capacity, and a surface of 111 square feet for door and windows. During the trial it contained sixty-four children:—

Time.	Amount of Carbonic acid.
8 A. M., at the beginning of test	2.48 per cent.
9 A. M., at the close of the test	4.18 per cent.
10 A. M., before recess	6.87 per cent.
11 A. M., at the close of recitation	8.11 per cent.
1 45 P. M., before lecture	5.30 per cent.
3 P. M., before recess	7.66 per cent.
4 P. M., close of school	9.36 per cent.

It must be remembered that ordinary pure air contains only one part in two thousand five hundred, or four one-hundredths of one per cent. of carbonic acid, and that so much as even one per cent. is decidedly injurious. —Herald of Health.

AN eminent physician robs scarlet fever of many of its terrors by prescribing for the patient warm lemonade with a little mucilage, as often as desired, and the application of warmth to the stomach. He directs that a sheet should be wrung out of hot water and laid on the stomach, renewing it as often as it cools.

GOOD ADVICE.—Let all troublesome topics be avoided at meals. Do not dwell upon the delinquences of domestics, or the discipline of children at the dinner table, for a cheerful spirit not only gives relish for food, but a good start at digesting the same.

GUIDANCE NEEDED.

Take our hands in thine, dear Father,
 Gently lead our souls along;
Lead us where thou'dst have us labor,—
 Lead us, and we'll follow on.
And we'll follow, yes, we'll follow!
 Lead us, and we'll follow on.

Though we meet with sore temptations,
 And with trials by the way,
Thou hast promised to protect us,
 If we only thee obey;
And we'll trust thee! yes, we'll trust thee,
 To protect us all the way.

Satan's hosts are always ready
 To allure us from the way;
And they say the land they'll give us,
 If we will their king obey;
But we'll never, no, we'll never
 Listen to the words they say.

Now, dear Father, thou dost hear us,
 Take our hands in thine to guide;
Keep on us the pure white raiment,
 Keep us near the Savior's side.
Lead us ever, leave us never,
 Let us all in thee abide.

A TERRIBLE SURPRISE.

We have a profound conviction that the world is hastening to the great crisis which is to close for ever the present dispensation, and witness the beginning of the new age. Its speed is wonderfully accelerated. There is a race, a rush of ruled and rulers, peoples, presidents, and princes, towards some unknown goal which, whatever may be its precise nature, is instinctively felt to be entirely new in the history of humanity. Emperors, kings, statesmen, revolutionists, anarchists, all see it as an inevitable something which, whether feared or welcomed, must be met some day not far distant. What it will do or undo, how it will affect dynasties, kingdoms, republics, and the innumerable institutions of the world, —ecclesiastical, political, military, social, and scientific,—neither princes nor people know; but all agree in thinking that, without leave asked, it will deal with the nations, whether for weal or woe, in a mood which brooks no opposition and admits no delay. In this they are right, "because a short reckoning will the Lord make upon the earth." Rom. 9: 28. "And the loftiness of man shall be bowed down, and the haughtiness of men shall be made low; and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day. And the idols he shall utterly abolish. And they shall go into the holes of the rocks, and into the caves of the earth, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his majesty, when he ariseth to shake terribly tie earth." Isa. 2: 17-19.

Meantime, a desperate struggle for pre-eminence has begun, as if each party was determined to seize and hold the rights of the coming Lord. The prophecy of the second psalm is fulfilling before our eyes. The nations rage, and the people imagine a vain thing. The kings of the earth set themselves, and the rulers take counsel together against the Lord, and against his Anointed. A longer lease of power is demanded by the world's potentates. They will not get it. Abused stewardship must be closed with disgrace. Supremacy is sought by the revolutionists. They will not get it. Men who refuse to serve are utterly unfit to command. God is not about to hand over the chief world of his dominions to men who deny his existence. And science, cultured, learned, polite, asks the management of the earth on the ground of her superior wisdom. She will not get it. To deify law, and ignore the divine Lawgiver, is proof positive of incapacity to rule.

Yet, notwithstanding the pre-determined fact that none of the world-factions shall reach the coveted supremacy over all the rest, the struggle will intensify until, under its white heat, the harvest and the vine of the earth shall ripen for the sharp sickle. "And I looked, and behold a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat like unto the Son of man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle. And another angel came out of the temple, crying with a loud voice to him that sat on the cloud, Thrust in thy sickle and reap; for the harvest of the earth is ripe. And he that sat on the cloud thrust in his sickle on the earth; and the earth was reaped. And another angel came out of the temple which was in heaven, he also having a sharp sickle. And another angel came out from the altar, he that hath power over the fire, and cried with a loud voice to him that had the sharp sickle. Thrust in thy sharp sickle, and gather the clusters of the vine of the earth; for her grapes are fully ripe. And the angel thrust in his sickle into the earth, and gathered the vine of the earth, and cast it into the great wine-press of the wrath of God. And the wine-press was trodden outside the city, and blood came out of the wine-press, even unto the bits of the horses, to the distance of a thousand and six hundred furlongs."

This is what is coming. A lake of blood so deep as to reach the bridles of the horses, and so great as to cover a space of twenty-five square miles. What a terrible surprise it will be to Antichrist and the enormous armies that will serve him in Christ-defying blasphemy when the Son of man is revealed from heaven in flaming fire to take vengeance on his enemies! As a "snare" shall it come upon them all, and "they shall not escape." In the dire consternation, and horror, and panic that will seize them, they will say to the mountains and rocks "Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of his wrath is come, and who is able to stand?" His regal claims scorned, his coming laughed at as the dream of persons beneath contempt, the enemies of the Lord will find in that day of indiscribable terror that they made an awful mistake in supposing that the government of the world was to be left for ever in such feeble and blundering hands as theirs. One can easily understand how distasteful many passages of Scripture are to rulers, and would-be rulers, who seem to think that God had no higher end in view in the creation of this fair world than to make it a prize for ambition, a place for the acquisition of wealth and power, and a theatre for the exhibition of a splendor and glory which all spiritual men know to be hollow imposture. We shall quote only three of these distasteful passages.—"The Lord bringeth the counsel of the heathen to nought: he maketh the devices of the people of none effect." Ps. 33: 10. "He bringeth the princes to nothing; he maketh the judges of the earth as vanity. Yea, they shall not be planted; yea, they shall not be sown; yea, their stock shall not take root in the earth; and he shall also blow upon them, and they shall wither, and the whirlwind shall take them away as stubble." Isa. 40: 23. 24. "The rulers of this world are coming to nought." 1 Cor. 2: 6.

But, it may be asked, why does not the Christian ministry, paid for the purpose, deal faithfully with the truths of revelation, and tell the great men of the earth,—its governments, rulers, and potentates,—that it is the divine purpose to set them all aside, and to place the supreme sceptre in hands that will wield it so as to bring peace on earth, good will to men, and glory to God in the highest? The answer is not far to seek. A ministry that eats at Cæsar's table, and clothes itself in scarlet and fine linen at Cæsar's cost, is not likely to risk Cæsar's displeasure by telling him that his days are numbered; that he has been weighed in the balances and found wanting, and that he must resign his throne to One infinitely better than he. This uncorteous language would grate upon royal ears, and disturb the harmony between Cæsar and his priests. Besides, theology is accommodating and could easily adapt itself to the altered state of things consequent upon imperial favor. When the church was lifted out of persecution and poverty, and placed among princes, it was discovered that the true interpretation of all those Scriptures that seem to speak of the Son of man as returning from heaven to rule all nations must be reached by a spiritualizing process. This met the case admirably.

Christ is a King beyond doubt. The fact cannot be denied, and far be it from any theologian to dispute a truth so blessed; but then he reigns in heaven, and in the hearts of men on earth; and when his coming is spoken of, the meaning is that he comes for the souls of believers at death, to take them to immediate glory. The world-powers were more than satisfied with this explanation, and the theologians were held in esteem. Jesus was quite welcome to reign in heaven for ever, and Cæsar, thoroughly approving the arrangement, evinced his gratitude by showering favors on the Church. There is a history which tells us that certain occupiers of a vineyard killed the heir, and seized on his inheritance. The occupiers now rejoice that he is alive again, but most sincerely hope that he will remain where he is, and not come back to take possession of his property. What is the difference between the two sets of husbandmen?

We shall be reminded, however, that there are large portions of the church now that do not eat bread at Cæsar's table, and are therefore under no temptation to put a gloss on any part of revelation. True; and are we not likely to forget a fact which brings with it the painful reflection that, if unfaithfulness is found in the absence of temptation, the sin is proportionately greater. The theology of Cæsar's bishops superseded the doctrine of apostles; but, alas! those portions of the church that have seen it right to refuse the patronage of the purple, have also seen it right to retain and perpetuate the mischievous theology, although it is at the expense of truth, to the injury of men, and unworthy of those who bear the precious name of Christ. No. It is vain to plead the comparative merit of one form of ecclesiasticism over another, if God's declared purpose concerning the kingdom of his Son be either altogether kept out of sight, or presented in such distorted forms to reveal nothing but the ignorance of the speaker. It is, moreover, a remarkable fact that, at the present day, you will find a greater number of ministers of the established church loyal to the doctrine of the Second Advent than in all the other large ecclesiastical bodies taken together; and if you want to hear foolish and bitter things uttered against that doctrine, some avowed enemy of the establishment will gratify you! These undeniable facts, however, do not require the alteration of a word in what we have said above.

If, then, the manifestation of the divine King in lightning glory will be a terrible surprise to the powers and princes, the mighty men and chief captains, what will it be to ministers of the gospel who shall have disqualified themselves and their hearers from being taken up to the presence of the Lord by false teaching respecting his coming? Oh! inconceivable terror, shame, consternation, disgrace! Christian ministers not honored with the glorious rapture, not taken away before the storm, not kept out of the fiery tribulation! The subject is too painful for prolonged thought.—Rainqow.

ANCIENT BABYLON.

JOHN COUCH.

In the far-off ages of human history and association, when the first grandson of Noah led the victorious warriors of the eastern world to speedy and certain triumphs, there arose amid the verdant and beautiful plains washed by the gliding waters of the great Euphrates, the renowned city of Babylon.

It was comparatively small and inferior at first, but at length its lords and kings became rich and powerful, and their ambition for safety, honor, and glory here, and deification hereafter, caused them to concentrate their resources in strengthening, enlarging, and beautifying the idol city of ancient times.

Babylon was the first manifestation of human ambition in the centralization of earthly wealth, power, and glory. Its first and most noted temple was built about one hundred and fifteen years after the flood; soon after which Nimrod founded the city of Babylon and the Assyrian empire. He was the first king deified after his death, taking the name Belus, or Baal, which signifies lord.

Semiramis, the wife of Ninus, son of Nimrod, is supposed to have done more towards enlarging, strengthening, and adorning the city, during her reign, than any other ruler. She employed about two millions of men upon the stupendous work.

Its engineering was perfect, presenting an exact square fifteen miles on either side, with fifty-four streets, each fifteen miles long, crossing each other at right angles. It was defended by a wall three hundred and fifty feet high, eighty-seven feet thick, built of brick ten feet square, and three feet thick, laid in bitumen, which became as hard as a stone. It had one hundred gates—twenty-five on each side. These were made of massive bars of solid brass, and were doubled, infolding, or "two-leaved gates."

The brick of which the walls, the temple of Belus, and the city, were made, were of clay taken out of a vast ditch, which extended around the city, and was filled with water as a defense against a besieging army.

The river Euphrates ran through the city from north to south, and on either bank a wall as thick as the city walls, each having twenty-five brass gates.

Bridges were little known in the days of Babylon's glory, but Nebuchadnezzar ordered one built across the Euphrates, which was the wonder of the age. Its arches were built of large blocks of stone bound together by heavy iron chains, secured by molten lead. It was a most perfect piece of masonry, forty rods long and thirty feet wide.

To prevent the overflowing of the Euphrates by freshets, and also to draw the water out of the channel so that the arches of the bridge could be laid, and the river tunnelled, two canals were cut, carrying a portion of the water into the Tigris. But as the river could not be sufficiently drained in this way, a vast excavation was made into which the remainder of the water could be drawn, thus making an artificial lake forty miles square, "one hundred and sixty in compass," and thirty-five feet deep.

The city had two palaces, one at each end of the bridge, connected by the tunnel under the river. The palace east of the bridge was three miles and three-quarters in compass, the other was seven and a half miles. They were each surrounded by three massive walls, to make the residence of the royal family and court safe from the attacks of a foe. These walls were gorgeously decorated with a great variety of sculptures, representing kings and queens, and remarkable incidents in their history; also all kinds of animals, in a very life-like manner, which gave them a very magnificent and grand appearance.

Within the western palace were the celebrated Hanging Gardens. These occupied a space four hundred feet on each side, and were elevated three hundred and fifty feet above the foundations; resting upon immense arches, one tier building upon another. Upon the topmost arch were laid flat stones, sixteen feet long, and four feet wide. On these, reeds mixed with bitumen were laid, covered with two tiers of brick laid in plaster, and covering these were thick sheets of leads, upon which the soil of the gardens rested. In the midst of the gardens was the engine, or force pump, by which irrigating water was drawn from the river.

The great wonder of the golden city was its temple Belus. That temple stood near the western palace, and was noted principally for its central tower, which at the base measured half a mile in compass, rising six hundred and sixty feet from the foundations. It was built of brick and bitumen, and is supposed to be the Tower of Babel, at the building of which, the confusion of languages was experienced. The ascent to the top was by stairs on the outside, built upon a gradual slope in the wall, running up in a spiral line, turning eight times around the tower; thus giving it the appearance at a distance of a cone-shaped mountain terraced. This temple was used for the worship of idol gods; principally Belus, the supposed spirit of Nimrod, deified.

To accommodate the great multitude of worshipers and their idols, spacious chapels and halls were prepared with arched roofs, supported by large pillars. These places of worship were ornamented and supplied with a great number and variety of sacred vessels, all made of solid gold; the cost of which is computed to have been over one hundred million dollars. On the top of the tower was the celebrated astronomical observatory, where the Babylonians learned many things about the size and motion of the planets, unknown before.

During the days of its triumph and glory, Babylon was a grand exhibition of human skill, power, and folly. Her kings were the lords of the world. Her merchants were the bankers of all nations. The city appeared to be an impregnable fortress. Its armies were invincible, and the dread of all warriors. Her artists left traces of the chisel and pencil, which have caused succeeding generations to wonder and admire. But her oppression caused Him who sitteth in the heavens to decree its overthrow and demolition.

Its prophetic story was written ere the morning breezes were perfumed with the spices of its hanging gardens, or the triple walls had secured the royal residence of the imperial family.

While the stones were being chained together for its bridge, and the chisel was representing the sportive chase of its kings, while the smith was burnishing the ornamental plates for the sanction of the idols, and every ship floating on the waters of its river was pouring treasure into its coffers, and while its haughty captains were dragging behind their chariots haltered captives, who were the sport of their cruelty, and the clouds swept among its towers, and the rattling thunders were heard below the cap-stone of its temple, God taught his prophets to foretell the bounds of its prosperity, and the captain and armies which should triumphantly enter the proud metropolis, and wrest from the death-palsied hand of Nebuchadnezzer's "son's son" the golden scepter. They also predicted its complete destruction, so that the only residents of its palaces and sacred halls should be hideous beasts and poisoned serpents. All these prophetic announcements have been perfectly accomplished. Every inspired sentence relating to it has been duplicated in the fall and destruction of Babylon.—Bible Banner.

AN EXPOSITION OF REV. 13.

N. H. BARBOUR.

Many persons have an idea that prophecy is beyond ordinary human comprehension; that very learned men may get a glimmering of its true application; but to say with certainty, "This is that spoken by the prophet," requires almost the pen of Inspiration. How mistaken are such people! Prophecy is simply telling things before they come to pass; and the application is, seeing if they have come to pass. A simple way to find the application is to inquire, first, What things were to be accomplished? Second, Have they been accomplished? Third, Who accomplished them?

The first beast of Rev. 13, "having seven heads and ten horns," was the Roman empire, called "the dragon" in the twelfth chapter. But it was that empire after it had changed from pagan to papal. With its change of character there was of necessity a change of the symbol by which it is represented; and under this last symbol it was to continue "forty and two months." Papacy itself must continue until Christ comes. "I beheld, and and the same horn made war with the saints and prevailed against them until the Ancient of days came, . . . and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom." Dan. 7: 21. Therefore it is evident that papacy must exist in some other character after it has ceased to exist as the "forty and two months beast." When its time was up, that beast received a deadly wound, or was "slain by the sword." (Whether a wound is in the head or body of the beast, it is the beast which is wounded.)

Papacy in its civil character was head of Rome during this forty and two months. In 1798 the beast was wounded unto death in its papal head, and a republic took its place. These statements require no proof, for the same reason that proof would not be required if one should say that such a man as Napoleon once lived. When this first beast was killed with the sword, ver. 10, the two-horned beast came up, the deadly wound to the papacy was healed, and it was made to exist in another character, viz., "There was an image made to the beast which had the wound by a sword and did live." An image must be like its prototype, or it would not be an image. Hence, in the image we must have a fac simile of the old forty and two months beast.

Papacy was restored in 1800, and until 1870 was a fac simile of its prototype. The old papal beast was civil and ecclesiastical in character, so was the "image." The first beast was head of Rome, so was the "image." In fact, the image had all the features of its original, excepting its power over times and laws. That power had passed away with the forty and two months beast. This application is at least plausible, but to prove whether it be the true one, we must now inquire what the image was to do? And if the work given it has been accomplished by the papacy within the last seventy years, or during its existence as the supposed "image," then we shall know this application is the true one. "And he [the two-horned beast] had power to give life unto the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak, and cause as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed." Ver. 15. The first beast had power to speak great words and blasphems, so also had the image. And he has spoken, in a symbolic sense, of course, and words greater than ever the old forty-and-two-months beast was heard to utter—"Infallibility."

This image was also to kill, as many as would not worship the image. And it has killed its millions. (This word "killeth" is symbolic, of course, otherwise it would be entirely out of keeping with the rest of the subject.) There are two ways of killing, in a symbolic sense, viz., politically, and ecclesiastically. The first is used in Rev. 9: 5, where the Saracens were not to kill men, but to torment them five months. "And men should seek death and should not find it." The eastern part of the Roman empire was overrun from A. D. 1299, to 1449, or five prophetic months, by the Saracens. They robbed, murdered, and oppressed the people; while at the same time the Roman government taxed, robbed and oppressed them. Between two masters, they were tormented until they preferred political death, and sought it, but could not find it. That is, they preferred that their own government, which could not protect them from the Saracens, should be abolished, and leave them but one set of masters.

The image of the beast could not kill politically, for it had no power over "times and laws." That power had ended with the forty-and-two-months beast, but it had power to kill ecclesiastically, and it has exercised that power to a wonderful extent—"all that would not worship it." It has killed or excommunicated more than a hundred millions; nearly all of Italy, Victor Emanuel and all his supporters, Dollinger, and all Catholic Germany. No prophecy could be more perfectly fulfilled. It was to speak, and to kill; and it has done both in the superlative degree. Then we know to what "the image of the beast" refers, and cannot be mistaken; for the restored papacy has completely filled the picture.

Now if we can find who it was that "said to them that dwell on the earth that they should make an image, . . . and he had power to give life unto the image," we shall find the two-horned beast, which for the present we will assume to be the Napoleonic dynasties. "I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth, and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon." Ver. 11.

The first, or papal beast, came up out of the sea. Ver. 1. It was evolved out of the religious wars and commotion of the "waters," or people, at the breaking up of the Roman empire. This two-horned beast comes up "out of the earth," and the horns were like a lamb—mild. Both Napoleonic dynasties began as republics; the mildest form among earthly governments. They came up by the vote of the people, an earthly government changing its character without strife, and without bloodshed; the first in 1799, the second in 1848. "And he spake as a dragon." Imperial Rome was called "the dragon." These republics changed almost immediately to empires; the first in 1800, the second in 1852. "He exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him." ver. 12. If the words "before him" were not qualified by "first beast," they might mean, as many have supposed, "in presence of"; but "first beast before him" must necessarily mean the first beast, or one which had preceded him; viz., the forty-and-two-months beast.

And now the question is, Did the two-horned beast exercise all the power of the "first beast"? The first, or papal beast exercised great power. Nearly the whole of the Roman world was under his control during a part of his existence. Hence the two-horned beast must have exercised a wonderful amount of power, if it equalled that of the "first beast." But I will quote from Mitchell's "Life of Napoleon:—

"In 1805, Napoleon was crowned king of Italy. In 1806, he made his brother Louis king of Holland. In 1808, he made Joseph king of Spain. In 1798, he conquered Egypt. In 1805, he conquered Vienna. In 1810, Holland was annexed to France. In 1811, he entered Moscow. Complete master of Germany, he erected the territories of Brunswick, Cassel, and other dominions into the kingdom of Westphalia, which he gave to his brother Jerome. At Dresden he held levees, which were crowded by kings and princes. The emperor of Austria, the King of Prussia, and most of the other kings and princes of Germany, arrived to render homage to their real lord and superior."

Did the popes crown and uncrown kings at their pleasure? so did Napoleon. Did they have kings and emperors in their antechamber? so had Napoleon. Did they hold "times and laws" in their hand, and distribute kingdoms and principalities to their favorites? so did Napoleon. Again I quote from p. 145—"Were I only king of France, says Napoleon, I should be obliged to act as Louis XIV. and Louis XV. acted; but I am emperor of the continent, and it is necessary to go back to Charlemagne to form an idea of the power I possess." The same writer continues—"We have not sought to compare the French to the Roman empire, the similarity of means to which both resorted for the purpose of obtaining similar ends force the comparison." "He spake like" imperial Rome. "He exerciseth all the power of" papal Rome.

This two-horned beast fills the picture, nor could there be a more complete fulfillment of the prophecy. "He exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him; and causeth the earth, and them that dwell therein, to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed."

How did Napoleon cause the Roman world to worship the first beast? By bringing it to life, I answer. That beast had been killed with the sword. Ver. 10. And for a time there was no papal organization, or "beast." Men could not worship what did not exist. But "the deadly wound was healed, and it lived again in its "image"; and it was the two-horned beast that gave life to that image. Thus it was "he made them that dwell upon the earth to worship the first beast whose deadly wound was healed." The papacy was the "first beast"; the papacy was the image of the beast. The first beast lives, but lives in his image; therefore the two-horned beast does his work "in the sight of the beast." Ver. 14. Ver. 13—"And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men." "Fire" means judgment, or punishment. Eternal fire is eternal punishment. Napoleon was the scourge of God on the nations. Ver. 14—"And deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast, saying to them that dwell on the earth, that they should make an image to the beast which had the wound by a sword and did live; and he had power to give life unto the image of the beast." If I should say to a sculptor, "Make an image of a man," and I had power to give life to that image, that it should both speak and kill as many as would worship it, you would think there was miraculous power displayed. So it was this two-horned beast, in a symbolic sense, worked miracles, "saying to them that dwell upon the earth, that they should make an image," "and he had power to give life unto the image."

The French and Roman republics destroyed the papacy. Napoleon always insisted that every nation should be permitted to enjoy their religion, whether Mohammedan or Catholic; and it was chiefly the influence he exerted in Europe which crushed out the commune, or infidel spirit, and restored the old order of society, including the papacy. The two-horned beast was not to make the image, but "say to them that dwell on the earth, that they should make an image." In 1800, Napoleon was the ruling spirit of the continent; and the thirty-five cardinals who met at Venice during that year, to elect a new pope and restore the papacy, did so with the tacit permission, if not at the instigation, of Napoleon.

Ver. 15—"And he had power to give life unto the image of the beast." The first Napoleon gave life to and supported the papacy, and, as it were, held that image in his hand during his whole career. Sometimes he would call the pope to France; again he would confiscate his patrimony; once, in 1805, he proclaimed himself king of Italy;—all of which proves that the "image" held its life by and through the two-horned beast. No power could come between and rescue the papacy. And yet, during all this time the "image" continued as "head" of Rome. He was only such by the permission of Napoleon, I grant; but yet these two facts remain: the papacy was the acknowledged head of Rome, and he held that position mainly by the will of Napoleon.

The second horn of the two-horned beast does precisely a similar work. He also maintained the pope as head of Rome. Time and time again, the Italians threatened to remove him, but the French troops would not permit it. At last, in Sept., 1870, the second horn of that beast went down at Sedan. The news flashed across the continent to Rome; and within three days the "image of the beast" fell from his pedestal, like a wooden image. The two-horned beast that gave it life had ceased to be, and of course the image could no longer live.

THE MARK OF THE BEAST.

Vers. 16, 17—"And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads; and that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name."

A "beast" means a political power, or Gentile government. When the church married, or became a part of the civil power, it took its mark upon it. When you say of a person who is slightly colored, that he has the mark of the negro, you mean that he is part negro. So when the church became a part of political organizations, it received the mark of the beast. And it was when church and state first became one under the empire, that God calls it by the name of its husband, "the beast."

It matters not whether a church is Catholic or Protestant; wherever church and state are united, that church has "the mark of the beast," if "beast" means civil power; and God says, "The fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth." Therefore not only every church, but every individual who belongs to or is a part of a political organization, has "the mark of the beast." There is no dodging this. Some say it is their duty as men and citizens to look after their property, and hence they must help make the laws. Very good; if you are a citizen, it is your duty; but "pilgrims and strangers" have no such duties and no such rights. "Come out, and be ye separate." "If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; . . . . but I have chosen you out of the world."

"IN THEIR FOREHEADS."

God puts his mark in the forehead. See Ezek. 9: 4, and Rev. 7: 3. He writes his name there. Rev. 14: 1. And such are his true worshipers, and believe in him; and his mark is in their forehead. There are others who walk hand and hand with these organizations, members of churches, and yet belong to and are a part of some political organization. These have the mark in their hand, and some one of the "number of his name." You can get along very well with the world, whether it be with a purely civil power, or with a "harlot" church—state organization—if you will carry their mark, or some one of the number of their names, even in your hand. If "the number of his name" was simply the numerals of "Latin Church," or even "Napoleon," I cannot see how one would be entitled to stand on the sea of glass, having the harp of God in his hand, because he had gotten the victory over these numerals. But I can understand how those who get the victory over "the beast," with its millions of worshipers, "and over his image, and over his mark," and over the millions of those who belong to these worldly-minded, popular, harlot organizations, who serve God with one hand and the devil with the other,—I can understand, I say, how those who get the victory over all these, may be found with harps of God in their hands.

The various forces which were at work breaking up and disorganizing society prior to and during the French Revolution, were infidel in character; and for a time infidelity reared its head, and a storm of unbelief swept over the Roman world. But with the restoration of order, these church-state and sectarian bands were drawn closer than ever; and indeed, "no man could buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name." "Come unto me, and buy wine and milk, without money and without price," does not mean literally to buy. In Rev. 6: 6, we read of "a measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for a penny." These are ecclesiastical matters.

During the breaking up of the religious element in Europe, men could dispense whatever doctrines they pleased, whether it was the true faith or infidelity; the world cared little about it. But with the restoration of "religious order," this license was withheld, and no man could buy or sell save he who had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name. "Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast, for it is the number of a man ["the man of sin"]; and his number is six hundred threescore and six."

"EVERY WEIGHT."

"Lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us," or stops our running the christian race. And when the apostle gives advice and instruction, he generally gives a good reason, and strong inducements, to comply with the conditions that he urges upon us. So here in the verse from which I quoted. "Seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses." A cloud of these witnesses have all testified to the faithfulness of our Lord in all his promises to those who have trusted in them. Even when it called for a miracle to fulfill the promise, it has never failed. So he calls up the case of Sarah's conceiving seed and bringing forth a son when she was past age; Abraham's offering up his only son Isaac, when a sacrifice was provided; Moses' being hid in the rushes and preserved for his after work. The walls of Jericho could be made to crumble and fall by the priests with trumpet in hand marching around the city. When they blew their rams' horns and shouted, victory was achieved, and the walls flattened to the ground. Says the apostle—"Seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses," all telling the same reliable story, that God was true to his word; that it would do to trust him at all times, and in every emergency; that his promises could not fail; that they might be depended upon against all human improbabilities; and in consideration of this fact, he calls upon us to "lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us." The sin of unbelief, with the hindrances that retard our progress in wisdom's way, must be left. They must be laid aside.

But what are these weights and hindrances which are to be laid aside? They are many and various. Some, who espoused the cause of Christ sincerely, have put Him on, and are trying to walk in him, but find many obstacles besetting them. The honors of this world come in, and they are offered lucrative positions, which, if they accept, they readily see will interfere with the sacred claims of duty and loyalty to their heavenly Father. These would peril the race, and must be laid aside. The world brings in its many temptations. An undue love for it must be resisted, or you are soon engrossed and overcharged, and your religion is secondary; Christ is put in the background, and your zeal for him paralyzed. Others, who profess loyalty to Christ and his government, and should stand up for him and bear reproach under all circumstances for the truth, often give way to what they know is right and will please the Lord, by yielding to the entreaties of their children. They want them to be more like other folks; more popular in acts, works, looks, and meetings. The counsel of the meek and lowly Nazarene must be neglected, to conform to their wishes. Thus spiritual life and light grow dim; the meetings of the praying, happy servants of the great life-giving Teacher are neglected. How weighed down! How barren! How desolate! The children unsaved, unbelieving, unholy; the parents conforming to their wishes, and spiritual dearth and death following. This is a very common hindrance, and a weight that draws many from the path of duty, and will, if not laid aside, drag to perdition. And this will apply with the same force to all who will be influenced from the right, the narrow way, by those dear to them.

What shall be done? Lay aside this weight, and stand up for Jesus, and he will stand up for you. Lay aside all the weights, all the hindrances, all the stoppages, to christian growth and manhood. Do not be afraid to speak, act, and go, where duty directs; for in so doing you will save yourself and those with whom you have an influence. Then we shall have an influence over our dear ones to lead them to the same living fountain, and that scripture will be profitable to them which reads—"Children, obey your parents in the Lord, for this is right"; and they will find this the way to long life. Now, would you be ready for the work God has for you to accomplish here, and to go in with him to the marriage, and not be shut out? Then "lay aside every weight." You know what they are. I may not have touched them in this communication. They are many, but they may be laid aside. By believing, you can rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory. Lay all aside, and seek that consecration to Christ that will bring your whole being into sweet submission to his divine will; then your joy will be full. O how blessed! This pays well, while toiling here amid all the discouraging features of our pilgrimage. Blessings here, and glory there. Reproach on the journey, and suffering it may be, but all will work for good. Let the heads be uplifted. Redemption is approaching. Home is in sight. Immortality, eternal blessedness and life are forever ours. Amen. "Home, sweet Home."

BRO. HASTING'S LOSS.

On our return home from Coaticook, P. Q., we hastened to see Bro. Hastings, and found him cheerful, after his great loss by the terrible fire in Boston, Nov. 9th and 10th, and calmly trusting in the Lord. For some time he and his family, including some fifteen or twenty who labored for him, lived in the Repository building. It was their place of business and their home. They worked, ate and slept there. Now it all lies in ashes—bed, bedding, furniture, clothing, type, presses, bookplates, books, tracts and pamphlets, a large number; valuable manuscript, choice facts and selections, affording proof on important subjects connected with the Bible, the best results of his studious life, aided by no ordinary talent, are now no more. His all is burnt up, excepting a portion of his private library. These are a few items connected with the sad calamity.

Since the fire, he had made arrangements to get out the Christian at Rand and Avery's, the largest printing establishment in New England; but on Wednesday night, Nov. 20th, they were burnt out, and a part of the material for the Christian was destroyed. Bro. Hastings' family is scattered here and there, while he is struggling with the waves of adversity. He makes no complaints, but is patiently waiting for the guiding hand of Providence to direct his steps and provide for his necessities. He has not asked us to say a word in his behalf; but we feel it a duty and privilege to let his sad condition be known to our brethren, and all the friends of Jesus, who love to bear one another's burdens.

Some of the things he prized most, money cannot restore; but he informed us that it would take not less than twenty-five thousand dollars to replace what was burnt up. Who will help lift our Bro. out of the ashes? A little now will aid him much.

COATICOOK.

Coaticook, P. Q., is quite an enterprising village, on the Grand Trunk R. R., some twenty-five miles beyond Island Pond, towards Montreal. It has good water privileges, and considerable manufacturing. It seems quite like our enterprising New England villages, as many of the people are from the States. It is growing more rapidly than most towns in Canada.

The meetings in Coaticook have been the means of awakening a deep interest in the study of the Scriptures. The large hall has been very much crowded, and the best of attention given to the subjects presented. The prayer and conference meetings have become seasons of special interest, and some fifteen or twenty have requested prayers; that they may become the disciples of Jesus, and be ready for his coming. Those who had been trying to serve the Lord for some years have now listened to Paul's entreaty, when he says: "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your reasonable service." Rom. 12: 1. As a result, they have received "great peace." Others are almost persuaded to listen to the entreaty, and lay their all upon the altar. The interest is daily increasing, with a bright prospect for blessed results. As all the meeting-houses have been closed against us, there is considerable talk about building a chapel, wherein all christians may be free.

OUR EXPERIENCE.

In a former article we related some of our experience in the service of Christ. At that time we parted with our readers at the Round Lake campmeeting, Saturday, July 8th, 1871. That day will ever be a memorable one in life's pilgrimage. It holds a hallowed influence in the records of the past, like the night when our sins were first forgiven in Dec. 1842. At the time last named, through faith in Jesus, we received the witness of the Spirit that our sins were pardoned; in July, in 1871, through faith in Jesus, we received the gift of the Spirit, producing "perfect love" and "great peace." Since that time, there has not been a cloud in our spiritual horizon. Our experience has been like an even-spun thread; though at times we have had overwhelming manifestations of the Spirit. Jesus has seemed to be near at hand, and not afar off; a present help in every time of need; an indwelling, abiding Savior and lover; our all in all; the same every day and every hour, in all situations. When the tempter comes in all his fury, then Jesus seems to be the nearest, and smiles the most sweetly; and we have only to hide in him, to get out of the reach of the enemy. It is on such occasions that we feel most sensibly,

"What a friend we have in Jesus."

The feelings of which we are speaking must be experienced to be understood and appreciated. To those who have never felt them, any description would be as unintelligible and obscure, as an explanation of joy to one who had never felt it. The man would be thought beside himself who should contend that there is no such thing as pain, because he had never felt it; equally out of the way is the one who claims there is no such thing as the gift of the Spirit, producing "perfect love," because he had never received such a blessing. It will not do to throw away christian experience which is in harmony with the Bible; but what does not correspond with that is of but little value. We would say to all, test everything of a religious nature by the Bible. Let that be the only standard by which to be guided. If we are not in harmony with that, we are wrong. Be very careful about following impressions. Be sure they are from the Lord, before yielding to them. Satan can also produce impressions by his spirit; and when he finds one who will follow them instead of the Bible, he will do his best to lead him astray into some fanatical notion or position, that will only serve to bring the subject into disgrace in the sight of the true followers of Jesus; and then tell them that such is the result of a belief in the doctrine of holiness, and thus keep people away from the fulness there is in Christ. Let us beware of Satan's devices and keep out of his snares.

While we would give caution against being led by Satan beyond the standard of the Lord, we would urge all to come up to it, and entreat them not to be driven back into cold formalism through fear of being a peculiar people, zealous of good works. This is the time for the church to be thorough in her consecration. Half-hearted work will not stand successfully against a pure christianity. We need on the whole armor of God. All internal foes should be fully subdued by the power of the Holy Spirit. In our own strength we are not sufficient to cope with our great adversary, but through Christ strengthening us, we may stand in victory every moment, and keep the devil outside of the heart. Thank the Lord for the promise, that if we resist the devil, he will flee from us. This will be found true in all situations, so long as Jesus is allowed to fill the heart with his Spirit. But when watchfulness and prayer are neglected, Satan is sure to seek an entrance into the heart in some secret way, where we least look for him. Beware of his devices.

"MANY MANSIONS."

BRO. GRANT:—Will you please explain John 14: 2? What are the "many mansions"? He says—"I go to prepare a place for you." Are those mansions for us? If not, what are they for? Please explain through the Crisis. E. J. JAQUES.

When Jesus says—"I go to prepare a place for you," it follows that the place was not then prepared. In Rev. 21: 1–2, John says: "I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea. And I, John, saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God, out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." It is quite evident that this "New Jerusalem" is the one to which Jesus refers in John 14: 2, which he was going "to prepare." It appears that the first use of this "new," "great," and "holy city," is at the marriage of the Lamb, when he shall return to this planet to set up his kingdom. Abraham "looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." Heb. 11: 10. The New Jerusalem was seen "coming down from God," as a bridal present to his well beloved Son. This is evidently the building to which Paul refers in 2 Cor. 5: 1, when he says: "We know, that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house, not made with hands." This is to be the capital of the coming kingdom. It is the real crystal palace, and will be worthy of the King of kings. In that beautiful palace, the saints will "see the King in his beauty."

MELCHIZEDEK.

BRO. GRANT:—Will you give your opinion about Melchizedek? There are some here who believe that Melchizedek was God, the eternal Father. Others believe that he was Christ. I believe he was only a human being; of a good and upright spirit. Please give your views on this point through the Crisis. E. J. FLETCHER.

There is but little room for doubt but that Melchizedek was the same as Shem, the eldest son of Noah. In the book of Jasher, chap. 16: 11, this fact is clearly stated. He lived in both worlds, the one before, and the one following the flood. As those who were born this side of the flood had no records of the events before the deluge, they had no means of tracing the lineage of the antediluvian priesthood, hence Paul says of the Melchizedek priesthood, or this "priest of the Most High God," who was "also king of Salem," that he was "without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life." Nothing is known as to the origin of his priesthood, nor of its duration. He appears as a priest this side of the flood, but with no credentials, and yet his priesthood is not questioned. There is no record of his predecessor. He was the first "priest of the Most High God," mentioned in the Bible; and it is not known that his priesthood was transmitted to any other one; hence he stood alone, unlike any other priest. Thus it is with Jesus.

THE POWER OF MORTALITY OVER IMMORTALITY.

Can immortality be controlled by mortality? Or can incorruptibility be conquered by that which is corruptible? This must be so if current theology is correct, which sets up the claim the mind, or soul is immortal; for the mind is controlled by a variety of temporal calamities, similar to the following case, which we clip from the New Era:

"SUSPENDED THOUGHT.—Rev. Mr. Hendrix, when visiting the patients in a Canadian hospital, a number of years since, discovered therein a man who appeared to be perfectly demented, but otherwise in good health. Inquiring into the cause of his malady, he was informed that it was occasioned by a depression of the skull upon the brain, by a blow from the falling limb of a tree. Procuring surgical aid, Mr. Hendrix caused the depressed skull to be raised to its natural position, when the patient uttered the concluding words of a sentence that he had begun to address to his son, with whom, fourteen years before, he was splitting rails under the tree where he received the injury that deprived him of his senses: 'Put in the wedge.'"

This is a remarkable example of suspended thought. For fourteen years he had lived perfectly unconscious of the loss of a moment of time. But he ate, drank, slept, awoke, and moved about. But how? Simply as a machine. Like the clock, the human mechanism had been wound up, or set in motion, and must run its allotted time, though a part of its complicated machinery, unessential to its longevity, should cease to move. The hunger, and the act of supplying its demands, were but a part of the natural movements of the intricate machine.

Can immortality be bound for fourteen years at a time by the weight of a skull bone? Can immortality be put to sleep by a little chloroform? All this is true of the human mind, which is so connected with the brain that a depression of the skull bone will suspend thought for long years. But who believes that mortality can thus triumph over immortality? To be consistent, all who believe that the mind is a personality dwelling in the body, must believe that immortality can be conquered by mortality. Rather let me believe that man himself is an intellectual being, instead of believing that he is destitute of intellect, and dependent upon an inside tenant to think for him. Man himself being confessedly mortal, it is easy to see how his mentality can be affected by accidents, or chloroform. W. S.

HELP THE CAUSE.

Do you inquire, What cause? The best cause in the world—the cause of Christ, in its various branches of truth and righteousness. Christ has a cause in the world, and it is worthy of help. It is not usually supported by direct miracles, else God would not ask us to contribute to its support. He might have sent angels, instead of men, to preach the word; and these could have gone everywhere without spending money, or incurring expense for anything; but he saw fit to send mortal man.

Do you ask, Who should help the cause? Every one. No one is exempt. The demand is laid upon all. But this leads to the inquiry, How can we help the cause? In a variety of ways. Some can preach the gospel; others can hold up their hands while doing it, by supplying their temporal wants, which latter item is as really required by the gospel as the former. Some can write works calculated to convince men of the truth, while others can scatter them like autumnal leaves. Some can furnish money to publish the truth, and others can spare the time to judiciously (not wastefully) circulate these silent messengers of truth among the error-beclouded masses. Some can do more, and some less, in these departments; but all can do something. All can help by prayer who lack the ability to help in any other way; but while praying, ask yourself the question, Is there not some way in which I can do just a little toward answering my own prayer? Listen to Jesus' voice—"Lovest thou me more than these"—more than these earthly things? Do you answer, Yes? Then show it by feeding the sheep; by preaching, by exhortation, by scattering the gospel in a printed form, or by supporting God's ministers who are giving their time and talents to his cause. Are any loving pleasure more than God? W. S.

VIEWS OF DEATH.

A Chicago divine recently preached a sermon on death, from these words—"We all do fade as a leaf." We give the following extracts from the reporter's record:—"The graveyards of men were as much the result of an original plan as was the falling of the leaves. Did any one imagine that the Almighty designed that the leaves of trees should be immortal? Why, then, should any theologian affirm that graveyards were an unnatural intrusion on the proper order of things. It seemed to him more reasonable and philosophical to follow out the reasoning of the text—'We all do fade as a leaf.' . . . . Like the leaf, death was only life in disguise. The falling of the leaf was only part of the process of nature. The tree need not be sorrowful for the falling of its leaves, for at its feet they formed the life-source of the new leaves to grow the next summer. Leaves had a resurrection, in some way or other they had a new life in other leaves. There is not extinction of their forces, but only a change."

Is it true that "death is only life in disguise," with man? This is modern preaching; but the Bible tells us that "sin entered into the world, and death by sin." Was sin a part of the "original plan?" Would not the tree of life, if man had never been driven from it, have kept out of the land all graveyards? Is man's resurrection like the resurrection of leaves—liable to come up in a cabbage head? Was Christ raised on this principle? W. S.

CHRIST DRAWING ALL MEN.

Bro. Quincy A. Manuel thus writes:—

North Weymouth, Mass., Oct. 26th, '72.

DEAR BRO. IN CHRIST:—I want you to give me an explanation on a verse in Scripture found in St. John, 12: 32. It reads thus:—"And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me."

This drawing must be conditional, or compulsive. If compulsive, the conditions of the gospel are all supplanted, or reduced to a worthless arrangement. If conditional, it is in harmony with the gospel economy; for Paul affirms: "The grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men [that is, to Gentiles as well as Jews], teaching us that denying ungodliness," &c. (Titus 2: 11, 12.)

It is true that "all men," Gentiles as well Jews, are drawn to Christ by the gospel scheme; but all of the drawn ones do not yield—being drawn conditionally, and not compulsively, it is optional with them whether they will comply with the conditions. "Many are called (drawn), but few are chosen." Some "out of all nations" will accept Christ; others who are drawn will refuse to yield. All may be benefited by this drawing, but many will not be: "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life," said Christ. W. S.

LOVE OR LUST?—By confounding love and lust, the way is paved for carnality under the plea of "brotherly love"—a kind of brotherly love which has a special preference for the sisters—which begins in the spirit, and ends in the flesh, not recognizing the dividing line between love and lust. It is the devil's business to blind our eyes to this line, and to get christians over the line, and then prompt them to justify themselves with the plea that they are actuated by "brotherly love." True "brotherly love" will honor God enough to shun even the very "appearance of evil," and will lead men to act in the dark, or behind the curtain, just as they would in the sight of people. Sometimes "holy kissing," by being taken out of its channel, and being promiscuously practiced by both sexes, is made a pretext for lustful kissing, which is not always the end of the matter. Nor is this the only way in which brotherly love is transformed into sisterly love, or turned into a lustful channel, to the ruin of a once untarnished character. When love begins to give preference to the opposite sex, set it down as the incipient stage of lust, and nip it in the bud. W. S.

TRUTH ALIVE IN ALABAMA.

The following note from an Alabama minister, who is defending the truth, is too good to keep to myself:—

"Stevenson, Ala., Aug. 29th, 1872.

ELD. WM. SHELDON:—Dear Bro.,—After some delay I write you. Times here are coming to a kind of precarious prospect doctrinally. Theologians of every grade and society are doing their best to break down the 'banner of truth,' which I hold up to the people, but all seems to turn for the better. One minister, not long since, preached here against me on the nature of man and future punishment; told the people that my doctrine came from New York, or somewhere else, where Yankee-doodle-Dandy came from, and that no man who did not believe the soul immortal should swear against him. If he does not 'flinch,' I will meet him on his own proposition, on the first Saturday and Sunday in October, to discuss the subject. Pray for me. I think the debate on the kingdom with Bro. J. has done great good, as the following notes will show. The first one is from one of his neighbors, though a member of no church:—

'LONG ISLAND, ALA., Aug. 8th, 1872.

Eld. C.,—Dear Sir:—I will write you a few lines, for the purpose of letting you know how Mr. J. is talking. He has been boasting of having another debate with you ever since you left. And he told his congregation last Sunday that he was going to have a four or six days debate, if you would meet him. He also told that you spoke lightly about him, asking who would be the blacksmith after the resurrection. He also stated that you did not give him time to bring up his points, and that he has since found many things in his favor. His church has been like sheep without a shepherd ever since the debate, and he is doing this to try to collect them together again. He also says that he knows he can put down such faith as you have. So adieu for the present, wishing you God speed. N——.'

The following is from one of Bro. J.——'s own members, who heard the debate, and was convinced of the points of which he speaks by my proving in the debate the prophets were dead, and would have to be RAISED before we could see them in the kingdom:—

'CATCHINGS, TENN., Aug. 20th, 1872.

Why don't you send an appointment up here? I have many arguments here with preachers and members of different sects. I advocate an unconscious state of the dead till the resurrection; I deny the immortality of the soul. The kingdom is not yet established, but will be at His second coming to raise the dead, and judge the world. THEN he will say, Come, inherit the kingdom, etc. And you know I have to fight for it, but I use the sword of the Spirit, the word of God; and you know I have that on my side. If you have any works on the subject, please loan them to me. The "Scripture Searcher" you gave me has been a great advantage to me. J. C. S.'

I have thus far wearied you with reading, to show you how the Lord is blessing my labors. A Methodist said to me the other day that many believed every word of my preaching, but would not confess it publicly, because it is 'an unpopular doctrine,' and we learn that it has been the case 'from the days of John the Baptist until now.' I went to the association of which I wrote to you. There were some churches refused to be represented for fear they would have to fellowship my churches, which they say have gone off after 'Northern heresy.' The editor of the Baptist Watchman was there, and preached on the soul. He said that the spirit was nothing but a life principle, which animated and gave life to both soul and body; and then after thus confessing that the soul was dependent on this life principle for its existence, affirmed that the soul was immortal; that it was the truth, and he would say it; he then personated me thus: 'My brother on the left here believes and preaches the gloomy doctrine of the soul sleeping in the grave till the resurrection'; and said he to me, 'brother, I want you to quit it.'

Thus you see that I am cast down, but not forsaken. I tried to preach last Sunday to a large congregation from—'This is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son'; and I feel that my soon-coming Master helped me to show the absurdity of looking for that life before the advent of the donor.

Dear brother, pray for me and mine, that the good Lord will still open the way for me to spend the time more to his glory. It is my meat and drink to preach his word, and I have come to believe that faith and prayer are sufficient to enable me to proclaim it amid my persecution; yea, by blessed experience I know it. I think within the next three months there will be quite a change in the orthodox theology here, especially among the laity."

This brother is doing a good work, though still connected with the Baptist church. Persecution will not drive the truth out of him. He can be neither flattered nor driven to smother up the truth of God. More such men are needed. W. S.

DO NOT DO IT.—Do not do what? When the preacher is in full blast, and holding the attention of the people in a crowded house, and some new comers arrive, do not jump up in front of the preacher and motion to the new comers, or cry out from some corner, "Seats this way." It diverts the attention, and disturbs the charm. It will not hurt the new comers to stand a few moments, if no one should seat them, till the minister reaches a point in his sermon where he can stop without injuring his discourse, and tell the unseated people where they will find vacant seats. It is not only annoying to the speaker to be thus disturbed, and thus have the attention of the people diverted, but it is ruinous to the meeting. Let the practice be stopped. W. S.

BRO. HASTINGS.

H. H. TILLEY.

Bro. Grant:—I see by the note from Bro. H. L. Hastings, in your last week's issue, that, as I feared, the Scriptural Tract Repository was destroyed in the late fire, only a portion of his private library being saved. I see, also, that, with the characteristic combination of Yankee pluck and trust in the "guiding hand" of Providence, for which he is so well known, he proposes to issue the next number of the Christian, senior and junior, promptly, D. V. Now, I wish to say, without having had any previous communication with him (for fear he would veto it, as we know he does not believe in begging, even for the Lord's work), that I think our brethren and sisters—including the children, who have derived so much pleasure and profit, from his tracts and the Little Christian, as well as from Sister Hastings' children's meeting—could not aid the cause of Christ more effectually than by contributing, "as the Lord hath prospered them," to put the Repository in statu quo, so that it may again send forth its millions of terse and pungent leaflets, like flakes of "the beautiful snow," to purify and enliven the spiritual landscape, and cheer the hearts of many lone dwellers in southern hovels and in prison cells. I say this advisedly, for, without any disparagement of our denominational publications—which are most excellent ammunition when dealing, at close range, with members of churches, or others, whose minds have been sufficiently awakened to take an interest in investigating our distinctive tenets—I have found that Bro. H.'s publications supply a want, in laboring with the thoughtless impenitent, whether young or old—such, for instance, as gather at the open air meetings of our Y. M. Christian Association here, that I find nothing else will; i. e., a thoroughly evangelical literature, which I can conscientiously disseminate, and yet not so offensively doctrinal or sectarian as to lead to its rejection or prohibition by bodies composed of those who differ from us in faith.

Those who know Bro. H. and his noble companion best, are aware how entirely they have, like Muller, of England, lived a "life of trust," and how wonderfully God has provided the means for the work they have undertaken in His name; but perhaps all are not aware how Sr. H., after being raised up from what was thought must be her death-bed—in direct answer to prayer and laying on of hands, and, as she firmly believed, for the special work in the destitute South to which, leaving family and home, she immediately devoted herself—when she saw the absolute famine, both physical and spiritual, that prevailed in that desolated region, at once returned North, sold her only remaining property—the little house which, as her husband said, she had earned many times over—and devoted the proceeds to the work in which she was engaged, thus literally "giving all for Christ." As we are not called upon, then, to relieve physical suffering, as in the case of the Chicago fire, let us, who believe the time for doing up our work for the Master is so short, give of our substance to supply a still greater want, "a famine of the word of God."

I would suggest to any one who approves of this suggestion, that he or she be not satisfied with forwarding an individual contribution, but start a subscription, and give all an opportunity to aid in the good work. We did so last Sunday here in Washington, and though we are, as yet, but a "feeble folk," we raised a respectable sum on the spot, which will probably be considerably increased. To any one who may not have the money to give, I would suggest that he or she can aid just as effectually by taking a copy of the Christian and starting out to obtain a list of subscribers, which, with the beautiful map of Palestine offered as a premium, ought not to be a difficult matter, among members of all denominations, seeing it is, as its name imports, entirely unsectarian, and aims merely to win and prepare subjects for the kingdom.

GOOD NEWS.

BRO. GRANT:—The secular Baptist ministers of Hillsdale Co., Mich., are in the practice of having associations. They meet once in three or four months for mutual counsel and improvement. At those meetings they appoint subjects for each other to write upon at the next gathering. Last winter, or spring, two of their number were appointed to write essays, one on the immortality of the soul, and the other on the condition of the righteous dead betwixt death and the resurrection. A few weeks since, they met at Hillsdale city, and the Elder who wrote on immortality came out with a strong essay in favor of no immortality, or endless life except through Christ, discarding entirely the heathen fable of immortal-soulism. A strong sensation was created among the ministers. The minister appointed to write on the state of the righteous, etc., only wrote out his in part, consequently no such essay was read. They will all get confounded; yet so let us be encouraged. This makes the third Baptist minister in this country that has now taken this noble stand. May the Lord bless them.

FROM CALIFORNIA.

DR. P. BROOKS.

Editor World's Crisis:—The christians East will be glad to hear that Sr. Fassett has recovered from her sickness, and has been preaching the gospel of the Lord again for about four weeks. I think her eyes, with granulated eyelids, will be cured soon. Sr. Fassett is one of our best preachers here on the Pacific coast, and preaches every Sunday at least, either in Santa Clara, where she has her home, or in San Francisco, or in Vallejo. The ministers of the Lord here are very zealous, and working from morning to evening in the Lord's vineyard without pay. Bro. and Sr. Reed are sometimes gone for one or two months to preach in new places. They went last week into the northerly part of Cal., and, passing Vallejo, baptized eight persons. Bro. Fassett is lecturing in San Francisco on Daniel, by the help of the old well-known chart. Bro. Wilson came back from Santa Cruz, where he had been laboring for the Lord for about a fortnight. These dear ones give all for the cause, and work in great earnest, and the Lord blesses them.

Great things have been accomplished here on this coast. The church in Vallejo seems to be a little ahead, and shows what a society of christians can do by working together. They single out persons and make them a subject for prayer, and conversion follows. Take an example, and do likewise. Now, dear eastern christians, good bye. In a little while the Lord is coming, and his reward is with him.

"In view of the unpleasant and embarrassing condition under which I am placed, in knowing that some feel alienated from me because of some errors committed in the past; and desiring to enjoy the undivided fellowship of all God's dear children, I freely and sincerely confess that I have erred in many things, for which I am exceedingly sorry; and hope and pray that the sorrow I have suffered in the past, because of grief that my brethren have suffered, in consequence of any conduct on my part, will by the grace of God enable me to guard against errors in the future; and I desire to meet any that may feel grieved with anything I have done, and by the grace of God I will be reconciled to my brethren. Signed, WM. J. BLANCHARD."

The following resolution was unanimously passed—Resolved, That we, in view of the foregoing confession, heartily receive our Bro. William J. Blanchard as a member of our conference, in good fellowship; and we recommend him to the church of God.

Voted, that the following rules of action for members be embodied in, and become a part of, the constitution—

1. No member shall speak without addressing the Chair, and being recognized by him. 2. No member shall speak more than once on the same question, and then not to exceed five minutes, without the consent of the body.

Voted, that the committee of three chosen to procure and run the tent, the past year, be discharged. Voted, that we have a committee of three to see to and run the tent for the ensuing year. The following named brethren were unanimously chosen as such committee—A. W. Sibley, Sandy Hill; John B. White, Hoosick; and William A. Durand, Saratoga Springs, N. Y. Voted, that the tent-flag be paid for, and the tent repaired and put into the field, as early in the spring of 1873 as duty may demand.

The reports of the preaching and delegated brethren were of a cheering character, representing a good interest in many new places, and additions to the churches.

The following resolution was unanimously passed—Resolved, That we tender our sincere thanks to the citizens of Hoosick, for the kind reception and hospitality shown us during our stay with them.

Voted, that a report of this conference be caused to be published in the World's Crisis, also in the Advent Christian Times. Voted, to adjourn sine die. A. P. BUMP, Sec.

EXPERIENCE OF MARVIN W. LUTZ.

How wondrous has been the love of God to me, who felt like Paul the chief of sinners; and how amazing the grace of God to have kept me these two years that are past and gone. Last Friday, Nov. 8th, 1872, was just two years since God for Christ's sake converted my soul, through the labors of Bro. John G. Hook. When I look back on the past, and see how many times I have wandered and done and said things that I ought not to have said and done; and left undone many things that I ought to have done; and with it all God has been so good to keep me from turning like a dog to his vomit, I am ready to exclaim,—

"Amazing grace, how sweet the sound
That saved a wretch like me.
I once was lost, but now am found,
Was blind, but now I see.
Through many dangers, toils and snares,
I have already come;
But grace has brought me safe thus far,
And grace will bring me home."

But God has shown me that trials and sorrows will come, and I must bear them, looking to Jesus who was the beginner and will be the finisher of my faith.

During the past two years, like many others, I have depended too much on the arm of flesh; and I find wherever I go it is the fault of too many young converts. But there is none like Jesus. He is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother, and I have found it safe, and would recommend all young converts to take Jesus for their pattern, and trust in him, for there was no fault in the man. Railing back at others, and getting out of patience, was the cause of much sorrow to me; and by so doing many saints were grieved; and the peace that should have flowed like a river was lost many times to me; but God in his mercy has showed me my folly, and forgiven me, and I ask all whom I have wronged and grieved to forgive me also; and as you forgive me, our heavenly Father will forgive you your faults; and if you have no faults, you surely can forgive me. I have learned to follow peace with all men. I ask all to let by-gones be by-gones, and to live in peace, as the Lord is near at hand. It is pleasant for brethren to dwell together in unity, that brotherly love may continue; and we all know that he that hateth his brother is a murderer, and no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him.

I would say to all, remember what a poor wretch I was, and have the charity that suffereth long and is kind. Help me by your prayers, and, by God's grace assisting me, I will live nearer God, labor for the salvation of the perishing, and herald the coming kingdom of Jesus to be established under the whole heavens. With malice toward none, with charity for all, I am your Bro. in Christ,

M. W. LUTZ.

TENT MEETING.

H. P. BRADLEY.

Perhaps it will be interesting to some of the readers of the Crisis to hear about a series of meetings held in our town (Bristol, Conn.), by our brethren Hook and Lutz in the large mission tent, "Evangelist." By invitation of our brethren, they came here and pitched their tent Oct. 1st, and continued meetings for about three weeks, holding them afternoons and evenings, and on the intervening Sabbaths. Many of the meetings were seasons of great interest, refreshing seasons, heavenly sittings together, which cannot soon be forgotten by those who enjoyed them. The evening meetings, and those held on the Sabbaths, were largely attended, and we trust the seeds of truth so bountifully sown on these occasions may yet spring up and bear fruit an hundred-fold.

The little church here has been greatly strengthened and more closely knit together in the bonds of love. Backsliders have been reclaimed, and some for the first time have tasted the joys of pardoned sin, who, we trust, will be among the number saved when Jesus comes to make up his jewels. Eight were baptized. We are glad that "the dear old tent" in which Bro. Hook has so faithfully labored, and under which "poor Lutz" was converted, ever found its way here with us. May it prove a blessing in other places, where it may yet be pitched, and also to those who have felt to go out with it, that they may gather in a few more from the highways and hedges, that the Master's house may be filled.

Bristol, Conn., Nov. 8th.

—A well-tuned heart must have all its strings, all its affections, ready to answer every touch of God's finger.

A VILLAGE IN THE GREEN MOUNTAIN STATE.

J. A. CLEAVELAND.

Bro. Grant:—We trust it will not be out of place for us to say a few words through the Crisis respecting Morrisville and its surroundings. First, we have about eight or nine hundred souls in a very pretty village, situated on the banks of the Lamoille river, nearly thirty miles from its head. We think there is no village on the line of the Lamoille Valley railroad that is growing faster than this place. The inhabitants are a very industrious people, therefore they find no time to meddle with their neighbors' business; for this reason, we have peace and quiet. The greater part of the inhabitants are church-going people. We have three meeting-houses, which are very well filled every Sabbath. This we regard as an honor to the place.

A stranger was stopping in this place a short time since, who wished for assistance about some matter of business. He said he never found a village before where there were none out of employment. We have every advantage that is found in almost any village or town in the State. We have a very excellent academy (F. C. Hathaway Principal), with one hundred and twenty-five pupils; one of the best water-powers in the State, not occupied fully yet; and a very great chance for all kinds of machinery.

We have one thing more that is of far greater interest to us than all we have named, and that is the gospel of the kingdom, which is preached here. We have every reason to believe that the good seed that has been sown is taking root in good ground. The preaching of the soon coming of Jesus is not acceptable to all; nevertheless, it must be proclaimed. The people must have line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little, and there a little. Thank the good Lord, we have got almost through. Babylon will soon come into remembrance before God, and like a mighty mill-stone she will go down. Men of the world will build, plant, and sow, until Jesus comes, their hearts being overcharged with the cares and surfeiting of this life; and will not know anything about it until it is too late.

While we go among the people, we find here and there one who loves the present truth with all his heart. In order for us to enter the kingdom, we must get all we have upon the altar, and then get on ourselves. This will make the offering a good one, such as God will accept.

Correspondence.

From Bro. E. Morrill.

Bro. Grant:—We are now at Canterbury, by invitation, united in a union meeting with one orthodox and two Free Will Baptist ministers, to hold four days, and we trust it will be a success. The protracted meeting at West Deerfield was blest with the Spirit and power of God. Sunday evening, Nov. 10th, about twenty-five sinners and backsliders rose requesting the prayers of God's people, and the meeting continued until Thursday evening, and every evening some others made a start to serve the Lord. Then we left Bro. John M. Quimby to continue the meetings over Sunday, Nov. 17th, promising to return and be with him Tuesday and Wednesday following, and over Sunday, Nov. 24th. We expect to see a great work in that vicinity. We are out giving the compelling message, and there is a compelling power that goes with it, and oh! let us be faithful, hold up this glorious truth of the coming of the Lord a little longer, and we shall get the reward. Give us your prayers, that we may be ever watching, waiting, and working, and at last share with you and all the redeemed in the beauty and glory of paradise restored.

From Bro. W. A. Sheffield.

Bro. Grant:—We have been having some good meetings again. Bro. P. A. Smith preached for us at the Advent Chapel, near Suwannee Shoals, on the 3d inst., and at Oak Grove church on the 10th, having good congregations and good attention. No other minister can get such numbers together and such attention in this vicinity, who has ever preached here, as can Elder Smith. He is to preach at Lake City on the 17th, and at Stark in Bradford county on the 24th.

We were all pleased to have Bro. Smith come among us again to preach the gospel of the kingdom, with all its convincing force; and how pleased he was to know that the most wayward Adventist had not sought shelter under the roof of any other doctrine, and that others not Adventists acknowledged that a refutation of our views, in harmony with the general teaching of the Bible, was simply impossible.

Eld. T. J. Green is doing good service south of here, and is the right man in the right place. Bro. Smith has promised to visit our section again as soon as his appointments are filled below, and hold meetings at other places, and those above mentioned.

Suwannee Shoals P. O., Columbia Co., Fla.

From Bro. T. N. Sherman.

Bro. Grant:—Please allow me to say through the columns of the Crisis a few words to the friends of Jesus scattered abroad. Knowing that in almost every town, or village there are one or more of our brethren who perhaps would like to have a meeting in their vicinity, but are detained for want of means to secure a preacher. By this, I do not mean those stingy churches, who for the sake of not paying a minister, who depends upon his preaching to support a large family, but would rather get a preacher for nothing—nay I do not mean such; but I desire to help God's poor children. The Lord has blessed and prospered me in the past, for which I have great reasons to be thankful. I desire to labor in new fields. I care not if it be in a school-house, a union meeting, or a private dwelling, just as may seem most convenient, and as the Lord may direct. Now any brother, feeling destitute of means to secure a preacher and who would like to have a meeting in their vicinity, should it be any reasonable distance from my house, please to correspond with the writer.

Braggville, Mass.

From Bro. G. Duncan.

Bro. Grant:—I think it right to add my testimony to the value of the Crisis, for we appreciate its weekly visits. The glorious truths it contains, in illustrating and explaining the word of God, make our Bible easy to be understood. We were once in the darkness. Bless the Lord, we now see; the mists have fallen from our eyes, and our household rejoices in the glorious hope of the soon coming of the Lord Jesus Christ. We have not now to walk alone, being united in church fellowship at Santa Clara. It is a good thing to meet the brethren and sisters, to unite in worship according to the word of God, and not by the traditions of men. The Lord is blessing the work on the Pacific coast, and will do so wheresoever it is faithfully proclaimed. He has declared his word shall not return unto him void, but shall accomplish that whereunto he sent it; and as we see the day of our Lord near at hand, may we, trusting in the help of the Lord Jesus, so live that we may welcome his coming with joy, and enter into that rest he has prepared for those who love him.

Santa Clara, Cal.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. G. J. Slatton writes from Morrisville, Vt.:—"I am a firm believer in the near coming of the Savior and of the ushering in of that day for which all other days were made. O how precious to the christian the name of Jesus; his coming to purify and make new and restore the earth to its former beauty, to give immortality to all who sleep in Jesus, and to change the living saints. I believe the times of the Gentiles are about to be fulfilled; that the kingdom under the whole heaven is soon to be given to the saints; that the Nobleman is about to return and to take his father David's throne. My faith is firm in seeing the King in his beauty soon. Shall we be pleased to see him? Not unless we are ready, and expecting his return. The cry, 'Behold he cometh,' will sound dismal to the unbelievers. O that the people would search the Scriptures, and take them for a guide instead of the traditions of men. It seems as if the Gentile church would be found at the second coming of Christ very much as the Jewish church was found at his first coming,—full of errors and traditions of men; but they will avail nothing; none but those who have the truth, and oil in their vessels, will be saved."

Sr. M. A. Scovil writes:—"The weekly visits of the Crisis are exceedingly refreshing, instructive, and heart-cheering. Yours is a great and noble work, and I am truly glad that whilst you are trying to influence others to 'mount up the heights of wisdom,' you are so abundantly blessed as to be in constant possession of that 'peace which passeth understanding.' Trusting that the Crisis may be in the future, as it has been in the past, a beacon light shining clearly upon the pathway of truth, I remain yours in Christ."

The Woodhull-Claflin Affair.—Mrs. Victoria C. Woodhull (as she calls herself) has for sometime enjoyed an unenviable notoriety. Avowing and practising the most corrupt principles, she was nevertheless assisted by those better than herself to set up in business as a broker, procured capital to publish a paper, was sent to Washington as an advocate of the Woman's Rights movement, and even put forward as their candidate for President of the U.S. But Monday, Nov. 4, on the eve of the election, she found herself rather suddenly, with her sister and their publisher, thrown into prison for printing and circulating obscene matter through the mails. Last July their paper had suspended, and their business affairs generally went to smash. This attempt to revive it by publishing atrocious libels on private individuals has ended as it deserved.

No one was found willing to go bail for these wretched women, but the eccentric George Francis Train, whose bail was not allowed. The Grand Jury has found a true bill against them, and there is every prospect that they will be convicted and sentenced to the full penalty of the law for their offence, which is five hundred dollars fine and imprisonment for one year. We are glad to see that there is a strong feeling of indignation and horror manifested at the course of these misguided women. It bespeaks a healthier public sentiment than when Theodore Tilton could write a senseless panegyric of Victoria C. Woodhull, comparing her to our spotless Sovereign, almost worshiping her as if she were the Virgin Mary, and predicting that she would be President of the United States.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

DENMARK.

Copenhagen, Nov. 18. Advices from the Provinces show that the wreck and ruin caused by the hurricane is enormous. At many points the sea embankments and draining works have been demolished. The damage done in the island of Falster, known for its fertility as the "Orchard of Denmark," will exceed a million of dollars. The King has sent relief to the inhabitants and the Queen heads the subscription lists and presides over the Aid Association. The Minister of Maine has ordered the commandants of Danish vessels and naval stations to give every succor to shipwrecked crews along the coast.

FRANCE.

London, Nov. 20. Despatches from Paris are freighted with important news, and every fresh item is eagerly read. As stated in those despatches last night, M. Thiers, President of the republic of France, finding the majority in his favor in the National Assembly so small, repeated the threat, so often made on former occasions, to resign his presidency and retire to private life. Many of the members of the Assembly, supposing this statement of the President to be but an idle threat, were disposed to take no notice of the matter, but went on with the usual business regardless of M. Thiers' excited conduct. Others, however, who were in favor of taking him at his word and propositions, were immediately made to prepare for any emergency which might arise, consequent upon the apprehended hasty action of the President. Among the plans considered was one for the appointment of a military triumvirate, the members of which should assume full control of the affairs of the government, acting under general instructions from the National Assembly.

GERMANY.

Berlin, Nov. 21. The Ecclesiastical Rights bill, prohibiting the issuing of decrees of excommunication, has been submitted to the Diet. It declares that any clergymen who shall by name threaten with punishment or decree or proclaim as punishable a subject of Prussia shall be liable to a fine of five hundred thalers or two years' imprisonment, and be ineligible to office for five years.

SPAIN.

REVOLUTIONARY WORK.

A band of thirty-five masked men has destroyed the telegraph wires and thrown from the track a railroad train between the towns of Almanca and Albacete, in the Province of Muncia, Spain. Armed bands, supposed to be Republicans, have appeared between Penaguila and Benigloba, in the Province of Valencia. There are also revolutionary symptoms at Alcoy, in the same province. The civil guards have been concentrated at Almeria, in Andalusia.

ITALY.

Rome, Nov. 20. The Prefect of Police of this city has issued an order forbidding the assembling of the meeting advertised to be held here on the 24th instant, because he has reason to believe that the meeting is really called in the interest of the opposition to the present form of government in Rome.

The Pope.—It is asserted that the Pope, in an interview he recently granted to a high political personage who happened to be in Rome, said:—"It is frequently asked if I will leave Rome and the Vatican, and when I shall do so. My reply is very simple. I shall not leave the Vatican until the day comes when I can no longer by remaining there govern the Catholic world. Until now the Powers which have remained faithful have accredited Ambassadors to me, in whom I can place entire confidence, and thanks to whom, my words are certain to reach the whole Catholic world. But when I am no longer sure that my words are faithfully transmitted to those who are ready to hear them, then it will become my duty to leave this city."

The Evangelical Alliance.—The Evangelical Alliance, whose fifth international gathering was to have taken place in New York in 1870, but was postponed on account of the Franco-German war, will, as has been before announced, meet in New York in 1873. A meeting was held last week in the Church of the Pilgrims, Brooklyn, to hear the report of the Rev. Dr. Schaff, Secretary of the Alliance, on its operations in Europe and on the subject of the General Conference, which it is proposed to hold in New York City in 1873. In his report Dr. Schaff said that between forty and fifty distinguished men from almost every country in Europe would attend next year's Conference, and take part in its deliberations. Altogether, from three hundred to five hundred visitors might be expected on that occasion. There would be a great variety of subjects discussed, such as the "present state of Christendom," "Christian Union," "Foreign and Domestic missions," "Christianity and government," "Christianity and philanthropy." Among the foreign delegates who have declared their intention to be present, are Revs. H. Krummacher, W Monod, Edmund de Pressnse, Professors Tischendorf, Oosterzee, Charteris, the Dean of Canterbury and Fathers Gavazzi and Hyacinthe.

DOMESTIC.

The Aztecs.—A California paper describes the discovery of three villages of Juni Indians, supposed to be the survivors of the ancient Aztecs. They dwell on the great trail from Fort Mohave, on the Colorado to Albuquerque, on the Rio Grande, and are about a day's journey from the diamond fields. They are about two thousand in number, and are very different from other tribes, being in looks, bearing and pride of dress a manifestly superior race. The women are comely and modest in dress, their houses are clean and their cooking good. Certain kinds of cloth are made by them. These people have fields of corn, wheat and vegetables, flocks of sheep and goats, and they keep all the domestic animals. They are friendly to the whites; never fight aggressively, but are stubborn in defence. Their houses are of stone, three stories high, and built in terrace form. They worship the great Spirit, and believe he dwells in the sun.

Notices.

At a preliminary meeting held in Philadelphia, Pa., at the Advent Christian Hall, corner of Ninth and Spring Garden Streets, in answer to a call for all interested in the truths relating to the Second Advent of our Lord and Savior, the following resolution was passed by a unanimous vote:—

Believing time to be short, with a great work before us in preparing people for the soon coming judgment, and believing that all our efforts should be brought into harmonious action for the spreading of light by the distribution of tracts, preaching of the word, and by other gospel means;

Therefore, resolved, that we extend a call to all the preachers, churches, and others living in the eastern part of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, and the District of Columbia, who love the appearing of our Lord and Savior, to meet in Conference, commencing Thursday evening, Nov. 28th, and continue over the following Sabbath, Dec. 1st, at the Advent Christian Hall, corner of Ninth and Spring Garden Streets, Philadelphia, Penn., for the purpose of organizing a Conference embracing the above named territory. Eld. Wm. Ashman, and others.

Edwin King, Secretary.

A Protracted Meeting, under the direction of the Mass. Advent Conference, will commence in Southbridge, Mass. (Town Hall), Saturday evening, Dec. 7th, and continue over the two following Sundays. Preaching afternoons and evenings. Brn. J. Couch, Miles Grant, and others, will attend and preach the word, calling attention to the signs of the times, nature of man, etc. Brethren and sisters in the region around are earnestly desired to come in and help. Come in the name of the Master to work for the salvation of the perishing. Time is short, and what is done must be done quickly. "Behold the Judge standeth before the door."

Will Brn. L. Boutell and I. B. Potter please arrange so as to be at this meeting and help? Come early. P. S. Butler, for the brethren.

A Session of the Mass. Advent Conference will be held in Plainville, Mass. (near New Bedford), commencing Thursday evening, Dec. 5th, to continue over the following Sunday, and longer if the interest should demand it. Let the people in all this vicinity come and help us in this meeting. But little to be done at this meeting only the proclamation of the gospel of the kingdom and soon coming Savior, with an effort to save as many as possible in the effort. Come one and all to this meeting. Preaching afternoons and evenings, as duty directs. L. Boutell.

C. E. Barnes, Secretary.

There will be a Conference at the Second Advent Chapel in Worcester, commencing Monday, Dec. 16th, at two o'clock p. m., and continue over the following Sunday. The special object of this meeting will be to mutually consider the evidence in regard to the time of the Lord's coming, and the duties which devolve upon God's people in view of the nearness of "that day." It is specially hoped, and very earnestly requested, that the preaching brethren, near and far, whether identified with "1873," "1875," or with no definite time, may come and co-operate in this interesting and important work. A general invitation is hereby extended to all lovers of Jesus and his appearing. Come, filled with the Spirit, to labor for God and the good of the perishing. The church in Worcester extend a cordial greeting and welcome to all.

H. H. Buxton,
Sam'l Ayres,
W. M. Hall,

The Western District of the N. Y. A. C. Conference will hold its first quarterly meeting with the church at East Shelby, commencing Thursday evening, Dec. 12th, and hold over the following Lord's day. Let each church be represented by delegate or by letter. Let earnest prayer go up to God for his special blessing upon this meeting, that the saints may be the better prepared for the "marriage of the Lamb," and sinners be brought to Jesus.

All persons coming by railroad will stop at Medina, and please write to Frank Carpenter what time you will be there, and accommodations for all to get to the meeting will be made. Come one and all. A. C. Newell, President.

A. P. Moore, Secretary.

Those coming to the Eastern division of the New York Conference, held at Conquest, Dec. 13th, will stop at Port Byron, on the direct road from Rochester to Syracuse. Teams will meet the morning and afternoon trains from the east and west, to convey all that will come to Conquest. Brethren and sisters, pray for this meeting. Make a sacrifice to come, and God will bless you. M. R. Miles.

State Conference.—The quarterly session of the Mass. State Conference will be holden in Worcester, Mass., commencing Thursday, Dec. 19th, at ten o'clock a. m., and hold over the following Sabbath. By special request of the church, this Conference will be holden in connection with the Time Conference. L. Boutell, Pres.

C. E. Barnes, Sec.

The time for tent meetings is over for this season, and now is the time for quarterly sessions of the Conference, and protracted meetings in places where they need help. Now let your wants be made known, and we will do the best we can to supply those places. This is the time for work.

L. Boutell, for the Committee.

The next Quarterly Conference of Vermont will be held with the church at Addison, commencing Tuesday evening, Dec. 3d, and continuing three days. It is hoped that a special effort on the part of preachers and brethren to attend this meeting will be made. While the world grows dark and drear, let us "comfort one another with these words." Come, then, one and all. Traverse the valleys and come. Climb the mountain hills and come. Come by cars and come by team. Come early and stay late. Come crying out for the living God. Come in the fullness of God.

H. F. C.

P. S. Will some one at Addison state in Crisis the way to reach the place by both railroads?

H. F. C.

The Second Quarterly meeting for the Southern District of Wisconsin will be held at Monticello, Green Co., commencing Friday evening, Dec. 13th, 1872, and holding over Lord's day. The several churches in the district are requested to send delegates, and all the preaching brethren are earnestly solicited to attend, as there may be important business to come before the meeting. Brethren, come praying, expecting a good time in the Lord, and we shall have it.

George Howard.

The Lord willing, the first quarterly meeting of the Eastern District of the New York A. C. Conference will be held with the church in Conquest, commencing Thursday evening, Dec. 12th, and holding over Sunday. It is earnestly hoped there will be a general rally of all the forces in this district to this first "district" meeting. Come in the name of the Lord, for the hour of his judgment hasteth greatly. Let us strengthen our hands, and press the battle a little longer while yet we may. Each church should take the quarterly collections early, and all come to help "after a godly sort." Pray for this meeting.

M. R. Miles, President.
Wm. E. Brown, Secretary.

The Southern District New York State Conference will hold its first quarterly session at Honeoye, Ontario Co., commencing Friday, Dec. 6th, and continuing over the following Sunday. BRO. HASTING'S LOSS.

On our return home from Coaticook, P. Q., we hastened to see Bro. Hastings, and found him cheerful, after his great loss by the terrible fire in Boston, Nov. 9th and 10th, and calmly trusting in the Lord. For some time he and his family, including some fifteen or twenty who labored for him, lived in the Repository building. It was their place of business and their home. They worked, ate and slept there. Now it all lies in ashes—bed, bedding, furniture, clothing, type, presses, bookplates, books, tracts and pamphlets, a large number; valuable manuscript, choice facts and selections, affording proof on important subjects connected with the Bible, the best results of his studious life, aided by no ordinary talent, are now no more. His all is burnt up, excepting a portion of his private library. These are a few items connected with the sad calamity.

Since the fire, he had made arrangements to get out the Christian at Rand and Avery's, the largest printing establishment in New England; but on Wednesday night, Nov. 20th, they were burnt out, and a part of the material for the Christian was destroyed. Bro. Hastings' family is scattered here and there, while he is struggling with the waves of adversity. He makes no complaints, but is patiently waiting for the guiding hand of Providence to direct his steps and provide for his necessities. He has not asked us to say a word in his behalf; but we feel it a duty and privilege to let his sad condition be known to our brethren, and all the friends of Jesus, who love to bear one another's burdens.

Some of the things he prized most, money cannot restore; but he informed us that it would take not less than twenty-five thousand dollars to replace what was burnt up. Who will help lift our Bro. out of the ashes? A little now will aid him much.

COATICOOK.

Coaticook, P. Q., is quite an enterprising village, on the Grand Trunk R. R., some twenty-five miles beyond Island Pond, towards Montreal. It has good water privileges, and considerable manufacturing. It seems quite like our enterprising New England villages, as many of the people are from the States. It is growing more rapidly than most towns in Canada.

The meetings in Coaticook have been the means of awakening a deep interest in the study of the Scriptures. The large hall has been very much crowded, and the best of attention given to the subjects presented. The prayer and conference meetings have become seasons of special interest, and some fifteen or twenty have requested prayers; that they may become the disciples of Jesus, and be ready for his coming. Those who had been trying to serve the Lord for some years have now listened to Paul's entreaty, when he says: "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God, which is your reasonable service." Rom. 12: 1. As a result, they have received "great peace." Others are almost persuaded to listen to the entreaty, and lay their all upon the altar. The interest is daily increasing, with a bright prospect for blessed results. As all the meeting-houses have been closed against us, there is considerable talk about building a chapel, wherein all christians may be free.

OUR EXPERIENCE.

In a former article we related some of our experience in the service of Christ. At that time we parted with our readers at the Round Lake campmeeting, Saturday, July 8th, 1871. That day will ever be a memorable one in life's pilgrimage. It holds a hallowed influence in the records of the past, like the night when our sins were first forgiven in Dec. 1842. At the time last named, through faith in Jesus, we received the witness of the Spirit that our sins were pardoned; in July, in 1871, through faith in Jesus, we received the gift of the Spirit, producing "perfect love" and "great peace." Since that time, there has not been a cloud in our spiritual horizon. Our experience has been like an even-spun thread; though at times we have had overwhelming manifestations of the Spirit. Jesus has seemed to be near at hand, and not afar off; a present help in every time of need; an indwelling, abiding Savior and lover; our all in all; the same every day and every hour, in all situations. When the tempter comes in all his fury, then Jesus seems to be the nearest, and smiles the most sweetly; and we have only to hide in him, to get out of the reach of the enemy. It is on such occasions that we feel most sensibly,

The feelings of which we are speaking must be experienced to be understood and appreciated. To those who have never felt them, any description would be as unintelligible and obscure, as an explanation of joy to one who had never felt it. The man would be thought beside himself who should contend that there is no such thing as pain, because he had never felt it; equally out of the way is the one who claims there is no such thing as the gift of the Spirit, producing "perfect love," because he had never received such a blessing. It will not do to throw away christian experience which is in harmony with the Bible; but what does not correspond with that is of but little value. We would say to all, test everything of a religious nature by the Bible. Let that be the only standard by which to be guided. If we are not in harmony with that, we are wrong. Be very careful about following impressions. Be sure they are from the Lord, before yielding to them. Satan can also produce impressions by his spirit; and when he finds one who will follow them instead of the Bible, he will do his best to lead him astray into some fanatical notion or position, that will only serve to bring the subject into disgrace in the sight of the true followers of Jesus; and then tell them that such is the result of a belief in the doctrine of holiness, and thus keep people away from the fulness there is in Christ. Let us beware of Satan's devices and keep out of his snares.

While we would give caution against being led by Satan beyond the standard of the Lord, we would urge all to come up to it, and entreat them not to be driven back into cold formalism through fear of being a peculiar people, zealous of good works. This is the time for the church to be thorough in her consecration. Half-hearted work will not stand successfully against a pure christianity. We need on the whole armor of God. All internal foes should be fully subdued by the power of the Holy Spirit. In our own strength we are not sufficient to cope with our great adversary, but through Christ strengthening us, we may stand in victory every moment, and keep the devil outside of the heart. Thank the Lord for the promise, that if we resist the devil, he will flee from us. This will be found true in all situations, so long as Jesus is allowed to fill the heart with his Spirit. But when watchfulness and prayer are neglected, Satan is sure to seek an entrance into the heart in some secret way, where we least look for him. Beware of his devices.

"MANY MANSIONS."

BRO. GRANT:—Will you please explain John 14: 2? What are the "many mansions"? He says—"I go to prepare a place for you." Are those mansions for us? If not, what are they for? Please explain through the Crisis. E. J. JAQUES.

When Jesus says—"I go to prepare a place for you," it follows that the place was not then prepared. In Rev. 21: 1–2, John says: "I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea. And I, John, saw the holy city, New Jerusalem, coming down from God, out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." It is quite evident that this "New Jerusalem" is the one to which Jesus refers in John 14: 2, which he was going "to prepare." It appears that the first use of this "new," "great," and "holy city," is at the marriage of the Lamb, when he shall return to this planet to set up his kingdom. Abraham "looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." Heb. 11: 10. The New Jerusalem was seen "coming down from God," as a bridal present to his well beloved Son. This is evidently the building to which Paul refers in 2 Cor. 5: 1, when he says: "We know, that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house, not made with hands." This is to be the capital of the coming kingdom. It is the real crystal palace, and will be worthy of the King of kings. In that beautiful palace, the saints will "see the King in his beauty."

MELCHIZEDEK.

BRO. GRANT:—Will you give your opinion about Melchizedek? There are some here who believe that Melchizedek was God, the eternal Father. Others believe that he was Christ. I believe he was only a human being; of a good and upright spirit. Please give your views on this point through the Crisis. E. J. FLETCHER.

There is but little room for doubt but that Melchizedek was the same as Shem, the eldest son of Noah. In the book of Jasher, chap. 16: 11, this fact is clearly stated. He lived in both worlds, the one before, and the one following the flood. As those who were born this side of the flood had no records of the events before the deluge, they had no means of tracing the lineage of the antediluvian priesthood, hence Paul says of the Melchizedek priesthood, or this "priest of the Most High God," who was "also king of Salem," that he was "without descent, having neither beginning of days, nor end of life." Nothing is known as to the origin of his priesthood, nor of its duration. He appears as a priest this side of the flood, but with no credentials, and yet his priesthood is not questioned. There is no record of his predecessor. He was the first "priest of the Most High God," mentioned in the Bible; and it is not known that his priesthood was transmitted to any other one; hence he stood alone, unlike any other priest. Thus it is with Jesus.

It should read—received at conversion.

THE POWER OF MORTALITY OVER IMMORTALITY.

Can immortality be controlled by mortality? Or can incorruptibility be conquered by that which is corruptible? This must be so if current theology is correct, which sets up the claim the mind, or soul is immortal; for the mind is controlled by a variety of temporal calamities, similar to the following case, which we clip from the New Era:

"SUSPENDED THOUGHT.—Rev. Mr. Hendrix, when visiting the patients in a Canadian hospital, a number of years since, discovered therein a man who appeared to be perfectly demented, but otherwise in good health. Inquiring into the cause of his malady, he was informed that it was occasioned by a depression of the skull upon the brain, by a blow from the falling limb of a tree. Procuring surgical aid, Mr. Hendrix caused the depressed skull to be raised to its natural position, when the patient uttered the concluding words of a sentence that he had begun to address to his son, with whom, fourteen years before, he was splitting rails under the tree where he received the injury that deprived him of his senses: 'Put in the wedge.'"

This is a remarkable example of suspended thought. For fourteen years he had lived perfectly unconscious of the loss of a moment of time. But he ate, drank, slept, awoke, and moved about. But how? Simply as a machine. Like the clock, the human mechanism had been wound up, or set in motion, and must run its allotted time, though a part of its complicated machinery, unessential to its longevity, should cease to move. The hunger, and the act of supplying its demands, were but a part of the natural movements of the intricate machine.

Can immortality be bound for fourteen years at a time by the weight of a skull bone? Can immortality be put to sleep by a little chloroform? All this is true of the human mind, which is so connected with the brain that a depression of the skull bone will suspend thought for long years. But who believes that mortality can thus triumph over immortality? To be consistent, all who believe that the mind is a personality dwelling in the body, must believe that immortality can be conquered by mortality. Rather let me believe that man himself is an intellectual being, instead of believing that he is destitute of intellect, and dependent upon an inside tenant to think for him. Man himself being confessedly mortal, it is easy to see how his mentality can be affected by accidents, or chloroform. W. S.

HELP THE CAUSE.

Do you inquire, What cause? The best cause in the world—the cause of Christ, in its various branches of truth and righteousness. Christ has a cause in the world, and it is worthy of help. It is not usually supported by direct miracles, else God would not ask us to contribute to its support. He might have sent angels, instead of men, to preach the word; and these could have gone everywhere without spending money, or incurring expense for anything; but he saw fit to send mortal man.

Do you ask, Who should help the cause? Every one. No one is exempt. The demand is laid upon all. But this leads to the inquiry, How can we help the cause? In a variety of ways. Some can preach the gospel; others can hold up their hands while doing it, by supplying their temporal wants, which latter item is as really required by the gospel as the former. Some can write works calculated to convince men of the truth, while others can scatter them like autumnal leaves. Some can furnish money to publish the truth, and others can spare the time to judiciously (not wastefully) circulate these silent messengers of truth among the error-beclouded masses. Some can do more, and some less, in these departments; but all can do something. All can help by prayer who lack the ability to help in any other way; but while praying, ask yourself the question, Is there not some way in which I can do just a little toward answering my own prayer? Listen to Jesus' voice—"Lovest thou me more than these"—more than these earthly things? Do you answer, Yes? Then show it by feeding the sheep; by preaching, by exhortation, by scattering the gospel in a printed form, or by supporting God's ministers who are giving their time and talents to his cause. Are any loving pleasure more than God? W. S.

VIEWS OF DEATH.

A Chicago divine recently preached a sermon on death, from these words—"We all do fade as a leaf." We give the following extracts from the reporter's record:—"The graveyards of men were as much the result of an original plan as was the falling of the leaves. Did any one imagine that the Almighty designed that the leaves of trees should be immortal? Why, then, should any theologian affirm that graveyards were an unnatural intrusion on the proper order of things. It seemed to him more reasonable and philosophical to follow out the reasoning of the text—'We all do fade as a leaf.' . . . Like the leaf, death was only life in disguise. The falling of the leaf was only part of the process of nature. The tree need not be sorrowful for the falling of its leaves, for at its feet they formed the life-source of the new leaves to grow the next summer. Leaves had a resurrection, in some way or other they had a new life in other leaves. There is not extinction of their forces, but only a change."

Is it true that "death is only life in disguise," with man? This is modern preaching; but the Bible tells us that "sin entered into the world, and death by sin." Was sin a part of the "original plan?" Would not the tree of life, if man had never been driven from it, have kept out of the land all graveyards? Is man's resurrection like the resurrection of leaves—liable to come up in a cabbage head? Was Christ raised on this principle? W. S.

CHRIST DRAWING ALL MEN.

Bro. Quincy A. Manuel thus writes:—

North Weymouth, Mass., Oct. 26th, '72.

DEAR BRO. IN CHRIST:—I want you to give me an explanation on a verse in Scripture found in St. John, 12: 32. It reads thus:—"And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me."

This drawing must be conditional, or compulsive. If compulsive, the conditions of the gospel are all supplanted, or reduced to a worthless arrangement. If conditional, it is in harmony with the gospel economy; for Paul affirms: "The grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men [that is, to Gentiles as well as Jews], teaching us that denying ungodliness," &c. (Titus 2: 11, 12.)

It is true that "all men," Gentiles as well Jews, are drawn to Christ by the gospel scheme; but all of the drawn ones do not yield—being drawn conditionally, and not compulsively, it is optional with them whether they will comply with the conditions. "Many are called (drawn), but few are chosen." Some "out of all nations" will accept Christ; others who are drawn will refuse to yield. All may be benefited by this drawing, but many will not be: "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life," said Christ. W. S.

LOVE OR LUST?—By confounding love and lust, the way is paved for carnality under the plea of "brotherly love"—a kind of brotherly love which has a special preference for the sisters—which begins in the spirit, and ends in the flesh, not recognizing the dividing line between love and lust. It is the devil's business to blind our eyes to this line, and to get christians over the line, and then prompt them to justify themselves with the plea that they are actuated by "brotherly love." True "brotherly love" will honor God enough to shun even the very "appearance of evil," and will lead men to act in the dark, or behind the curtain, just as they would in the sight of people. Sometimes "holy kissing," by being taken out of its channel, and being promiscuously practiced by both sexes, is made a pretext for lustful kissing, which is not always the end of the matter. Nor is this the only way in which brotherly love is transformed into sisterly love, or turned into a lustful channel, to the ruin of a once untarnished character. When love begins to give preference to the opposite sex, set it down as the incipient stage of lust, and nip it in the bud. W. S.

TRUTH ALIVE IN ALABAMA.

The following note from an Alabama minister, who is defending the truth, is too good to keep to myself:—

"Stevenson, Ala., Aug. 29th, 1872.

ELD. WM. SHELDON:—Dear Bro.,—After some delay I write you. Times here are coming to a kind of precarious prospect doctrinally. Theologians of every grade and society are doing their best to break down the 'banner of truth,' which I hold up to the people, but all seems to turn for the better. One minister, not long since, preached here against me on the nature of man and future punishment; told the people that my doctrine came from New York, or somewhere else, where Yankee-doodle-Dandy came from, and that no man who did not believe the soul immortal should swear against him. If he does not 'flinch,' I will meet him on his own proposition, on the first Saturday and Sunday in October, to discuss the subject. Pray for me. I think the debate on the kingdom with Bro. J. has done great good, as the following notes will show. The first one is from one of his neighbors, though a member of no church:—

'LONG ISLAND, ALA., Aug. 8th, 1872.

Eld. C.,—Dear Sir:—I will write you a few lines, for the purpose of letting you know how Mr. J. is talking. He has been boasting of having another debate with you ever since you left. And he told his congregation last Sunday that he was going to have a four or six days debate, if you would meet him. He also told that you spoke lightly about him, asking who would be the blacksmith after the resurrection. He also stated that you did not give him time to bring up his points, and that he has since found many things in his favor. His church has been like sheep without a shepherd ever since the debate, and he is doing this to try to collect them together again. He also says that he knows he can put down such faith as you have. So adieu for the present, wishing you God speed. N——.'

The following is from one of Bro. J.——'s own members, who heard the debate, and was convinced of the points of which he speaks by my proving in the debate the prophets were dead, and would have to be RAISED before we could see them in the kingdom:—

'CATCHINGS, TENN., Aug. 20th, 1872.

Why don't you send an appointment up here? I have many arguments here with preachers and members of different sects. I advocate an unconscious state of the dead till the resurrection; I deny the immortality of the soul. The kingdom is not yet established, but will be at His second coming to raise the dead, and judge the world. THEN he will say, Come, inherit the kingdom, etc. And you know I have to fight for it, but I use the sword of the Spirit, the word of God; and you know I have that on my side. If you have any works on the subject, please loan them to me. The "Scripture Searcher" you gave me has been a great advantage to me. J. C. S.'

I have thus far wearied you with reading, to show you how the Lord is blessing my labors. A Methodist said to me the other day that many believed every word of my preaching, but would not confess it publicly, because it is 'an unpopular doctrine,' and we learn that it has been the case 'from the days of John the Baptist until now.' I went to the association of which I wrote to you. There were some churches refused to be represented for fear they would have to fellowship my churches, which they say have gone off after 'Northern heresy.' The editor of the Baptist Watchman was there, and preached on the soul. He said that the spirit was nothing but a life principle, which animated and gave life to both soul and body; and then after thus confessing that the soul was dependent on this life principle for its existence, affirmed that the soul was immortal; that it was the truth, and he would say it; he then personated me thus: 'My brother on the left here believes and preaches the gloomy doctrine of the soul sleeping in the grave till the resurrection'; and said he to me, 'brother, I want you to quit it.'

Thus you see that I am cast down, but not forsaken. I tried to preach last Sunday to a large congregation from—'This is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son'; and I feel that my soon-coming Master helped me to show the absurdity of looking for that life before the advent of the donor.

Dear brother, pray for me and mine, that the good Lord will still open the way for me to spend the time more to his glory. It is my meat and drink to preach his word, and I have come to believe that faith and prayer are sufficient to enable me to proclaim it amid my persecution; yea, by blessed experience I know it. I think within the next three months there will be quite a change in the orthodox theology here, especially among the laity."

This brother is doing a good work, though still connected with the Baptist church. Persecution will not drive the truth out of him. He can be neither flattered nor driven to smother up the truth of God. More such men are needed. W. S.

DO NOT DO IT.—Do not do what? When the preacher is in full blast, and holding the attention of the people in a crowded house, and some new comers arrive, do not jump up in front of the preacher and motion to the new comers, or cry out from some corner, "Seats this way." It diverts the attention, and disturbs the charm. It will not hurt the new comers to stand a few moments, if no one should seat them, till the minister reaches a point in his sermon where he can stop without injuring his discourse, and tell the unseated people where they will find vacant seats. It is not only annoying to the speaker to be thus disturbed, and thus have the attention of the people diverted, but it is ruinous to the meeting. Let the practice be stopped. W. S.

BRO. HASTINGS.

H. H. TILLEY.

Bro. Grant:—I see by the note from Bro. H. L. Hastings, in your last week's issue, that, as I feared, the Scriptural Tract Repository was destroyed in the late fire, only a portion of his private library being saved. I see, also, that, with the characteristic combination of Yankee pluck and trust in the "guiding hand" of Providence, for which he is so well known, he proposes to issue the next number of the Christian, senior and junior, promptly, D. V. Now, I wish to say, without having had any previous communication with him (for fear he would veto it, as we know he does not believe in begging, even for the Lord's work), that I think our brethren and sisters—including the children, who have derived so much pleasure and profit, from his tracts and the Little Christian, as well as from Sister Hastings' children's meeting—could not aid the cause of Christ more effectually than by contributing, "as the Lord hath prospered them," to put the Repository in statu quo, so that it may again send forth its millions of terse and pungent leaflets, like flakes of "the beautiful snow," to purify and enliven the spiritual landscape, and cheer the hearts of many lone dwellers in southern hovels and in prison cells. I say this advisedly, for, without any disparagement of our denominational publications—which are most excellent ammunition when dealing, at close range, with members of churches, or others, whose minds have been sufficiently awakened to take an interest in investigating our distinctive tenets—I have found that Bro. H.'s publications supply a want, in laboring with the thoughtless impenitent, whether young or old—such, for instance, as gather at the open air meetings of our Y. M. Christian Association here, that I find nothing else will; i. e., a thoroughly evangelical literature, which I can conscientiously disseminate, and yet not so offensively doctrinal or sectarian as to lead to its rejection or prohibition by bodies composed of those who differ from us in faith.

Those who know Bro. H. and his noble companion best, are aware how entirely they have, like Muller, of England, lived a "life of trust," and how wonderfully God has provided the means for the work they have undertaken in His name; but perhaps all are not aware how Sr. H., after being raised up from what was thought must be her death-bed—in direct answer to prayer and laying on of hands, and, as she firmly believed, for the special work in the destitute South to which, leaving family and home, she immediately devoted herself—when she saw the absolute famine, both physical and spiritual, that prevailed in that desolated region, at once returned North, sold her only remaining property—the little house which, as her husband said, she had earned many times over—and devoted the proceeds to the work in which she was engaged, thus literally "giving all for Christ." As we are not called upon, then, to relieve physical suffering, as in the case of the Chicago fire, let us, who believe the time for doing up our work for the Master is so short, give of our substance to supply a still greater want, "a famine of the word of God."

I would suggest to any one who approves of this suggestion, that he or she be not satisfied with forwarding an individual contribution, but start a subscription, and give all an opportunity to aid in the good work. We did so last Sunday here in Washington, and though we are, as yet, but a "feeble folk," we raised a respectable sum on the spot, which will probably be considerably increased. To any one who may not have the money to give, I would suggest that he or she can aid just as effectually by taking a copy of the Christian and starting out to obtain a list of subscribers, which, with the beautiful map of Palestine offered as a premium, ought not to be a difficult matter, among members of all denominations, seeing it is, as its name imports, entirely unsectarian, and aims merely to win and prepare subjects for the kingdom.

GOOD NEWS.

BRO. GRANT:—The secular Baptist ministers of Hillsdale Co., Mich., are in the practice of having associations. They meet once in three or four months for mutual counsel and improvement. At those meetings they appoint subjects for each other to write upon at the next gathering. Last winter, or spring, two of their number were appointed to write essays, one on the immortality of the soul, and the other on the condition of the righteous dead betwixt death and the resurrection. A few weeks since, they met at Hillsdale city, and the Elder who wrote on immortality came out with a strong essay in favor of no immortality, or endless life except through Christ, discarding entirely the heathen fable of immortal-soulism. A strong sensation was created among the ministers. The minister appointed to write on the state of the righteous, etc., only wrote out his in part, consequently no such essay was read. They will all get confounded; yet so let us be encouraged.

This makes the third Baptist minister in this country that has now taken this noble stand. May the Lord bless them.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, Aug. 22d, 1872, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

FROM CALIFORNIA.

DR. P. BROOKS.

Editor World's Crisis:—The christians East will be glad to hear that Sr. Fassett has recovered from her sickness, and has been preaching the gospel of the Lord again for about four weeks. I think her eyes, with granulated eyelids, will be cured soon. Sr. Fassett is one of our best preachers here on the Pacific coast, and preaches every Sunday at least, either in Santa Clara, where she has her home, or in San Francisco, or in Vallejo. The ministers of the Lord here are very zealous, and working from morning to evening in the Lord's vineyard without pay. Bro. and Sr. Reed are sometimes gone for one or two months to preach in new places. They went last week into the northerly part of Cal., and, passing Vallejo, baptized eight persons. Bro. Fassett is lecturing in San Francisco on Daniel, by the help of the old well-known chart. Bro. Wilson came back from Santa Cruz, where he had been laboring for the Lord for about a fortnight. These dear ones give all for the cause, and work in great earnest, and the Lord blesses them.

Great things have been accomplished here on this coast. The church in Vallejo seems to be a little ahead, and shows what a society of christians can do by working together. They single out persons and make them a subject for prayer, and conversion follows. Take an example, and do likewise. Now, dear eastern christians, good bye. In a little while the Lord is coming, and his reward is with him.

"In view of the unpleasant and embarrassing condition under which I am placed, in knowing that some feel alienated from me because of some errors committed in the past; and desiring to enjoy the undivided fellowship of all God's dear children, I freely and sincerely confess that I have erred in many things, for which I am exceedingly sorry; and hope and pray that the sorrow I have suffered in the past, because of grief that my brethren have suffered, in consequence of any conduct on my part, will by the grace of God enable me to guard against errors in the future; and I desire to meet any that may feel grieved with anything I have done, and by the grace of God I will be reconciled to my brethren. Signed, WM. J. BLANCHARD."

Voted, that the tent-flag be paid for, and the tent repaired and put into the field, as early in the spring of 1873 as duty may demand.

The reports of the preaching and delegated brethren were of a cheering character, representing a good interest in many new places, and additions to the churches.

The following resolution was unanimously passed—Resolved, That we tender our sincere thanks to the citizens of Hoosick, for the kind reception and hospitality shown us during our stay with them.

Voted, that a report of this conference be caused to be published in the World's Crisis, also in the Advent Christian Times. Voted, to adjourn sine die. A. P. BUMP, Sec.

EXPERIENCE OF MARVIN W. LUTZ.

How wondrous has been the love of God to me, who felt like Paul the chief of sinners; and how amazing the grace of God to have kept me these two years that are past and gone. Last Friday, Nov. 8th, 1872, was just two years since God for Christ's sake converted my soul, through the labors of Bro. John G. Hook. When I look back on the past, and see how many times I have wandered and done and said things that I ought not to have said and done; and left undone many things that I ought to have done; and with it all God has been so good to keep me from turning like a dog to his vomit, I am ready to exclaim,—

"Amazing grace, how sweet the sound
That saved a wretch like me.
I once was lost, but now am found,
Was blind, but now I see.
Through many dangers, toils and snares,
I have already come;
But grace has brought me safe thus far,
And grace will bring me home."

But God has shown me that trials and sorrows will come, and I must bear them, looking to Jesus who was the beginner and will be the finisher of my faith.

During the past two years, like many others, I have depended too much on the arm of flesh; and I find wherever I go it is the fault of too many young converts. But there is none like Jesus. He is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother, and I have found it safe, and would recommend all young converts to take Jesus for their pattern, and trust in him, for there was no fault in the man. Railing back at others, and getting out of patience, was the cause of much sorrow to me; and by so doing many saints were grieved; and the peace that should have flowed like a river was lost many times to me; but God in his mercy has showed me my folly, and forgiven me, and I ask all whom I have wronged and grieved to forgive me also; and as you forgive me, our heavenly Father will forgive you your faults; and if you have no faults, you surely can forgive me. I have learned to follow peace with all men. I ask all to let by-gones be by-gones, and to live in peace, as the Lord is near at hand. It is pleasant for brethren to dwell together in unity, that brotherly love may continue; and we all know that he that hateth his brother is a murderer, and no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him.

I would say to all, remember what a poor wretch I was, and have the charity that suffereth long and is kind. Help me by your prayers, and, by God's grace assisting me, I will live nearer God, labor for the salvation of the perishing, and herald the coming kingdom of Jesus to be established under the whole heavens. With malice toward none, with charity for all, I am your Bro. in Christ,

M. W. LUTZ.

TENT MEETING.

H. P. BRADLEY.

Perhaps it will be interesting to some of the readers of the Crisis to hear about a series of meetings held in our town (Bristol, Conn.), by our brethren Hook and Lutz in the large mission tent, "Evangelist." By invitation of our brethren, they came here and pitched their tent Oct. 1st, and continued meetings for about three weeks, holding them afternoons and evenings, and on the intervening Sabbaths. Many of the meetings were seasons of great interest, refreshing seasons, heavenly sittings together, which cannot soon be forgotten by those who enjoyed them. The evening meetings, and those held on the Sabbaths, were largely attended, and we trust the seeds of truth so bountifully sown on these occasions may yet spring up and bear fruit an hundred-fold.

The little church here has been greatly strengthened and more closely knit together in the bonds of love. Backsliders have been reclaimed, and some for the first time have tasted the joys of pardoned sin, who, we trust, will be among the number saved when Jesus comes to make up his jewels. Eight were baptized. We are glad that "the dear old tent" in which Bro. Hook has so faithfully labored, and under which "poor Lutz" was converted, ever found its way here with us. May it prove a blessing in other places, where it may yet be pitched, and also to those who have felt to go out with it, that they may gather in a few more from the highways and hedges, that the Master's house may be filled.

Bristol, Conn., Nov. 8th.

A VILLAGE IN THE GREEN MOUNTAIN STATE.

J. A. CLEAVELAND.

Bro. Grant:—We trust it will not be out of place for us to say a few words through the Crisis respecting Morrisville and its surroundings. First, we have about eight or nine hundred souls in a very pretty village, situated on the banks of the Lamoille river, nearly thirty miles from its head. We think there is no village on the line of the Lamoille Valley railroad that is growing faster than this place. The inhabitants are a very industrious people, therefore they find no time to meddle with their neighbors' business; for this reason, we have peace and quiet. The greater part of the inhabitants are church-going people. We have three meeting-houses, which are very well filled every Sabbath. This we regard as an honor to the place.

A stranger was stopping in this place a short time since, who wished for assistance about some matter of business. He said he never found a village before where there were none out of employment. We have every advantage that is found in almost any village or town in the State. We have a very excellent academy (F. C. Hathaway Principal), with one hundred and twenty-five pupils; one of the best water-powers in the State, not occupied fully yet; and a very great chance for all kinds of machinery.

We have one thing more that is of far greater interest to us than all we have named, and that is the gospel of the kingdom, which is preached here. We have every reason to believe that the good seed that has been sown is taking root in good ground. The preaching of the soon coming of Jesus is not acceptable to all; nevertheless, it must be proclaimed. The people must have line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little, and there a little. Thank the good Lord, we have got almost through. Babylon will soon come into remembrance before God, and like a mighty mill-stone she will go down. Men of the world will build, plant, and sow, until Jesus comes, their hearts being overcharged with the cares and surfeiting of this life; and will not know anything about it until it is too late.

While we go among the people, we find here and there one who loves the present truth with all his heart. In order for us to enter the kingdom, we must get all we have upon the altar, and then get on ourselves. This will make the offering a good one, such as God will accept.

Correspondence.

From Bro. E. Morrill.

Bro. Grant:—We are now at Canterbury, by invitation, united in a union meeting with one orthodox and two Free Will Baptist ministers, to hold four days, and we trust it will be a success. The protracted meeting at West Deerfield was blest with the Spirit and power of God. Sunday evening, Nov. 10th, about twenty-five sinners and backsliders rose requesting the prayers of God's people, and the meeting continued until Thursday evening, and every evening some others made a start to serve the Lord. Then we left Bro. John M. Quimby to continue the meetings over Sunday, Nov. 17th, promising to return and go with him Tuesday and Wednesday following, and over Sunday, Nov. 24th. We expect to see a great work in that vicinity. We are out giving the compelling message, and there is a compelling power that goes with it, and oh! let us be faithful, hold up this glorious truth of the coming of the Lord a little longer, and we shall get the reward. Give us your prayers, that we may be ever watching, waiting, and working, and at last share with you and all the redeemed in the beauty and glory of paradise restored.

From Bro. W. A. Sheffield.

Bro. Grant:—We have been having some good meetings again. Bro. P. A. Smith preached for us at the Advent Chapel, near Suwannee Shoals, on the 3d inst., and at Oak Grove church on the 10th, having good congregations and good attention. No other minister can get such numbers together and such attention in this vicinity, who has ever preached here, as can Elder Smith. He is to preach at Lake City on the 17th, and at Stark in Bradford county on the 24th.

We were all pleased to have Bro. Smith come among us again to preach the gospel of the kingdom, with all its convincing force; and how pleased he was to know that the most wayward Adventist had not sought shelter under the roof of any other doctrine, and that others not Adventists acknowledged that a refutation of our views, in harmony with the general teaching of the Bible, was simply impossible.

Eld. T. J. Green is doing good service south of here, and is the right man in the right place. Bro. Smith has promised to visit our section again as soon as his appointments are filled below, and hold meetings at other places, and those above mentioned.

Suwannee Shoals P. O., Columbia Co., Fla.

From Bro. T. N. Sherman.

Bro. Grant:—Please allow me to say through the columns of the Crisis a few words to the friends of Jesus scattered abroad. Knowing that in almost every town, or village there are one or more of our brethren who perhaps would like to have a meeting in their vicinity, but are detained for want of means to secure a preacher. By this, I do not mean those stingy churches, who for the sake of not paying a minister, who depends upon his preaching to support a large family, but would rather get a preacher for nothing—nay I do not mean such; but I desire to help God's poor children. The Lord has blessed and prospered me in the past, for which I have great reasons to be thankful. I desire to labor in new fields. I care not if it be in a school-house, a union meeting, or a private dwelling, just as may seem most convenient, and as the Lord may direct. Now any brethren, feeling destitute of means to secure a preacher and who would like to have a meeting in their vicinity, should it be any reasonable distance from my home, please to correspond with the writer.

Braggville, Mass.

From Bro. G. Duncan.

Bro. Grant:—I think it right to add my testimony to the value of the Crisis, for we appreciate its weekly visits. The glorious truths it contains, in illustrating and explaining the word of God, make our Bible easy to be understood. We were once in the darkness. Bless the Lord, we now see; the mists have fallen from our eyes, and our household rejoices in the glorious hope of the soon coming of the Lord Jesus Christ. We have not now to walk alone, being united in church fellowship at Santa Clara. It is a good thing to meet the brethren and sisters, to unite in worship according to the word of God, and not by the traditions of men. The Lord is blessing the work on the Pacific coast, and will do so wheresoever it is faithfully proclaimed. He has declared his word shall not return unto him void, but shall accomplish that whereunto he sent it; and as we see the day of our Lord near at hand, may we, trusting in the help of the Lord Jesus, so live that we may welcome his coming with joy, and enter into that rest he has prepared for those who love him.

Extracts from Letters.

Bro. G. J. Slatton writes from Morrisville, Vt.:—"I am a firm believer in the near coming of the Savior and of the ushering in of that day for which all other days were made. O how precious to the christian the name of Jesus; his coming to purify and make new and restore the earth to its former beauty, to give immortality to all who sleep in Jesus, and to change the living saints. I believe the times of the Gentiles are about to be fulfilled; that the kingdom under the whole heaven is soon to be given to the saints; that the Nobleman is about to return and to take his father David's throne. My faith is firm in seeing the King in his beauty soon. Shall we be pleased to see him? Not unless we are ready, and expecting his return. The cry, 'Behold he cometh,' will sound dismal to the unbelievers. O that the people would search the Scriptures, and take them for a guide instead of the traditions of men. It seems as if the Gentile church would be found at the second coming of Christ very much as the Jewish church was found at his first coming,—full of errors and traditions of men; but they will avail nothing; none but those who have the truth, and oil in their vessels, will be saved."

Sr. M. A. Scovil writes:—"The weekly visits of the Crisis are exceedingly refreshing, instructive, and heart-cheering. Yours is a great and noble work, and I am truly glad that whilst you are trying to influence others to 'mount up the heights of wisdom,' you are so abundantly blessed as to be in constant possession of that 'peace which passeth understanding.' Trusting that the Crisis may be in the future, as it has been in the past, a beacon-light shining clearly upon the pathway of truth, I remain yours in Christ."

The Woodhull-Claflin Affair.—Mrs. Victoria C. Woodhull (as she calls herself) has for sometime enjoyed an unenviable notoriety. Avowing and practising the most corrupt principles, she was nevertheless assisted by those better than herself to set up in business as a broker, procured capital to publish a paper, was sent to Washington as an advocate of the Woman's Rights movement, and even put forward as their candidate for President of the U.S. But Monday, Nov. 4, on the eve of the election, she found herself rather suddenly, with her sister and their publisher, thrown into prison for printing and circulating obscene matter through the mails. Last July their paper had suspended, and their business affairs generally went to smash. This attempt to revive it by publishing atrocious libels on private individuals has ended as it deserved.

No one was found willing to go bail for these wretched women, but the eccentric George Francis Train, whose bail was not allowed. The Grand Jury has found a true bill against them, and there is every prospect that they will be convicted and sentenced to the full penalty of the law for their offence, which is five hundred dollars fine and imprisonment for one year. We are glad to see that there is a strong feeling of indignation and horror manifested at the course of these misguided women. It bespeaks a healthier public sentiment than when Theodore Tilton could write a senseless panegyric of Victoria C. Woodhull, comparing her to our spotless Sovereign, almost worshiping her as if she were the Virgin Mary, and predicting that she would be President of the United States.

DENMARK.

Copenhagen, Nov. 18. Advices from the Provinces show that the wreck and ruin caused by the hurricane is enormous. At many points the sea embankments and draining works have been demolished. The damage done in the island of Falster, known for its fertility as the "Orchard of Denmark," will exceed a million of dollars. The King has sent relief to the inhabitants and the Queen heads the subscription lists and presides over the Aid Association. The Minister of Maine has ordered the commandants of Danish vessels and naval stations to give every succor to shipwrecked crews along the coast.

FRANCE.

London, Nov. 20. Despatches from Paris are freighted with important news, and every fresh item is eagerly read. As stated in these despatches last night, M. Thiers, President of the republic of France, finding the majority in his favor in the National Assembly so small, repeated the threat, so often made on former occasions, to resign his presidency and retire to private life. Many of the members of the Assembly, supposing that this statement of the President to be but an idle threat, were disposed to take no notice of the matter, but went on with the usual business regardless of M. Thiers' excited conduct. Others, however, who were in favor of taking him at his word and propositions, were immediately made to prepare for any emergency which might arise, consequent upon the apprehended hasty action of the President. Among the plans considered was one for the appointment of a military triumvirate, the members of which should take control of the affairs of the government, acting under general instructions from the National Assembly.

GERMANY.

Berlin, Nov. 21. The Ecclesiastical Rights bill, prohibiting the issuing of decrees of excommunication, has been submitted to the Diet. It declares that any clergyman who shall by name threaten with punishment or decree or proclaim as punishable a subject of Prussia, shall be liable to a fine of five hundred thalers or two years' imprisonment, and be ineligible to office for five years.

SPAIN.

REVOLUTIONARY WORK.

A band of thirty-five masked men has destroyed the telegraph wires and thrown from the track a railroad train between the towns of Almansa and Albacete, in the Province of Murcia, Spain. Armed bands, supposed to be Republicans, have appeared between Penaguila and Beniglobs, in the Province of Valencia. There are also revolutionary symptoms at Alcoy, in the same province. The civil guards have been concentrated at Almeria, in Andalusia.

ITALY.

Rome, Nov. 20. The Prefect of Police of this city has issued an order forbidding the assembling of the meeting advertised to be held here on the 24th instant, because he has reason to believe that the meeting is really called in the interest of the opposition to the present form of government in Rome.

The Pope.—It is asserted that the Pope, in an interview he recently granted to a high political personage who happened to be in Rome, said:—"It is frequently asked if I will leave Rome and the Vatican, and when I shall do so. My reply is very simple. I shall not leave the Vatican until the day comes when I can no longer by remaining there govern the Catholic world. Until now the Powers which have remained faithful have accredited Ambassadors to me, in whom I can place entire confidence, and thanks to whom, my words are certain to reach the whole Catholic world. But when I am no longer sure that my words are faithfully transmitted to those who are ready to hear them, then it will become my duty to leave this city."

The Evangelical Alliance.—The Evangelical Alliance, whose fifth international gathering was to have taken place in New York in 1870, but was postponed on account of the Franco-German war, will, as has been before announced, meet in New York in 1873. A meeting was held last week in the Church of the Pilgrims, Brooklyn, to hear the report of the Rev. Dr. Schaff, Secretary of the Alliance, on its operations in Europe and on the subject of the General Conference, which it is proposed to hold in New York City in 1873. In his report Dr. Schaff said that between forty and fifty distinguished men from almost every country in Europe would attend next year's Conference, and take part in its deliberations. Altogether, from three hundred to five hundred visitors might be expected on that occasion. There would be a great variety of subjects discussed, such as the "present state of Christendom," "Christian Union," "Foreign and Domestic missions," "Christianity and government," "Christianity and philanthropy." Among the foreign delegates who have declared their intention to be present, are Revs. H. Krummacher, W Monod, Edmund de Pressense, Professors Tischendorf, Oostersee, Charteris, the Dean of Canterbury and Fathers Gavazzi and Hyacinthe.

DOMESTIC.

The Aztecs.—A California paper describes the discovery of three villages of Juni Indians, supposed to be the survivors of the ancient Aztecs. They dwell on the great trail from Fort Mohave, on the Colorado to Albuquerque, on the Rio Grande, and are about a day's journey from the diamond fields. They are about two thousand in number, and are very different from other tribes, being in looks, bearing and pride of dress a manifestly superior race. The women are comely and modest in dress, their houses are clean and their cooking good. Certain kinds of cloth are made by them. These people have fields of corn, wheat and vegetables, flocks of sheep and goats, and they keep all the domestic animals. They are friendly to the whites; never fight aggressively, but are stubborn in defence. Their houses are of stone, three stories high, and built in terrace form. They worship the great Spirit, and believe he dwells in the sun.

In Brief.

—— The horse disease is now making a tour of the Southern States.——The epizootic has appeared at Providence, R. I., among the sheep.——A destructive pestilence is raging among all kinds of poultry along the line of the Hudson river.——The cholera has appeared on the whole Polish frontier, and in various sections of Prussia where it had not hitherto been reported.——Nine thousand persons were made homeless in Palazzolo, Italy, by the inundation.——The French postal administration has discovered the secret of an absolutely indelible ink, which resists the action of all acids.——The New York papers are now clamoring for the immediate trial of the thirty murderers now confined in the Tombs.——The site on which the building of the Vienna Exhibition of 1873 will be erected is six times larger than that on which the exhibition palace in Paris was constructed in 1867.——Emigration from Italy has assumed such enormous proportions that the Government has inquired into it, but no remedy has been suggested for the faults which have caused the exodus.——Chicago is going to build an immense crystal palace for the accommodation of a mammoth exposition to be held there next October. The building will be six hundred by one hundred feet with a transept of two hundred and fifty feet.——Most lamentable accounts appear in our latest European files as to the floods in Northern Italy, which have rendered tens of thousands homeless.

The Khedive of Egypt is reported to be the richest person in the world, his annual income being $50,000,000. He is also the most extensive farmer; and does large business as a merchant, banker, manufacturer and ship-builder.

Notices.

At a preliminary meeting held in Philadelphia, Pa., at the Advent Christian Hall, corner of Ninth and Spring Garden Streets, in answer to a call for all interested in the truths relating to the Second Advent of our Lord and Savior, the following resolution was passed by a unanimous vote:—

Believing time to be short, with a great work before us in preparing people for the soon coming judgment, and believing that all our efforts should be brought into harmonious action for the spreading of light by the distribution of tracts, preaching of the word, and by other gospel means;

Therefore, resolved, that we extend a call to all the preachers, churches, and others living in the eastern part of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, and the District of Columbia, who love the appearing of our Lord and Savior, to meet in Conference, commencing Thursday evening, Nov. 28th, and continue over the following Sabbath, Dec. 1st, at the Advent Christian Hall, corner of Ninth and Spring Garden Streets, Philadelphia, Penn., for the purpose of organizing a Conference embracing the above named territory. Eld. Wm. Ashman, and others.

Edwin King, Secretary.

IMPERFECT IN ORIGINAL

IN GOD WE TRUST.

H. L. HASTINGS.

Wrapped in robes of living fire,
Earthly joys and hopes expire;
Faith exults above their dust;
Still in God the Lord we trust.

Let earth's wealth and pride consume;
Let its glory find a tomb;
Let it fleet, for fleet it must:
Still in God the Lord we trust.

Swiftly speed time's hours along,—
Now in sunshine and in song,
Now in sackcloth and in dust,—
Still in God the Lord we trust.

Earth and heaven shall pass away
In the burning judgment day;
All man's glory, pomp, and lust,
Farewell all. In God we trust.

DISCIPLESHIP.

C. E. BARNES.

"So likewise, whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple."—LUKE 4: 33.

The discussions which of late have been going on in the Crisis, have awakened an interest in the subject of sanctification, which I trust will not cease till all who lack this very important element of Christianity have attained it. To enter upon the life of a christian so as to be faithful to the end, so as to be a bright and shining light in the world, it is necessary that it should be entered upon understandingly. A man should know just what is required of him, what sacrifice he may be called upon to make, and what sacrifice he must hold himself ready and willing to make when it is demanded of him. He should have an intelligent idea as to what indulgences are proper and what are improper, and should fully count the cost of the step which he is about to make. One reason why so many persons backslide is because when they started in the christian way they had not fully comprehended the step they were taking, and so when position led them into opposition to friends, or when certain sacrifices were demanded of them which they had not thought of as being demanded, or when temptations from the world, whose strength they had overlooked, presented themselves, they have been found lacking and have fallen away.

When they started they were sincere, they wanted to be christians, but they did not know what it was going to cost them, and so like the man who began to build his house without first estimating whether he had sufficient money at his command to complete it with, and therefore found that he had undertaken to do what he was unable to finish, or like the general who went to make war upon another without first consulting whether he would be able with his ten thousand to successfully combat his enemy who had twenty thousand, like these two persons, brought to view by our Savior, who failed to accomplish their designs simply because they did not in the beginning properly count the cost, many fail to be successful in the christian warfare simply because when they started they had no clear ideas as to what was required of them, and so they soon found that they had undertaken to build a house which they were unable to finish. It was because of this very liability on the part of men to enter upon certain schemes without properly estimating their ability, that the Savior spoke the words which I have selected as a text in this article—"So likewise, whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple."

In presenting my views, I shall endeavor first, to explain the meaning of the requirement, and secondly, to show when it is to be practically applied to the person contemplating entering upon the christian life, and then to draw a few inferences.

I. The meaning of the requirement. It is stated so simply and clearly that it hardly needs an explanation, yet perhaps a few words concerning it may not be out of place. It means something more than the breaking off of evil habits, for a man may have quit drunkenness and the use of tobacco, and profanity and other vices, and yet be very far from having complied with the requirement of the Savior. It means something more than mere morality. A man may be truthful, kind, patient and generous, he may be many things and do many things which are excellent in themselves, and yet be far from what this requirement demands.

The words of our Savior mean that when a man enters his service he is to hold himself ready to forsake everything dear to himself on earth, to sacrifice his own plans of ambition, to give up every and any scheme however fondly cherished, if it shall be made known to him by the Savior that he desires him to do it. It does not mean that, when entering upon his service a man shall then sever every earthly connection, that he shall turn his back upon all his friends, or that he shall destroy his property and become a pauper, but it means that he shall hold himself ready to do this if his allegiance to the Savior ever demand it; that he must hold himself and his all, time, property, family (so far as he has a right to control it), energies, talents, everything he has or may have, in subjection to the will of his Lord Jesus Christ.

This I understand to be the meaning of the passage, and, indeed, it can mean nothing else—"Whoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath [or who does not hold himself ready to do so when I command it], he cannot be my disciple."

II. When it is to be practically applied to the person contemplating leading a christian life. On this point I affirm that it belongs to the very beginning of his christian experience. He is not to become a christian first and live a christian life for some months or years and at last take a further step by holding himself ready to give up all for the Savior, but before he can take one step in the narrow way he is to do so. It is not a command that is applicable to preachers alone, nor to those who contemplate being martyrs for Christ's sake, nor for those who think of becoming foreign missionaries, but it reads—"Whosoever he be of you." It includes the least and the greatest, the young and old, the preacher and lay member, the martyr and the missionary; one and all are included in the word "whosoever."

This is one of the most important truths of practical Christianity, let it be known then that the one great act of consecration is to occur at the very beginning of a christian life, that the one special period when a man is to give up his will, wholly and unreservedly to God is when he first resolves to become a disciple of Christ.

This being settled, for I do not see how any one familiar with his Bible can dispute it, this passage will be seen to have a direct bearing upon the question of sanctification which is attracting so much attention among us of late. I have confined my attention solely to this one passage because it is all comprehensive. There can be no act of consecration or sacrifice which is not included in the text before us. A man's wealth, hopes, fears, desires, will, passions, body, soul and spirit, everything over which he has any control, are all included in the expression of our Savior, and we have seen that he says a man who does not give himself up in all these respects cannot be his disciple.

With all due respect for the opinions of others, I would ask, if a man thus consecrate himself at the very beginning of his christian experience, what there will be for him to do in after time toward attaining sanctification, if he never turn from his original dedication?

So far as I know, those who have received what they term "the gift of the Spirit, or the blessing of perfect love," have first made a full consecration of their all to Christ at some time subsequent to their conversion, and this is not my opinion alone, but is confirmed by the statement of our worthy Editor, in the Crisis of Oct. 30th, where he makes a similar statement. With the question, when God bestows his Spirit, or when he sets apart to his service the person thus consecrated, I have here nothing to do; I am simply referring to the act of consecration or sanctification so far as man is concerned, so far as it is a yielding of himself to God on his part, so far as it is an act to be performed by himself, and I feel safe in affirming that if the conversion be as thorough and complete as it should be, men will make their first full consecration of their all to Christ at the period of their conversion, and not at some time after that event.

But it may be objected, where is the man that has done this when first converted? It is not my object to prove that any one has ever done so; what I am to prove is that the Scriptures require a man to do so when he first becomes a disciple of Christ. The objection that no man has made such a consecration has no bearing whatever upon the question at issue, but men have made such consecrations of themselves when first converted. I know of those whose first sincere prayer for pardon was also accompanied with the full and complete surrender of themselves and their all to God for time and eternity, and if a man have true views of the calling of the gospel, he will consider that nothing less than this will constitute him a disciple of Christ.

Again, it may be said that if you insist that no man can be a disciple of Christ except he has made this full consecration of himself to God, you will deny discipleship to ninety-nine hundredths of the Christian world. But I am not insisting on it at all, I am only insisting that Jesus has said—"Whosoever he be of you that forsaketh not all that he hath, he cannot be my disciple." Now if you say ninety-nine hundredths of the Christian world have not done this, or do not stand ready to do it if demanded of them, it is not I that deny their discipleship, but the Master himself. It is not for me to say whether men be disciples of Christ or not. I can, however, read the conditions which he has laid down as being necessary to be complied with in order to be his disciple, and then men can judge for themselves whether they be his disciples or not.

Jesus says that a man cannot be his disciple till his all has been given up; if a man says, "I have only recently given up all, but I was a disciple of Christ before," I simply say, you was a disciple then on other grounds than what are found in the words of Jesus, and further you was a disciple without having complied with those conditions which Jesus said are absolutely necessary in order to become a disciple.

Once more, it may be said that inasmuch as Paul writes to certain brethren urging them to become sanctified, and to present their bodies living sacrifices to God, it follows that they had not as yet done so, else he would not have urged them to do so, but as he addresses them as brethren he must have recognized their discipleship even though they had not made this full consecration. But I may quote another passage from Paul—"And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, . . . for ye are yet carnal; for whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men?" 1 Cor. 3: 1, 3. What we are to learn from these passages is, not that Paul recognized the terms of discipleship as being anything less than what Christ had said, but that he saw that the mass of professors, then as now, were far behind the requirements of the gospel, and therefore he urged them to attain that condition of consecration which they should have been in from the very beginning of their christian experience. "But he calls them brethren. How is this?" And when I am told how it is he called those his brethren whom he charged with being carnal rather than spiritual, I will answer.

In my opinion, the doctrine of sanctification as now taught by many is only lowering the standard of christian piety, because it virtually teaches that men can be disciples of Christ without having made a full and complete surrender of everything to him. They say that they themselves were christians years ago, but their first full consecration of their all to Christ was made but recently, or at least, made at a period subsequent to their conversion, therefore justifying us in the inference that men can be disciples of Christ without making this full surrender of their all to him. I maintain they cannot. If a man have not made a full consecration of himself to God, if he hold not himself ready to forsake all that he hath for Christ's sake, he has no right to claim discipleship, for Christ says he cannot be his disciple except he do this very thing which the man says he has not done.

Brethren, who are thus consecrated? Who are disciples of Christ? Who have given their all to him? It is high time that men should know what it is to be a christian, time that they should realize that to become the Lord's is to lose all claims upon themselves, and time that men should make this consecration, if they have been living up to the present time without doing so.

DUTY OF MINISTERS TO EACH OTHER.—Ministers are engaged in a very important and difficult work; no other calling can compare with it. All true ministers are divinely called to the same work; the same in every essential feature. Their hopes and fears, their aids and obstacles, their trials and triumphs are one. Why, then, should they hinder each other's work? God forbid that they do this! Their sympathy for each other should be holy, deep and abiding. They should rejoice in each other's success, and lament each other's defeat. In their treatment of one another, there should be felt and displayed the truest kindness, the most generous concern, the purest affection. No envy of a brother minister's talent, acquirements, or popularity, should be for a moment indulged. Never, without an urgent reason, should they utter a disparaging word of one another. The sneer, the inuendo, the belittling word should never be heard.

THE NATURE OF EVIL.

C. C. MARSTON.

No question is of more momentous and thrilling importance in all its relations to humanity than this: Will evil have an end? Peter seems to intimate that the affirmation of this query is true, by speaking of the "end . . . of them that obey not the gospel of God." 1 Peter 4: 17. If the wicked are to have an end put to them, then surely the time will come when sinners will not be. How sinners can have an end, and still never cease to be, is more than I can comprehend. You could not say of an endless chain, that it had no end; so with the sinner; if he is to exist right on through eternity, it is absurd to represent him as having an end.

Our experience with evil has been attended with terrible results. Until evil came into our world, all was peace and quiet. There were no elements in all the dominion of man that were in the least foreign to his permanent happiness and perfect comfort. How beautiful things looked in Eden on the morning of Creation! No tongue or pen on earth can describe it. The blooming flowers of paradise, and the luscious fruit of the garden, how beautiful and inviting. And while the fruit and other comforts of a kindred nature were abundant in the garden, still these do not complete the picture. If one element in the surroundings of that happy home is to be praised more than another, aside from the tree of life, it seems to me that element is the simple and consequently sublime innocence that is seen in all its perfected beauty, all through that blessed abode. Then there was the tree of life. What a rich treasure indeed! Whether it be understood as a "life-preserver," as some think, or a "life-imparter," still we may exclaim, whichever is correct, what a treasure, priceless treasure it was. There were no discordant notes in the music of Eden. All was harmonious unison. There were no quarrels there. No fault-finding or flaw-picking croakers, with their direful influence upon society, were seen in all the region. Tears were strangers and sighs were never heard. Pain, and sickness, and death were unknown and unheard of in the deathless realm of paradise. Would it not be a precious privilege to live forever in such a land as that? Well, such was Eden (and the half is not begun to be told) before sin was introduced into the fair and lovely abode of Adam and Eve. But evil enters and the scene is changed. No more harmony, no more innocence, but their opposite. Everything is perverted. We will not stop to query as to the probable reason of sin's entrance into the world. Many things we cannot see now, we shall understand by-and-by. Of one thing we are certain sin did enter the world.

The sad results of the change were speedily developed. All the comforts and blessings of Eden were immediately forfeited, and the disadvantages of disobedience fell thick and fast in the pathway of unfaithful man. From that day to the present, human history has been filled up with unmeasured sorrow and sadness. Distress and misery are the common lot of man. Go into any land, and into any society, and we meet the same picture of grief and woe. It is impossible to recount the evils of evil; and it is useless to attempt their description. The sting may be felt, but cannot be explained. When we cast our eyes over the world, and see the great uprising sins of the age; such, for instance, as intemperance, the slave trade, the opium traffic, etc., etc., our hearts sicken at the sight, and we cry out in the anguish of our souls, "Oh! God, when shall these things have an end?" And then the smaller sins, and the individual crimes that are found in every community. How great is the work of evil, and how far-reaching and dreadful is its influence. It is truly appalling to contemplate the picture. Oh! could we count the tears and hear the groans that issue from hearts that have been crushed by the iron heel of sin in a single hour, the wide world o'er, we would be astonished, no matter how great an appreciation of sin and its work we may have previously had.

Is this constitution of things permanent? Does God purpose to perpetuate this picture, and make it everlasting? According to a certain theory, this is not only to continue while the endless ages roll, but it is to grow worse and worse eternally. This is horror intensified, if it be true. There is a change in the administration of affairs anticipated by this theory, but the change does not consist in the extinction of evil; it simply consists in the separation of the evil from the good, and the gathering together of all the evil into one place, and there in that lonely and dreary place is to be raised the figure of immortality; and although death and the eternal hush of oblivion would be a thousand times preferable to life in that miserable abode, yet even death is denied. This programme for the future age is contradicted most clearly, in my estimation, by a class of passages like the following, which represent that age as one of triumph, and glory, and blessedness—"For behold, I create new heavens and a new earth; and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind. But be ye glad and rejoice forever in that which I create; for behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy. And I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people; and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying."—Isa. 65: 17–19. "And he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you; whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."

It appears to me that these passages, and many others of like import, cannot be harmonized with the idea that a vast majority of the human race are to be somewhere in this universe, confined in a place of unmitigated and indescribable torment. The joy spoken of as characterizing the dwellers in the new heavens and new earth is entirely out of harmony with the eternal torment dogma. If my readers ask why, and on what principle? the answer is at hand. Could a natural mother rejoice, and engage heartily in scenes of pleasure in one room, while some one was unmercifully tormenting her child in an adjoining room? The answer is so easy, that there is no need of a reply. Well, now could a Christian mother rejoice in heaven while seeing her children tormented with heated pangs of woe, that are simply indescribable? If she could, she would certainly be a hard-hearted wretch.

"The restitution of all things" also points to the same conclusion. To restore a thing is to bring it back to a former position. We have already glanced at the former condition of things, as related to evil; and that result of our research on this point reveals not that all evil was in one place by itself, in the former arrangement, but that the absence of evil was its true character. Well, now if things are to be restored to their former status in this particular, then that restitution is to result in the absence, or extinction of evil, and not simply in its separation from good. It requires considerable explanation to harmonize the following passage with the theory of endless torture:—"And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever." There are many similar declarations in the Scriptures. Indeed, the future age is represented in this light from Gen. to Rev. Joy and sorrow, the results of holiness and sin, are never spoken of as being associated, or parallel, after the final gathering of the tares, cleansing of the sanctuary, and restitution of all things. It is all joy! joy! joy! from that time onward forever.

LINES.

L. M. CHAFFEE.

"He hath said in his heart, God hath forgotten."—Ps. 10: 11.

Hath Jehovah forgotten his excellent word,
Spoken oft by the voice of the prophets of old,
That the days of the mourning of Zion should end,
And the earth with his glory should surely be filled?

When Jesus' disciples said, "Teach us to pray,"
Was the answer of Christ but in mockery given,
As he told them to pray for God's kingdom to come,
And his will to be done on the earth as in heaven?

And never again will he hear when they cry?
And the vine of his choice hath he come to forsake?
In the withering heat will he leave it to die?

Or shall he not do what he will with his own?
Shall the prince of this world overcome the Most High,
And possess his Anointed One's kingdom and throne?
Shall iniquity triumph and righteousness die?

Do the eyes of the Lord in these perilous days
No more to and fro through the wicked earth run,
To search out the righteous and perfect of heart,
To strengthen and guide them till victory's won?

Is the service of Christ but a profitless toil?
Are faith, hope and charity vain, after all?
Will the Lord of the harvest ne'er garner his wheat,
Nor the "sure word of prophecy" ever fulfill?

Is his gospel of grace but a tale of the past,
A thrilling old story of marvels of yore,
Of patience and sacrifice noble and kind—
A beautiful transcript of love—and no more?

Nay, verily, nay. In the fulness of time
The right shall assuredly rise o'er the wrong;
Yea, speedily God will avenge his elect,
And gather his chosen, a numberless throng.

From mountain and valley, from desert and sea,
From the south and the north, from the east and the west,
Out of every kindred, and people, and tongue—
No loved one forgotten, no wanderer lost.

Then, lover of Jesus and friend of the Lord,
Thank God and take courage; soon endeth the night.
In a "dear little while" all its darkness shall close
In the golden Jerusalem's beautiful light.

SUFFERING WITH CHRIST.

F. M. CHAMBERLAIN.

It may lighten the burden of some poor, tried, afflicted saint, to reflect that he is suffering with Jesus. Your case is in many points unlike his, yet if you belong to him you suffer with him.

The apostle speaks of his own sufferings as though he was helping to fill up the measure of suffering; himself (as it were) helping to bear the great burden laid upon Christ; and if this was true of Paul, why not of all who love and serve the same blessed Master? If there are exceptions, it is out of my line, and aside from my present purpose to point them out. But, exceptions aside, we may say to the tried and afflicted ones, rejoice that you are called to suffer with Christ. This is especially the case where the trials come directly from being engaged in the Master's work. But it also applies to the more common afflictions of his people. The whole body (the church), and each member, in some degree, and at some period of time, may be called to suffer with Christ; and do not forget that if you suffer with him, you shall also reign with him.

There are times when words seem in vain; times when the anguish is too great, and no sympathy can reach nor love assuage; but in the moments of partial relief let the tried one thank God and take courage. "In all their afflictions He was afflicted." Jesus knows it all, and will not long delay to come to your relief. He is soon coming to end your sufferings, and raise you to a partnership with him in joy and glory.

COWARDLY MINISTERS.

The preacher of the gospel is an embassador of God, and should be true to the divine government; true to conviction of righteousness, and true regarding his mission to a lost world. He has no compromise to make with sin, in any of its forms; he must not only endeavor to enforce the precepts of truth, but he should boldly expose deception and wickedness in all its disguises.

We hear but very little positive preaching. The strings of buttery words which flow from modern pulpits, are only rockers to the cradle of indulgence, and will lull to sleep the very imps of Satan. The pulpit is regarded by worldlings as the representative of the church; or the channel through which the waters of life flow out. Is it so? If so, there must be a muddy pond somewhere. We need never expect the world converted until we exhibit some contrast between the church and the world.

Ministers in these last days have been shorn of their strength. There are members in the church who are wealthy, and their fat purses are needed to sustain popular and imposing services; also there are streams flowing therefrom which make glad the city of the preacher's heart, hence it will not do to lay the line too close to him, even though he may be a little witchy in business matters. The man of business understands this, knows his identity with the church, is a good guise, and will bring him patronage; hence he puts a few dollars of hush-money into the preacher's hands, and sleeps quietly in his upholstered slip during the services.

Ministers need independence enough to stand clear from "rings," ecclesiastical and civil; and should never have their tongue and conscience monopolized by a dishonest parishoner's dollars. The cloven foot is hidden under the silk and broadcloth of church members; and if lambs cannot be distinguished from wolves in the church, then turn them both out, and see which runs for the woods of sin.

To reform men they must know their faults, and be measured by the rule of God. "Preach love," you say, and we will, when there is anything loveable in our hearers; but if not, [illegible] is corrupted and we may as well own it and strike at the poisoning, spiritual death-dealing core. Let the minister of Jesus Christ whet his sword, gird on the armor, and, like a true christian soldier, defend the cause, expose the deviltries and iniquities which are now cankering and eating the vitals of the church—Christian Herald.

S. WHITNEY.

I know of professors of religion, who no doubt mean to be honest and sincere, and are trying to live christian lives, who claim that they are under no obligation to forgive unless the so-called offending party first confesses his wrong and asks forgiveness. But does the word of God substantiate this idea? Can an offence go unforgiven without hardness against the offender? Will not the effect be visible in acts or conversation? Ask such a one how the matter stands with him and Bro. B. or Sr. A. O, says he, I have not a particle of hardness against Bro. B. But you know I have done a great deal for him, and all I get in return is such usage. And so the matter is talked over; his wrongs and grievances; for they are ever fresh in his memory; till the devil makes it appear so large that he cannot see over it; when in reality it is only a small matter—perhaps some little act or word not fitly spoken—which, if forgiven, would have saved all this trouble.

Is there any promise left on the sacred pages where those with hatred or hardness in the heart are to have eternal life or inherit the kingdom of God? Read John 2: 9—"He that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness, even until now." 1 John 4: 20—"If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar." Also John 3: 15—"Whosoever hateth his brother is a murderer; and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him."

How did Jesus teach his disciples to pray? Matt. 6: 12—"And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors." Now is there any one unforgiven? If so, we have no right to pray this prayer, and we may pray it till the judgment day without being forgiven by our heavenly Father; for he says—"If ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you; but if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses."

Peter asks the Lord, "How oft shall my brother sin against me and I forgive him? Till seven times? Jesus saith unto him, I say not unto thee, Until seven times, but, Until seventy times seven." This looks very much like all forgiveness. Perhaps it may be too much for some of us, but the Lord said it, and we will call it all right. The work before us, if we would have eternal life, is strictly a work of love; and our Savior, the great pattern while here in the flesh, in all his dealings with men, ever manifested this spirit of love and forgiveness; and after being wrongfully accused, spit upon, a crown of thorns placed upon his brow, mocked and scourged, led away by the rabble, nailed to the rugged cross, and while suspended between the heavens and the earth, suffering untold agonies, being mocked by cruel soldiers, he cries out—"Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." O that we were more like the Savior; that we had more of his spirit; then we should not be troubled with old grudges.

MECHANIC FALLS.

On the 26th of August, in a beautiful grove near Mechanic Falls, Me., a company of pilgrims gathered together to worship God; to receive instruction from the embassadors of Christ; to encourage and strengthen each other in the way of life, and to make some preparation for the coming of the Just One and the Marriage Supper of the Lamb. From east and west, north and south, they came to this feast of tabernacles; and before night there was a nice village in the grove, a good collection of the children of the King, and a dozen or more faithful heralds to "preach the word."

The meeting commenced well. The little army seemed to be in earnest to advance; and the hymn most sung was—

"Nearer, my God, to thee,
Nearer to thee."

Tuesday and Wednesday the battle went well. The number of officers and soldiers greatly increased, and by Thursday there was a large congregation with thirty preachers.

The preaching was excellent from the commencement to the close of the meeting. There were doctrinal sermons, practical sermons, and prophetical sermons. Two good discourses on holiness from Elds. J. Couch and Wm. L. Himes. What more could we ask? The names of the Brn. who preached are—S. K. Partridge, R. Hall, Wm. C. Stewart, Wm. H. Mitchell, A. Damon, L. Boutell, A. Ross, Wm. L. Himes, J. A. Libby, J. Couch, and H. L. Hastings.

Sunday afternoon Sr. S. K. Taylor preached in the Mission Tent. The weather was rainy and cold the last of the week, which made it rather unpleasant in some respects, and in consequence the meeting declined in interest a little; but the Lord did not forsake the camp, and it was still good to be there. Christians were encouraged and strengthened, and several started for the kingdom.

The children had very interesting meetings, conducted by Sr. Abby Wood. Some were converted.

The general expenses of the meeting were cheerfully met. The boarding tent, owing to the low price for board, was left a little in debt. On the whole, we think the meeting a success, and have reason to praise God for his mercy and rich blessings on our weak efforts to advance his cause.

"This is for your Health."—Paul.

WHAT BREAKS DOWN YOUNG MEN.—It is a commonly received notion that hard study is the unhealthy element of college life. But from tables of the mortality of Harvard University, collected by Professor Pierce from the last triennial catalogue it is clearly demonstrated that the excess of deaths for the first ten years after graduation is found in that portion of the class of inferior scholarship. Every one who has seen the curriculum knows that where Eschylus and political economy injure one, late hours and rum punches use up a dozen, and their two little fingers are heavier than the loins of Euclid. Dissipation is a sure destroyer, and every young man who follows it is as the early flower exposed to an untimely frost. Those who have been inveigled into the path of vice are named Legion. A few hours' sleep each night, high living and plenty of "smashes" make war upon every function of the body. The brains, the heart, the lungs, the liver, the spine, the limbs, the bones, the flesh, every part and faculty are overtasked and weakened by the terrific energy of passion loosened from restraint, until, like a dilapidated mansion, the "earthly house of this tabernacle" falls into ruinous decay. Fast young men, right about.—Scientific American.

HOW TO SLEEP.—We are often asked for a prescription for prematurely wakeful persons. The "high pressure" principle on which many of our business men work their brains and abuse their bodies, begets an irritable condition of the nerves, and a morbid state of mind, very antagonistic to quiet and refreshing sleep. Such persons will often go to bed weary and exhausted, but cannot sleep; or sleep dreamily and fitfully; or lie awake for hours, unable to sleep at all. We have tried many expedients to induce sleep with more or less success, and have read many recipes which proved better in theory than in practice. The very best method we have yet discovered is that of counting. Breathe deeply and slowly (without any straining effort) and, with every expiration, count, one, two, three, etc., up to a hundred. Some persons will be asleep before they can count fifty in this manner. Others will count ten, twenty, or thirty, and then forget themselves and cease counting. In such cases always commence again at one. Very few persons can count one hundred and find themselves awake; but should this happen repeat the dose until cured.—Science of Health.

SALT FOR THE THROAT.—An exchange says:—"In these days, when diseases of the throat prevail, and particularly a dry hacking cough, which is not only distressing to ourselves, but to those with whom we are brought in business contact, those thus afflicted may be benefitted by trying the following remedy: Last fall we were induced to try what virtue there was in comon salt. We commenced by using it three times a day, morning, noon and night; we dissolved a large tablespoonful of common salt in about half a tumbler of cold water, and with this we gargled the throat most effectually, just before meal time. The result has been that during the winter we were only free from the usual coughs and colds, to which, as far as our memory extends, we have always been subject; but the dry hacking cough has entirely disappeared; we attribute it entirely to the salt gargle, and most cordially recommend it to those of our readers who are subject to disease of the throat."

HOW GOD ANSWERS PRAYER.

A poor christian woman in Buckinghamshire—I believe near Barkhamstead—was bereaved of her husband after a long illness, and left unprovided for, the only thing of value being a large chest of tools. The husband had only just been buried, when a neighbor, bearing no good character, called on the widow, and presented a bill for work done, altogether beyond the widow's power to pay. The work, which had been done in the husband's life-time, was paid for by him, and the bill receipted, of which the widow had a distinct recollection. It availed not for her to assert the fact. The payment of the bill was pressed again, and longing eyes cast at the chest of tools.

In great distress, the widow retired up stairs to pray, for all effort to find the receipted bill was in vain. While engaged in prayer, a butterfly flew in at the open window down stairs. The widow's little child chased it until it flew behind the chest of tools. Just then the mother came in, and the child begged her to remove the box, that he might get the butterfly. The neighbor offered at once to do so; and while he was removing it from the wall, a piece of paper fell down behind, which the widow taking up, found to be the lost bill, receipted as she had said. She was overcome with praise and gratitude to God, who had answered her prayer by means of the butterfly; and even her enemy himself had discovered the missing bill.—The Christian.

A RACK O' BONES.

Little things tell a good deal sometimes to a sharp observer. Do you ever think of it, boys? You, who like to get a poor frightened cat into a corner, and stone her; who like to tie a tin pail to a dog's tail to see him run himself almost to death; you, who like to get a poor old "rack-o'-bones" of a horse and draw up the reins, and put on the whip, to see how fast you can make him go. Do you ever think you are showing your character in pretty black colors to whoever may chance to be watching? What is a "rack-o'-bones" but a once nice, plump, sleek horse, worn out with hard work, pain, too little food, abuse from unthinking boys and hard-hearted men? He has done his best for you. Is this a good reason why you should abuse him?

Suppose somebody should call your mother a "rack-o'-bones," because she is pale and thin, and sad-faced. She once had a sweet, rosy face, bright eyes, and has lost them in suffering, and working, and caring for you. She has spent the best of her strength, and the best of her life for you, and wouldn't you quickly resent it if any boy should speak slightingly of her?

Can you give me any better reasons why you should maltreat a poor, limpy, shaky, worn-out horse, whose every rib you can count, and that hangs his head almost to the ground because he is too weak and tired to hold it up? Do you feel manly after you have tormented him? Are you proud to tell of it?—Our Dumb Animals.

ALONE.—I want to ask the boys if they feel as strong to do right when they are all alone as they do when there is another boy with them, who wants to do right as well as themselves. There is a great deal of danger in bad company; and there is a good deal of strength and safety in good company; but, no matter how good our companions may be, it is not well to be too dependent on them. We ought to be able to stand alone; for we shall probably some time be left alone to resist temptation, without the encouragement or help of others.

— He is a fool who seeks what he cannot find; he is a fool who seeks that which, if found, would do him more harm than good; and he is a fool, who, having several ways to bring him to his journey's end, selects the worst one.

"TRUST AND REST."

Fret not, poor soul, while doubt and fear
Disturb thy breast;
The pitying angels who can see
How vain thy wild regret must be,
Say—"trust and rest."

Plan not, nor scheme, but calmly wait;
His choice is best.
While blind and erring is thy sight,
His wisdom sees and judges right;
So "trust and rest."

Strive not, nor struggle; thy poor might
Can never wrest
The meanest thing to serve thy will;
All power is His alone; be still,
And "trust and rest."

Desire not; self-love is strong
Within thy breast;
And yet He loves thee better still,
So let him do his loving will,
And "trust and rest."

What dost thou fear? His wisdom reigns
Supreme confessed;
His power is infinite; his love
Thy deepest, fondest dreams above—
So "trust and rest."

The day of the Lord "is a day of wrath, a day of trouble and distress, a day of wasteness and desolation, a day of darkness and gloominess." Zeph. 1: 15. But what is the voice of that day? I answer, it is the signs that foretell the event, and blessed are the people that recognize its voice, and take heed to it. When God was about to deliver his people from Egypt, his voice was heard in that land, but Pharaoh would not hear. He stood stiffly against his convictions of duty, passed on and was punished. But what was the voice of God to Pharaoh? It was the signs of those desolations that were to come on Egypt by special judgments. Moses was instructed to show to Pharaoh miraculous signs, and cause him to fear, so as to let the people go. God's voice was to be heard in those signs, as he declared to Moses (Ex. 4: 8)—"And it shall come to pass, if they will not believe thee, neither hearken to the voice of the first sign, that they will believe the voice of the latter sign."

Now if the day of the Lord is to be ushered in "after the manner of Egypt," as saith the prophet, then in the signs that precede it will be heard the voice of God, or the voice of the day of the Lord. Hence, says Christ—"Behold I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice [in these signs of my coming], and open the door [bid me welcome], I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." John says—"I am the voice of one crying"; and that other message through the midst of heaven, saying—"Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment has come," is the voice of God to this generation. Who understands it? The stork in the heavens knoweth her appointed times; and the turtle, the crane, and the swallow, know the time of their coming; but my people know not the judgment of the Lord.

Hosea says they are destroyed for lack of knowledge; and Christ says, because they knew not the time of their visitation. The sword hung over their doomed city, but they saw not in it the voice of Jehovah. The city was surrounded by armies, but the voice of Jesus was forgotten. The voice that cried day and night for years—"Woe! woe! woe! to Jerusalem," brought forth but madness and revenge. The heifer that was being led to the altar and brought forth a lamb, was no voice to them; like Pharaoh, they hardened their hearts, they would none of his reproofs, and vengeance came upon them to the uttermost. Says the Savior—"O that thou hadst known, even now, in this thy day, the things that belong to thy peace; but now they are hid from thine eyes." "O that they were wise, that they understood these things, that they would consider their latter end." Deut. 32: 29. Many people would hearken, if they knew it was the voice of the Lord; so would the Jews. They knew not the voice in the wilderness, and so rejected rather than helped prepare the way of the Lord.

Ps. 18: 13—"The Lord also thundered in the heavens, and the Highest gave his voice; hailstones and coals of fire." How fearfully God has spoken to this generation with hail and fire. But he will soon speak more distinctly, and the nations, like Pharaoh, will be angry. Says David, "The heathen raged, the kingdoms were moved; he uttered his voice, the earth melted." Ps. 46: 6. In Ps. 93: 3, it is said, "The floods lift up their voice"; but who has heard the voice of God in the sea and waves roaring? Who has heard the voice of God in the preparations for "war"? Who has heard the voice of God in the rotting of the seed under the clod? Who has heard the voice of God in the darkening of the sun, and falling of stars? Who has read of the "signs in the sun," called magnetic storms, that are so electrifying our atmosphere as to cause man, beast, and even vegetation, to fall before it; reaching out its fiery breath, and threatening to burn the world with its inhabitants at once? and who believes that, in these dire calamities, we have the voice of the day of the Lord?

"Behold, I stand at the door, and knock; if any man hear my voice." My brethren, do we hear understandingly? But what if we do not recognize his voice in these things, what then? Then the supper will be for others. Wesley says: "Its cities fall but lift us up to meet him in the air." How terrible the burning of Portland, Chicago, and Boston; yet it is but the voice of that day that shall burn as an oven. My brethren, let us gird up the loins of our mind, and hope unto the end for the grace that shall be brought unto us at the revelation of Christ. Every moment is fraught with intense interest. Every hour should be employed in heralding the warning; and seeing we "look for such things," what manner of persons ought we to be "in all holy conversation and godliness?" If we spend our time in trying to save others, we shall have but little time to think of ourselves. We must be sanctified to enter upon his work. We shall be godly if we love to do his will; and blessed if we watch unto the end. For "blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments."

My brethren, the voice of God has called us to this waiting position, as it called John to cry from the wilderness; and if we "watch the way," and herald the signs, or voice of that day, we shall be giving meat in due season, and Jesus says, "Blessed is that servant." May that blessing be yours and mine.

THE RESURRECTION.

One of the most precious concessions which Christ's religion makes to human love is embodied in this article of a Christian's belief. We love our friend in a body. How dear that form! Those eyes, those lips, that hair, over which the grave has closed—how sacred? How vain to say to us, "Your beloved is a spirit—a bright essence gone to mingle with the great sea of spirit life!" Alas! how cold and vague to the mourning heart is all this. I want to see him again; I want again the eye, the smile, the voice, the self—warm, winning, living. A pure spirit, abstract, distant, will never content me; it will not be my friend." But Christ promises us in that immortal life not alone the soul and spirit, but the body of our friend. He consecrates our earthly love by promising to restore it to us by-and-by, glowing with freshness and stamped with the seal of immortality.

To the old Christian church of the first ages how dear was this belief! When they saw the bodily form racked, torn, mutilated, trampled by beasts, burned to ashes and scattered to the winds, still they said in triumph, "We believe in the resurrection of the body; we shall have them again and hold them to our hearts, our own, our beloved ones. We shall see those same eyes shining into ours; there shall be the old, familiar voice, the well-known smile. It shall be our own and no other—restored to us, far beyond death, immortal in God's kingdom."

Even in St. Paul's time, there were doubters and philosophers who said: "How can this be? How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?" and St. Paul answers: "That which thou sowest is not quickened except it die, and thou sowest not the body that shall be, but bare grain." That is, this body you bury is a seed, which goes back to earth, but there is a vital power in it out of which God shall raise the new body, fresh and immortal, and "God shall give to every seed his own body."

The lily that you lay in the dark earth to-day, in its pure beauty, shall decay and pass away, but another lily shall spring from it that shall never fade. In the resurrection the oak shall arise an oak, and the lily a lily, and the violet a violet, "to every seed his own body."

This preservation of human identity, even to the restoration of that bodily form, is a proof of the intense value set upon love by a God of love. It is as if he said to us: "I must make you pass through a terrible experience, a dreary, inexpressible sorrow; but trust me, it shall only be for a moment. This apparent death of your dear ones is not real death. I will give them back to you better, brighter, more perfect than before, and in a world where there is no shadow of death to be feared. You shall have them, hold them, clasp them to your heart, a thousand times dearer for the great experience through which you have passed."

Many confuse themselves in thinking how and with what body this will be. Will our friend who died with silver hair come forth thus? Will he be as we knew him in youth? Will our little one have the fair curls and starry eyes of infancy? Here, as St. Paul says, there is a mystery. All we know is, there is a mysterious something called personal identity that remains about our friend through all the changes of life. The old wife fondly holds her husband's hand and remembers when this white hair was black as the raven's wing, when his step was firm and his voice was ringing; and he remembers when her hair was golden and her cheeks like roses; and yet both of them feel that this is the same. They knew each other in youth, they know each other now, and yet nothing could be more utterly different than their bodily appearance in youth and now. So, when they meet each other in the immortal home, in the new body made like unto Christ's glorious body, there will still be that inexpressible something that constitutes personal identity; they will know each other for the same. The mother sits to-day with fond content and holds the hand of her son, full of the life and vigor of manhood, and she doubts not that this is actually the same who once in snowy cap and long robe lay helpless in her arms. She has seen the infant, the rollicking, curly-headed child, the school-boy, and now the full-grown man, and yet identity has remained unbroken through all these changes. Her son never has seemed unfamiliar or strange. So, in our immortal reunion in the world beyond death, we may believe that with the great and beautiful changes which will pass upon us will yet remain that beautiful familiarity, that sweet consciousness of identity.

This doctrine of the resurrection of the body has, in some degree, faded from the consciousness of the Christian church. St. Paul always spoke of that as the consummation of bliss, the grand, central point of the believer's hope. "I press forward," he says, "if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead!" and he announces that the final triumph will be when this is accomplished. "When this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death! where is thy sting? O grave! where is thy victory?"

What a gift to this life is such a promise! How often we say, "If I only could be young again! if I only could live life over!" Well, you shall be young again, and you shall live life over. Your physical life—all that is worth keeping—shall be restored to you in a purer and brighter form, fitted for immortal wear and progress. Your friends shall be restored, familiar, dear, free from earthly defect, but with all the sweet memories and innocent identities of earth. "Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost," the Master said, even over a basket of bread. It is said by philosophers that no particle of matter is ever lost, but all goes into new forms in the eternal economy. Much more shall no throb of love, no tenderness of the heart, no yearning of human affection, be cast by as worthless. All shall be had in memory, and all shall be restored fresh and bright. And this is what we Christians mean when we say, "I believe in the resurrection of the body and the life everlasting."—Mrs. H. B. Stowe, in Christian Union.

PAUL'S BOASTING.

FRANK BURR.

The apostle Paul was evidently a man of very plain speech, and very truthful, telling things just as they were, whether concerning himself or of others. The words he wrote, or uttered, were so simple, and free from ambiguity, that none could mistake their meaning, when he spoke of things pertaining to character or manner of living. And yet, in all his writings, I do not see the passage wherein he admits that he made a mistake, or an error, or committed sin after his being cleansed by the Holy Spirit. He does not claim infallibility by any means, but he does claim sinlessness as far as his motives and actions are concerned. He admits his own liability to fall away, but still claims to have been kept from wrong doing and wrong feelings in such a way that I very much fear, if he were to appear now and talk as he wrote, many opposers to perfect holiness in this life would cry out, "Spiritual aristocracy!" "Phariseeism!" and the like.

He spoke of his apostleship and calling in no light manner. He says he was not a whit behind the very chiefest apostles. He spoke of his ministry, as having kept back nothing that was profitable to the people. He had lived among them without charge, earning his own livelihood while they were weak. He had passed through extraordinary perils in consequence of his ministry. He speaks of filling up the sufferings of Christ by his own experience. He often speaks of himself and exhorts the brethren to follow him, and walk as they had him for an example.

And then, above all, he speaks of his own christian course in no doubtful language. As he looks back over his life in Christ, and sees his experience in the work of serving the Lord, he says—"I have fought a good fight; I have finished my course; I have kept the faith." He does not bring in a single regret for any action since he was converted to God. He does not say that he was so imperfect that he had made many errors and mistakes, but that God had forgiven him, and so he had hope of salvation yet. He does not say he had served God in "his own weak way," and "made many crooked paths." But he speaks boldly for a perfect experience.

What boasting! What presumption! What Pharisaical hypocrisy! But hold a moment. Let us inquire how he was enabled to say this. Does he claim a merit of self-righteousness in this? Does he not say that he was enabled to do all things through Christ, who strengthened him? Does he not say that his sufficiency was of God? In fact, he claims to have been crucified with Christ, and thus his emotions, which were after the flesh, were dead. And he adds, "Christ liveth in me; and the life I now live, I live by faith on the Son of God." So, then, it was only the power of Christ, the life of Christ, that was exhibited by him to the world. It was not Saul in the flesh that was endeavoring to be a christian, and who boasted of success, but Paul in the spirit, whom Christ had quickened and animated to life. "Henceforth, know we no man after the flesh." 2 Cor. 5: 16.

No wonder Paul made no crooked paths. Can Christ make crooked paths? Can Christ sin? Paul's glorying and boasting was not in himself, but in Christ. He ran a race, but it was Christ who moved him onward. He fought battles, but it was Christ who conquered and gave him the victory. So did Gideon overcome the Midianites. He kept his body under, but all the part he had in it was to have faith and rest in Christ, whose Spirit wrought the work. He did not say he had to struggle and fight to keep the body under, but he simply trusted in Christ, and so the body was kept under.

It may be said that "Paul could live thus, but we cannot. Paul was an apostle, and so God gave him an extra power." But Paul was a man, as weak as any man now living. And without Christ he was as unable to accomplish any good work. In his flesh "dwelt no good thing." It was Christ who saved him. And shall we say that Christ will not or cannot do the same now, that he did then? Paul was unable to live sinless, but when Christ lived in him, then he was kept free from sin. And Christ is able and willing to do the same now for all who will trust in him.

It is no improper boasting, for one who is dead to the world and alive to God, to say that he is kept by the power of God free from all sin. There is no "spiritual aristocracy" or "Pharisaical boasting" about it. It is all the power of Jesus. We need make no crooked paths. It is the depth of humility to admit that Christ is alone our ruler in the flesh. But is Christ the minister of sin?

O for more of the consecrating faith of Paul among the people of God in our own day! Then there will be less cry of "Phariseeism," when people confess to being made holy through the power of Christ. "My soul shall make her boast in the Lord; the humble shall hear thereof and be glad."

POLICY.

A. N. SEYMOUR.

In this fallen, sinful, and imperfect world, we find all manner of policy. There is a vast amount of political policy, medical policy, editorial policy, insurance policy, masonic, odd fellow, and know-nothing policy, and sectarian or associated policy. In all these diverse kinds of policies there is incessant conflict and war of opinion, each doing as much damage to the other as the capacity of their intellect and energy will allow. Emphatically, then, there is a vast ocean of confusion in such policy, rolling, agitating, and changing its programme continually; and why? because it is the wisdom or policy of this world, unsanctified and foolishness with God. Although there may be some elements of heavenly wisdom in such policy, yet they are so overwhelmed with human policy, they labor, if at all, greatly to their disadvantage, and consequently their true power is scarcely ever to be seen or felt.

It requires a first class detective genius, keen eyes, and an uncompromising energy to search out the treasures hid away amidst policies so diametrically opposed to each other. Jewels, gold and silver, are exceedingly hard to be found. Excessive hard work has to be done, and dangers encountered, in order to secure these treasures.

But there is, thank God, superlatively speaking, a heavenly policy, divine in its nature, revealed in the holy oracles of God, easy of access, which, if all would adopt, would always produce long life, constant happiness, joys indescribable, union perfect, peace like a river; satisfaction sweet, love unfeigned; faith without wavering, a zeal according to knowledge, and a hope always inspiring, full of consolation, and in no way medicated by the policy of aspiring men. Let us all be sure and go to the fountain head, for that never has but one policy. Christ Jesus is now that fountain. "For in him dwelleth all the fullness of the godhead bodily"; "for it pleased the Father that in him shall all fullness dwell." "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

This kind of policy presents to all men only one supreme being ("God our Father"); one Jesus Christ (the Son of the Father), our "Lord," "Savior," "King"; one "Holy Spirit," "one faith," "one hope," and "one baptism." This policy draws out from all men "one body," and only one, and that is "the body of Christ," over which this God-ordained policy is to preside. The members of this body are taught "to be perfectly united," "to be one as the Father and Son are one," "to love one another with pure hearts fervently," "to bear one another's burdens," to watch over, pray with and exhort each other, with all the tenderness and fondness of parental affection. As antipode to this, there is no sectarianism, no division, no schism, no bitterness, no backbiting, no sin or wrong of any kind allowed in this body. Let this policy prevail over all, is my most fervent prayer.

PRAISE TO GOD.

L. W. A. JOHNSON.

"I will bless the Lord at all times; his praise shall continually be in my mouth."—Psa. 34: 1.

We, as christian followers of our blessed Master, should always be found praising and giving thanks to him for his goodness to us, for we cannot thank him too much for what he has done. We look back and read how he healed the sick, caused the lame to walk, opened the eyes of the blind, and did other miracles. Then we see him betrayed, after doing all the good he could, and at last died upon the cross for us, that we might be saved, and have everlasting life.

They who trust in the Lord are blessed, for without his help we are nothing. We cannot accomplish any thing ourselves if we do not trust in the Lord. By trusting and asking our heavenly Father to help us in all things, and believing in him, we shall truly find that which we ask for. We should not be ashamed to own our blessed Master's name, or his cause. We should stand boldly up, and go forth proclaiming the name of our blessed Savior and Redeemer, for he says—"Ye are the light of the world; a city that is set on a hill cannot be hid." So it is with the christian soldiers; they stand forth before the eyes of the world and its people, heralding the tidings of their blessed Jesus. The Lord has said—"Be ye strong, therefore, and let not your hands be weak, for your work shall be rewarded." We then know that we do not work in vain. We know that we have the promise of everlasting life, joy, peace and happiness with our blessed Jesus. What more could we wish? Is that not worth working for? Then let us be strong in the faith; let us work more assiduously for our Master, and remain on board the good old ship Zion: There has not been one known to be lost who remained on board this ship.

"Fight on, ye old soldiers, you'll soon be discharged,
The war will be over, your treasure enlarged;
With singing and shouting, though Jordan may roar,
We'll enter fair Canaan, and stand on the shore."

THE WAY.

C. E. DARROW.

"I am the way, the truth and the life."

There is an axiom in geometry which reads—"a straight line is the shortest distance between two points." Can we conceive of any thing better than this, when we speak about the way of Christ? He is the straight way, and the shortest distance the sinner can possibly find from earth to Eden. There is no circuitous route about this way. No, sinner, you are never obliged to turn "short corners," nor travel "on the square," for the way is direct. It is not "viz.," or "by the way of," but it is "in Christ" directly, at every point.

At the present day every christian denomination seems to have a different way; a way of its own, and their ways are almost as innumerable and diverging as the rays of the sun, while Christ says—"I am the way," and this is the only christian pathway. A person sets out upon a journey. He travels leisurely along for a while, but soon he comes to a place where two ways meet. It is sometimes called a "fork in the road," "a junction." Here he is at a loss to know which road to take. He stops to inquire the way; and the information comes, "take the main-traveled road." Now it is a little different with the christian or the convert when he first begins to inquire the way. It is not the "main-traveled road" that he should take. Ah no! But here he is at the "junction," and the ways are new to him, and he must necessarily inquire a little. The way leading to the left is a very beautiful and inviting thoroughfare. It is an avenue of wealth. It seems to have every trace of beauty the eye can conceive. It is adorned with beautiful shade trees, and embellished on every side with evergreens and the perfumes of a thousand fragrant vines. Its streets are thronged with hurrying travelers, and the air is filled with the dust of their commotion. But O, my young convert, that is the "broad way;" beware! Here comes a professed christian; now I will inquire the way, he says. But the christian moves along with the throng and takes "the left hand road," and the convert sings out—"Brother! say, can you tell me which is the 'right way'?" "O yes, this is the way, do not you see, they are all traveling this way?" "But I was surveying this 'narrow way'." "O come along, sir; that is only a 'foot path,' an 'Indian trail,' it is 'grown up to underbrush'; that never was intended for us to walk in." But the careful and prayerful convert says—"Let me see, let me survey the premises a little closer." And here he takes his Bible and reads the history of the two ways—"Broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat," but "strait is the gate, and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." Now he turns again with hope more buoyant, and eye sight keener than ever, and surely here, here in this hidden path he finds the footprints of Jesus; for, though more than eighteen hundred years ago Jesus passed over this way, yet his footsteps are still "shining in the sand." Then he is satisfied, and jogs along singing to himself—"Happy is the man who hath chosen wisdom's ways." Yes, dear sinners, Jesus is the way, and he says to every one "follow me." He is the "pillar of the cloud by day," and the "pillar of fire" by night to lead us safely into "the promised land."

Once I met a friend who said—"I was converted so early in life, that I cannot remember when I was not a christian. I have a few faults, but I am inclined to be a good sort of a man. I attend religious services twice every Sabbath, go to prayer-meeting occasionally; I read a portion of the Bible every morning, and have family prayers. I think I do everything to make me a true christian. Yes, and I thought he ought to have said too—"Lord, I thank thee that I am not as other men are, unjust, extortioners," etc., then it would have been complete. Here is one, then, who is trying to "climb up some other way." He is going to be saved by his works. But Christ says—"He that climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber." "I am the way."

AND THE TRUTH.

I sometimes think there is a great deal to be learned from this little combination of five letters—truth. Solomon said—"Buy the truth and sell it not." Then, that we might know the truth, and that the truth might make us free indeed, Christ came down from heaven. He was born in Bethlehem's manger, and for thirty-three long years dwelt among us, that truth might be established in the earth, and sinners be converted. There are many other titles given to him, but none seem to strengthen our faith like this. Christ never exaggerated. The truth was ever present with him, and whosoever will, may ask, what is truth? and the answer ever comes—"The word of the Lord is truth." But it is hard sometimes for men to tell the truth. It is not so precious with them. There is a rumor afloat. Somebody has thrown out a little "ball of street yarn," and another one with eager hand catches it, and flies to his neighbor, to tell it; but he is, as John Bunyan says, so "exceedingly tumbled up and down in his mind," that he enlarges it a little. He adds another yard to its length, and then another takes it and so on, until by-and-by the little ball becomes a huge massive globe of falsehood. There is no truth in it. You have heard the old story about "three black crows." Somebody had taken an emetic, and threw up "three black crows," said "Madam Rumor;" but when the truth was known, he had only thrown up something that was as black as a crow. And so it is with us, when truth is sought after, there is ever a "lie in our mouth;" but with Christ it is not so, for he is the truth. The good minister once said, in repeating his text—"All lawyers shall have their part in the lake of fire and brimstone," and when the mistake was alluded to, he said it was so trifling, that it was not worth while to correct it, 'twas only a "lapsus linguae." But Christ, who is the truth, never made any "slip of the tongue." He hath said—"I am the way, and the truth and the life." Truth ever comes from his lips as sweetly as though all the bees of honesty had brought their honey there, and made his mouth their hive. O that Jesus would inspire all our thoughts, with his divine truth, and guide all of us in the way and the truth, for he only is the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

AND THE LIFE.

Then Jesus is not only the way and the truth to the poor lost sinner, but he is the life also. Should I put this question to some, Who is your life? They would say "Baron Swedenborg is our Emanuel;" and to others, they would reply, Mohammed is our Messiah; and still again I might put this question to more than one third of the human race, and the reply would be, Boodh is our Savior. But now let me put the question to Christians, and the sweet reply will quickly bound from their lips, "Christ is our life." Ah, yes, indeed, "Christ is our life," and we know that it "is hid with him in God." He has a better life in store for us than this which we enjoy; for "if in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." Then, O sinner, "lift up thy hands for life," for Christ is indeed your life. He is "the life of the world." O how much there is in that little word life to thrill and make grateful every heart. Have we a just sense of its import? Our father Adam sold our birthright, and thus forfeited the life of all his children. We have been driven from Eden and paradise; the home of our race is barred against us. "The tree of life" no longer affords us ample fruit. We have been thrust away from it, and a flaming, fiery sword is turning and cutting in every direction to protect it. The lamentation comes up from every hill-top—We are lost! we are lost! But ah! poor sinners, surely we are more than lost, for if this were all, possibly in our wanderings we might arrive at our home again. We are dead. There is no life left in us. Yea, and more than this, these dead limbs are withered. These dry bones are decayed. These hearts throb no more. These "thoughts perish"; and oh! sadder still, there is no germ in us to sprout again. All is gone! "Thou shalt surely die."

O perishing sinners, what shall we do? Let us lie down upon the grass, and stretch ourselves at full length, and observe the prints of our bodies when we arise again, and then we shall see just how much of this world is ours at last, for God hath spoken in our ears, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Here, then, say you, is our sad end. But, no, it is not so; "the righteous hath hope in his death." It is here that Christ presents us that "life beyond death," that sweet and immortal life. It is here also that he gives life to the world. It is here we hear John the Baptist declaring—"Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world"; and it is here we hear Jesus saying—"I am the resurrection and the life." Then let us be his, and he shall be our life, and we shall be happy in him.

THE BATTLE OF THE GREAT DAY.

J. E. CLARK.

Under the seventh trumpet, "the nations were angry." This is the first intimation of the battle, and great voices were heard in heaven—"Saying, the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever." At that time he takes to himself his great power and reigns, in consequence of which, the nations become enraged. The next presentation is in chapter 16: 13–16, describing the work of the unclean spirits, which go forth to gather the kings of the earth, and the whole world to the battle of that great day of God Almighty. Europe and Western Asia have been the places where the blood of Jews and christians has been shed. Europe especially has been the papal slaughter-house, and Europe, we conclude, will be the head centre of slaughter and judgments as brought to view in Revelation. But in order, before we come to this battle, as presented in chapters 11th, and 16th, we are interrupted by a view of the judgment of the great whore, seated upon the scarlet-colored beast. Rev. 17. In this chapter, we are presented with some of the elements that go to make up the army of anti-Christ, which are said to make war with the Lamb, etc., and in Rev. 18th, we have presented in a separate scene the fall of Babylon. Passing all this, we come to an open view of the gathering and battle field with its result.

The scene opens at chapter 19: 11, and continues to chapter 20th. The whole is a symbolical representation. Let none forget this fact. From verse 11th to 15th, is a representation of the word of God, or Christ. It may be supposed with good evidence, that the armies opposed to Christ do not actually see him, or know that they are really fighting against him; for it is expressly said, "Behold I come as a thief." Come to what? To the battle of that great day, for the connection is a description of the working of the unclean spirits, preparing the kings of the earth, and the whole world, for this conflict. At this point, the language, "behold I come as a thief," is accompanied by a caution to the saints, not to be drawn into the corrupting influences which will be everywhere in operation to turn off men's minds from a constant preparation for the final result. They are to keep their garments, and to remain unspotted from the corruptions of the last times, and from the war spirit which will spread everywhere; for each party will give, as they suppose, a good reason for engaging in the final struggle. The great mass of mankind will little think this mighty conflict is the battle of that great day of God Almighty. It will be a war, not only of principles, but of physical force, and before it terminates the whole world will be engaged in it, for the unclean spirits go forth not only to the kings of the earth, but to the whole world to gather them to this the battle of that great day. It is Satan's last effort, and he will marshal all his forces, and "the whole world" will be engaged; but the result is given—Christ and his chosen ones will come off victorious. The scenery of calling the fowls of heaven to "the supper of the great God," indicates the greatness of the slaughter of this period. Then the fact is stated of the gathering of the kings of the earth, and their armies, to make war against Christ and his army. Next, the "beast was taken," by which I understand the scarlet-colored beast, and with him is taken the false prophet. A false prophet is one who speaks in the name of the Lord, when God has not sent him (see Deut. 18 and Acts 13); withstands the truth, seeks to turn men from the truth, full of all mischief, an enemy of all righteousness, a perverter of the right ways of the Lord; consequently a child of the devil. This power corresponds well with the "two-horned beast" (Rev. 13), identically the same power under two aspects; a mild, Christ-like power by profession, but speaking with its mouth like a dragon. This dragon-lamb power exercised "all the power of the beast before him," and has had all the characteristics of the false prophet described above. This false prophet is taken with the beast in the battle of that great day. There both are destroyed together, by being "cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone," corresponding with eating her flesh, and burning her with fire (chap. 17), which denotes their utter and irrevocable destruction, so that they shall never recover. It is a final overthrow of that anti-Christian power, with all its abominable delusions and superstitions; and then it follows that "the remnant," viz., the kings of the earth, etc., were slain with the sword. Thus there will be an utter end made of all the powers that are opposed to Christ; and last of all, the dragon, one of the principal actors in this scene, all of which go to make up the opposing power against Christ.

The dragon, called Satan, devil, etc., was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night forever and ever. Thus we have a complete disposition made of all the opposing powers to Christ: the beast, false prophet, and the dragon. We conclude the word dragon is a symbol of the dark, malignant spirit of evil, in those human influences which he inspires or employs. Also the serpent, may be regarded as a personification of all evil, representing great destructive agents, in this world, opposed to Christ and his church; all of which mighty and desolating powers will be destroyed during the last battle of that great day of God Almighty—"And shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth." Rev. 11.

Next we have presented is the new heavens and a new earth—"For the first heaven and the first earth were passed away," and "the holy city, new Jerusalem" is seen "coming down from God, out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people." Rev. 21: 1–3. We are nearing the close of Gentile rule, and the time is at hand when the fifth universal kingdom of God is about to be established on earth; when "God shall wipe away all tears, ... and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away." Amen.

LITTLE THINGS.

He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful in much. It is a small thing to give a cup of cold water in the name of Christ. But whosoever is faithful in things so small, will be the first to meet the demands of duty when the trial is great. The man who is first to speak a kind word to a friendless child, or to carry a look of sunshine into an afflicted and desolate home, will be first to make the great sacrifice of duty when the Master calls. The King in the final day will say, "Come ye blessed of my Father," to those who have done only the least and most common acts of kindness, to those who have done only what anybody can do any day of life.

Depend upon it, it is minute and conscientious attention to what the world calls little things that makes the great beauty and success of life. Little deeds of charity, little words of kindness, little acts of self-denial, little moments of diligence; a careful watch against little sins, a grateful use of little blessings, a wise improvement of little opportunities, a diligent cultivation of little talents, patient continuance in well-doing under little encouragement. These things make men great in the sight of God; if these things be in you and abound, they will bring the knowledge and enjoyment of everything else.

To be willing to give thousands to the cause of Christ, you must be willing to give such as you have, be it ever so little. If you would compass the earth upon missions of charity and instruction, you must begin at your own door; you must show the spirit of Christ to those of your own household.—Zion's Chris.

COATICOOK.

We closed our meetings at Coaticook, Monday evening, Nov. 18th. The interest continued to increase to the last, when the prospect for a good revival was better than at any other time. Some decided to be christians, and were blest. Professors of religion, in different denominations, were much quickened, and several made a full consecration to Christ, and received very rich blessings. They felt as great a change as when first converted. They were not aware before of the "great peace" it was their privilege to enjoy. They found the Lord ready to bless when they were willing to obey him in all things.

Some took great pains to be at the meetings, walking seven and eight miles, because of the sickness of their horses. The horse disease has been quite general in Canada. It appears to be abating at present. The horses that are worked much when sick do not recover as readily as those which are allowed to rest. There is still a deep mystery hanging over this strange disease, that has swept through the country with most wonderful rapidity, and is now spreading in Europe. No one knows the real cause, neither can any one tell why it has fallen so heavily upon those faithful creatures, unless it be to teach man his dependence upon these noble animals, and lead him to treat them more kindly. If these two lessons can be learned, though dearly, they will be invaluable, and afford good reasons for the calamity that has been so severely felt by man and beast.

Sabbath day, Nov. 17th, was one of special interest. The Spirit of the Lord rested upon us, and quite a number requested prayers, that they might be pardoned, and live holy lives. We had an interesting love-feast at 10 A. M. In the evening some thirty or forty gathered around the table to partake of the Lord's Supper. It was a season of heavenly communion with Christ and his saints. We left Coaticook much encouraged. Three weekly prayer meetings were appointed, from which it is hoped much good will result. The Methodist minister has invited us to discuss the immortality of the soul, which we may do, if we can find time and opportunity. He treated us with kindness, and honestly thinks we are in error on the nature of man. We have agreed to discuss the following:

"RESOLVED, That man is entirely mortal."

We are to debate the subject four evenings, two hours each evening, and twenty minute speeches. The time is not yet definitely fixed. It will probably be some time in December. We expect a pleasant time in the investigation of the subject. Many are anxious to hear, and we hope for good results.

We found some noble-hearted christians in Coaticook, and the surrounding country, who were ready to assist in every good work. They think some of putting up a chapel this winter. They are obliged to do this or hire a a hall, because they were refused the use of either church; one of them is without a minister, and is closed for the winter. It seemed a pity to have the house unoccupied, when its use was so much needed to accommodate those who wished to attend the meetings. It is hoped that those opposed may yet see it best to change their minds, and open their house for the worship of God.

MARK OF THE BEAST.

It is frequently asked, What is the mark of the beast? and when was it received? Some think that all who enter into political matters thus receive the mark. We do not see it so. There is no intimation that any one received the mark of the beast under the dragon, or the leopard beast; but it was under the two-horned beast. When the mark of the beast becomes a test of Christianity, it will be something more than merely voting at a town meeting for the officers of the state or nation, which may now be done without indorsing any anti-christian sentiments; but when required to take the mark of the beast, whoever does it must turn against Christ.

The mark of the beast must be something by which it is known to the world that those who have the mark are true and loyal to the then existing government, which will be infidel in its sentiments, and decidedly opposed to the doctrine of the Bible. Those who do not accept the "mark" or the "number" required by that government, can neither buy nor sell lawfully, because they refuse to comply with the laws then in force; but whoever does yield to accept the "mark" or "number," must deny Jesus as a Savior, and the Bible as a divine revelation.

INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION.—Next year it is proposed to have an immense "International Exposition" of art and industry at Vienna, the capital of Austria. In the announcement we find the following:—

"No expense or effort is being spared to make it the largest, most comprehensive and most magnificent ever held. The Park in which the buildings are being erected has an area of over nine hundred acres. The main building, known as the "Palace of Industry," is to be about three thousand feet in length, by eighty-two feet in width. This is crossed by thirty-two transepts, each three hundred and forty-seven feet long by fifty feet wide. The grand central dome, embracing an area more than double that of St. Peter's at Rome, rests upon pillars eighty feet high, has a span of three hundred and fifty-four feet, and rises in a clear unbroken arch two hundred and fifty feet from the floor. The department devoted to the United States, in the extreme western transept, is most favorably situated, being the one nearest the city, and therefore directly in the path of the vast throng who may visit the building upon foot or by the street cars.

The machinery hall is to be a separate building, two thousand and six hundred feet long by one hundred and fifty feet wide, standing parallel with the Industrial Palace, but about four hundred feet distant. Our space in this building is also at the western end.

The hall for the reception of agricultural machinery, the size of which has not yet been communicated to this commission, is to be erected in another part of the grounds.

A large amount of space in the open air has also been reserved for our use, on which it is expected we shall erect such buildings as may be appropriate and necessary. The entire buildings and grounds will include an extent nearly six times larger than that occupied by the Exhibition at Paris in 1867."

LOWELL ST. CHAPEL.—Since the great fire in Boston, those who were burnt out have been offering enormous rents for halls, private houses, or any any other places that could be used for business purposes. Among these, Lowell St. Chapel has been sought, and the church worshiping there have been obliged to give it up, and seek some other location. Sabbath, Nov. 24th, we held our last meeting, and the presence of the Most High was with us, affording a precious feast of heavenly manna. We were saddened at the thought of leaving the place where so many have been led to Christ; but felt like bowing in quiet submission, looking to the Lord for his guiding hand in all things. We have not yet been able to secure any other place. Several who took part in the love-feast, are enjoying "the gift of the Spirit," and others are seeking the fulness there is in Christ. In the evening, we had the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper. We shall treasure up a joyful remembrance of the sweet blessings received during our last meeting in Lowell St. Chapel. Though our place of worship is taken from us, we feel a clearer union with Christ, and firmer purpose to be ever true to him.

MORTAL QUICKENING.

I would like an exposition of Rom. 8: 11. What will raise those that have not the Spirit of Christ in them? Please answer through the Crisis and oblige some that are inquiring for truth. O. B.

We do not think the quickening of the "mortal bodies" refers to the resurrection from the dead, but to a quickening in this life, by the same Holy Spirit that raised Jesus from the dead. The subject of the chapter is about the work of the Spirit upon us in this present state of existence, as contrasted with the fleshly nature, or matured condition of men, when destitute of the Spirit

Dean Alvord remarks, it is a "quickening" of the mortal body "from being a tool of unrighteousness." By quickening the mortal body, Mr. Locke understands "deliverance from the reign of sin in the body by the Spirit of God, which is given to believers, and dwells in them as a new quickening principle and power." This view appears to be in harmony with the subject of the chapter.

"ETERNAL LIFE."

BRO. GRANT:—Will you please explain John 17: 3? which reads—"And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." Does it not teach a kind of life? and if Adam knew God when he walked with him, did he not possess this same eternal life, and does not the child of God possess the same life now in a measure? SARAH B. PETERSON.

The plain meaning of John 17: 3 appears to be, that no one can get eternal life outside of Christ. All the saved must receive their eternal life from him. No one has eternal life in this present world. If Adam had possessed eternal life he could not have died. This short life is just as much life, as long as it continues, as any equal length of time in the world to come; but it is not "eternal life," because it comes to an end. If Adam was made so that of necessity he would live eternally, then it would be correct to say that he had eternal life. He was on probation, on trial, for the purpose of securing eternal life by obedience to his Creator; but he disobeyed and died.

WHO ARE THE GUESTS?

BRO. GRANT:—Please explain Rev. 19: 9—"Blessed are they which are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb." Who are the guests at the marriage? S. B. PETERSON.

We think it evident that the angels are the guests. In Rev. 7: 9–11, John saw the whole company of the redeemed standing "before the throne"; and then he saw "all the angels" standing "round about"; that is, they were encircling the redeemed hosts as guests, or spectators. The bride, the Lamb's "wife," is composed of all the saints that have ever lived. When "the marriage of the Lamb" takes place, every person saved from among men must be present.

"THE HELPER'S FRIEND."—This is the new name of "Woman and her Work," edited by Sr. E. S. Jennings, Rochester, N. Y. It is published monthly. Price $1.00. It is neatly executed, containing choice, interesting reading, and well worth the money.

A PLEASANT ARRANGEMENT.

At the Springfield Campmeeting, preparatory steps were taken for the union of the "Woman's Christian Association" with the "American Advent Mission Society." The union was completed at the Alton Bay Campmeeting. The following report of the doings is from The Helper's Friend:—

FINALE.

By unanimous vote of the Woman's Christian Association, the following propositions were agreed upon to be presented to the Board of the Advent Mission Society:—

First. That we remove the publication of the paper called Woman and her Work, as a matter pertaining to the Association, and, if published, that it be conducted only as an individual enterprise until it can be honorably and satisfactorily suspended.

Second. That we unite our strength and efforts as one with our brethren, in the prosecution of the general work in which we are individually engaged.

E. S. JENNINGS,
L. M. STODDARD, } Committee.
H. B. HASTINGS,

Springfield, Mass., Aug. 25th, 1872.

The following was the action of the committee, H. A. King and J. Couch, on the above proposition:—

Whereas our sisters have heretofore associated themselves for missionary work, and as they now desire to discontinue that association, and unite with the American Advent Mission Society, and have expressed the same propositions which they have presented to this Society; Therefore, Resolved, that we most heartily accept this proposition, and cordially invite them to unite more intimately with us in the great work of missionary labor.

JOHN COUCH, } Committee.
H. A. KING,

By virtue of the above named action on the part of the two Societies, we must consider the Woman's Christian Association disbanded. . . . It is not without self-denial, and feelings of regret on the part of many a lonely "child," who has been gently led along and strengthened by our quarterly and annual gatherings, that we consent to drop these pleasant associations. But we trust that the moral obligations and ties of true friendship which alone make union sacred, will never be severed.

And now, as President of the Woman's Christian Association, and in behalf of each individual member of the same, to the many friends who have been to us strength and comfort, we, as an Association, must say, affectionately, gratefully, and feelingly—ADIEU.

ELVIRA S. JENNINGS.

DEATH OF HORACE GREELEY.—The Hon. Horace Greeley, founder of the New York Tribune, and its Editor for the last thirty years, died Friday, Nov. 29th, at seven in the evening, aged sixty-one years and ten months. It is believed his sudden death was caused by over-work and nervous prostration, the result of the recent exciting political campaign, his own defeat, and the late decease of his wife, by whose sick bed he had watched night and day. The New York Times says:—

"Mr. Greeley's loss in journalism is one which cannot be replaced. The incidents of his last sickness were peculiarly distressing, and from all we can learn his reverses during the campaign cannot alone account for them. Had he been successful, the probabilities are that he would not have lived, so overtaxed was his strength, and so utterly broken down was his constitution. The labors and excitement of the canvass were more than his body or mind could bear. We shall not attempt at this moment to do justice to Mr. Greeley as a journalist and public man. His life is a part of the history of the country during the last thirty years, and the time has not yet come when it can be impartially considered. It is certain that Mr. Greeley's name will always be honored in connection with the anti-slavery struggle, and with many important measures which he fought for with remarkable vigor simply because he believed they were right. Into these subjects we will not now enter, for the country is scarcely rid of the din and turmoil of a memorable and unhappy past. Historians will do justice to Mr. Greeley, and in the meanwhile his countrymen will be strangely forgetful if they fail to pay due tribute to his memory. He has been before them for almost a generation, and he has had their confidence in many trying periods of our history. Let us now remember only his virtues and his genius."

The Tribune of Saturday says:—"It is too soon, perhaps, to judge correctly how great has been his share in moulding the public sentiment which dictates laws, chooses Presidents, creates armies, and controls public events; but is is certain that no history of the most critical period in our national life can ever be written in which Horace Greeley shall not be a conspicuous figure. Enormous as his personal influence was in politics for the better part of a generation, it was not upon this that in his later years he looked back with the greatest satisfaction; that he had shaped the course of administrations, directed the purposes of parties, created a great organ of opinion, taught statesmen to sit at his feet, and Senates to listen for his approval; these were not the tests by which he would have measured his success. The vanity of wealth, the unreality of power, the worthlessness of popular renown, he estimated them all at their true value. The noblest career in his eyes was that which is given up to other's wants. The successful life was that which is worn out in conflict, wrong and woe. The only ambition worth following was the ambition to alleviate human misery and leave the world a little better than he found it. That he has done this was the consolation which brightened his last days and assured him that he had not lived in vain. He was a young man when he took his stand by the suffering and oppressed. He was old when he saw the downfall of the barbarism against which had battled for a quarter of a century. Honors and abuse, prosperity and reverses, were his by turns in this long contest, but his sturdy arm never faltered, and his heart never failed."

THE MINISTER OF CHRIST.

Those who enter the gospel field on the ancient principle of support on the free-will offering, instead of working under stipulated salaries, if they were to look on only one side of the picture, might well feel despondent at times. Scanty support at times, and even actual suffering sometimes staring them in the face. Often worn down with excessive labor, and for weeks or months confined to the bed, or unable to preach, the pocket gets empty, and friends forget that expenses accumulate under these circumstances as really as in health,—then the picture looks dark. Others are old, and can do comparatively little, but have spent their best days in serving the household of faith, instead of laying up funds for a wet day, and their prospect of support looks gloomy,—then the picture looks dark.

And it is lamentably true that the old adage—"Poor old horse, let him die," is too often made applicable to sick and aged ministers of the gospel. While the horse is in health, and can work hard, he is cared for; but when he gets disabled, and becomes unserviceable, or is too old to work, he is turned out to take care of himself, or starve; and the farewell from those he has served so faithfully in former days, now mournfully salutes his ears—"Poor old horse, let him die." This is too bad in the case of a horse even, but much worse in the case of a faithful minister of Jesus Christ when sick, or rendered unserviceable by the infirmities of old age.

But there is a brighter side to this picture. Jesus is still precious to them. His sweet Spirit still comforts. He has not forgotten them, nor does he prize them any the less than before they were disabled. He spreads out before them the sweet vision of endless life and unfading felicity in a lovely paradise. Surely they have not labored and suffered in vain if such a scene of glory awaits them. It is cheap enough at any price. They would not diminish aught from the sacrifice if they could. They have nothing to regret, unless it be that they have endured so little for Christ and his precious cause. They do not and cannot murmur. They rest in Christ, and feast on heavenly manna, though slighted by friends who should be mindful of them and their wants. Much is involved in being a minister of Christ. It is to be something more than a theologian, formalist, or sectarian. W. S.

IS ORDINARY DEATH THE PENALTY.

That the penalty incurred by sin is "death" is a clear point; but is it a death to precede the judgment? Certainly sinners are to be judged, for Jesus said—"Every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment" (Matt. 12: 36); "He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him; the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day." John 12: 48. So the judgment of sinners is due in "the last day," and the penalty comes after the judgment; hence, if that penalty is death, it is a death that is due after the judgment comes; therefore the death experienced before the judgment arrives cannot be the punishment for sin. Then what becomes of the statement so often made, that the race would have remained eternally dead if Christ had not made his first advent into the world? It is tantamount to an affirmation that sinners would have remained eternally unpunished, since ordinary death is no part of the punishment, as it precedes the judgment—"It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment." Heb. 9: 27. So God's original appointment located ordinary death before the judgment, the judgment itself being "after" ordinary death, and punishment for sin being due after the judgment comes. Shall we conclude that sinners would never have been punished for sins if Christ had not made his first advent? Then it is not true that the race would eternally have remained dead if Christ had not come the first time. A judgment was necessary for two reasons, even if Christ had not come the first time to bring pardon for repenting sinners.

1. A judgment would have been necessary for the infliction of punishment on sinners; and a judgment of dead men involves their resurrection.

2. A judgment would have been necessary to the salvation of sinless children who had died, as they are not responsible for Adam's sin, even if ordinary death had been the punishment; and they could not have been saved without a resurrection and judgment. Christ came into the world to save sinners, not by releasing them from a punishment already inflicted, but by exempting them from a punishment due in the future; not by releasing them from ordinary death, but by exempting them from the second death. This release from temporal death, instead of being the salvation, is a prerequisite to judgment, both on the part of saint and sinner. Since Christ has undertaken to save sinners "by the sacrifice of himself," the Father "hath committed all judgment unto the Son." John 5: 22. In this future judgment, pardoned sinners will come up to claim eternal life by virtue of Christ's first advent, instead of coming up to be condemned, as they would have done if Christ had never died for them. But both unpardoned sinners, and sinless infants will then stand on the same platform they would have occupied in the judgment if Christ had not come the first time to "call sinners to repentance." W. S.

"THE SHADES."

The ancient heathen were well informed about the shades, though void of divine instruction; while the Israelites, though in communion with God through sacred seers and holy prophets, were not instructed concerning these invisible beings, or their home. Would God keep his people in the dark? And how happened it that the heathen were the first to embrace the doctrine of a disembodied existence? Such is the fact, and profane history abounds with distinct references to this theory, while the writings of the ancient prophets are searched in vain to find a trace of this theory, except a few incidental references by way of prohibiting the Israelites from fraternizing with necromancers, etc. These incidental allusions to the system all showed God's disapprobation.

The only clue which God's ancient people had to a future life, was by a liberation from the reign of death, expressed in language too plain to be applied to the life of disembodied shades, such as the following—"If a man die, shall he live again?"—not if an immortal shade die, shall that shade live again? "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise;"—not, thy dead shades shall live. "I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death." Such language cannot be tortured into a reference to disembodied shades. And yet this is a fair sample of the language employed by the Lord in talking to his people about a future life, even while they were surrounded by those who believed in a region of human shades. The Lord's promises of future life all related to the men themselves that died, and entered the grave, and not to the shades of dead men—mere creatures of vain imagination. W. S.

"AS CALVES OF THE STALL."—The common version of Mal. 4: 2 reads as follows—"And ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall." As this relates to a time subsequent to the burning day, as shown by the context, it has perplexed many. It has led to the query—How can the immortal saints "grow up like calves of the stall"? But critics render the text thus—"bound as calves of the stall." The Douay version reads—"Shall leap like calves," etc. This is similar to Isaiah's statement—"Then shall the lame man leap as an hart," or deer. Isa. 35: 6. Then the saints will feel the vigor of immortal youth. Like well-fed calves, full of life, the old man even will leap like an hart, or bound like a deer. W. S.

QUESTIONS AND REPLIES.

BRO. SHELDON:—Will you give your views on Revelations 10th, and the last part of verse 6th; and also the last part of verse 2d, chap. 22d, either through the Crisis or by private letter, and oblige? T. P. FLINT.

Wentworthe Location, N. H. Sept. 20th.

REPLY.

1. The first text reads—"That there should be time no longer." Some critics have endeavored to make the original signify, "That the time should be delayed no longer;" but our present version is evidently not much at fault—"That time no more shall be," is a literal rendering. It is a proclamation of the close of probationary time, which reaches to the introduction of a new era.

2. The second text reads—"And the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations." The primary meaning of the term here rendered "healing," is service. Certainly it cannot signify healing from sickness in the New Jerusalem, where there shall be no death, and no pain. If this tree of life were to precede the deathless new earth state, instead of being connected with it, there might be more propriety in saying that its leaves were to cure sickness; but as it is, it cannot mean that they are intended to cure sickness in a land void of sickness.

It is sometimes said that the meaning, "Were for the healing," means that they had been for that purpose; but (1) the term "were" is supplied, and (2) if the text means that the tree was once for that purpose, it would be better to refer it to the time of Adam, before the fall, than to assume that it was for the purpose of healing men of sickness after Christ's second coming. A thing can be for "service" in more ways than in curing sickness, especially where there is no sickness to cure. "Angel's food" is doubtless of "service" to them, though immortal; else why eat it? W. S.

AN UNFAIR CRITICISM.

C. C. MARSTON.

The following paragraph I find in the correspondence department of a late Religio-Philosophical Journal:

"Speaking of pugilistic christians reminds me of an experience in the west. Once, in conversation at a boarding house, I remarked that, admitting the historical (?) account of Christ, I could not see wherein he was any better himself, or taught better doctrines in his day and generation, than many other men. I mentioned many names of history, and some then on the stage of action, when, what was my surprise to see one of the company spring to his feet, pull off his coat and exclaim, 'By the power of Holy J——s, I can whip any [here followed an epithet which conveyed the idea that men might descend from dogs] who will compare Christ with old Abe!' Now, this man was at the time deputy sheriff of the county, put in office by the pressure of Christian influence, to break up 'Sabbath breaking,' and was respected by the Christian community as a fighting champion. This low, depraved wretch, while I was in that same community, held me, who would stoop to help a crawling worm from the path where human feet might crush out its life, up as a dangerous character, taking souls down to hell along with me.

Such is Christianity; such has it ever been, and yet people will attempt to impress 'Christian principles' upon Spiritualism, as though the vilest principles have not always been peculiar to the advocates of Christianity."

Now I desire to call the attention of Spiritualists to this fact, that the above is an unfair criticism, and by candid men, the world over, it will be so considered. The pugilistic gentleman referred to no doubt deserves a criticism, even severer than the one given. But to say that Christianity has always been characterized by the "vilest principles," simply because that unprincipled sheriff professed to be a follower of Christ, is, to say the least, to speak very unadvisedly. What system of moral reform anywhere would stand the test if this were a fair principle of criticism? Certainly there are none.

Will our Spiritualist neighbor tell us what good thing has ever been in the world without being counterfeited? Counterfeiters are not likely to take advantage of a poor bank. If they can get some counterfeit bills on a good bank, they will be more likely to pass without detection. Would it be fair to pronounce the bank spurious because there were counterfeit bills being circulated, bearing its name? Certainly not. But on the contrary this would be an argument in favor of the bank. It must be a good bank, or else counterfeiters would not patronize it. Neither is it just to condemn the Bible and Christianity simply because there are some professing it who are unworthy the name. As in the case of the bank, this is an argument in favor of Christianity. It must be a good thing, or men would not be anxious to counterfeit it. This is the forte of Spiritualists, and in fact of all classes of the opposers of the Scriptures. They have had some experience in finding fault with the system itself, and have found the experience anything but pleasant. And now, to change the base of operations to a more successful vantage ground, they have concluded to pay their respects to the imperfections of those who profess it.

"The same pugilistic nature that animates the prize-fighters of to-day, is quietly slumbering in the bosom of many a Christian; and though it manifests its inherent tendencies quite differently, nevertheless it is the same in quality; in fact, it is the knock-down-drag-out argument, and although it don't strike out straight from the shoulder, it insidiously tries to reduce others to submission."

Here is not only the wholesale denunciation of Christianity, on account of the pugilistic tendencies of some defective member, but the writer assumes the solemn position of judge, and presumes to say that even those who are not convicted are guilty. "Pugilism is quietly slumbering in the bosom of many a christian." I am willing to admit that on this principle Christianity can be condemned. Convict the defective ones, and then declare that all the unconvicted ones are just as guilty as though they were condemned, and certainly the case is made out. But it appears to me that the cause must be weak that is obliged to use such unfair tactics to maintain its point.

TRACTS, TRACTS, TRACTS.

The Advent Publication Society, at their annual meeting at Springfield, voted to raise $2000 for free distribution of tracts the coming year. Three months have passed, and very little response has been had in shape of material aid. Now, dear brethren, I write from a sense of duty to the cause of Christ. Perhaps there is no way so much good can be done as by the distribution of these little, live messengers, filled with the truth. Many a man, by reading one of them, has had his mind enlisted, and the Spirit of God has applied truth to his heart, and has converted him, and changed his whole after life, and made him a shining light by which others have been led to the same living fountain; thus the stream has been made to flow on, both widening and deepening, spreading and sweetening the atmosphere with the life-giving fragrance of its healthful waters. There is no telling the good the flying sheets and Bible tracts have accomplished. They can go where nothing else can. They will be read by those who can be reached in no other way, and by no other means.

We have distributed many at our tent-meetings, and they are eagerly taken, and many of them read. And still they call for more. Now, the question is, Shall this desire be gratified, and this want satisfied? All will answer, Yes. But how shall it be done? There must be funds to supply these messengers. They should be scattered east, west, north, and south, and no time should be lost in doing it. The shortness of time should prompt to more vigorous effort. Brethren, one and all, rich and poor, come speedily up to this work of supplying the means for this godlike enterprise. It is an individual work. Let all hearken to this call from the Society, and respond by putting the hand in the pocket, and sending on to the treasury the result of your benevolence in this direction. Now don't let this department of our gospel labor suffer. God will bless and reward those who cast their "bread upon the waters." Trust in the Lord, and do good, and you shall be fed. Give liberally, and reap abundantly.

SOUTHERN WORK.

On Sept. 17th, I bade good-bye to home and friends, and once more started out into the cold world to do what little I could in sounding the alarm of the soon coming judgment. Sept. 21st found me in the field ready for work. At Ooltewah, Tenn., I found the little church still contending for the faith, although they had not had any preaching for nearly a year. This church was formed in Oct., last year, and when we left it, it numbered thirty-two; their present number is forty. After spending some three weeks with them, I started for Alabama. Here I found plenty of work, and within twenty-one days attended twenty-four meetings, preached twenty times, walked sixty-five miles, and traveled on the cars and on horseback some one hundred and fifty more; saw some fifteen converted; old church members, who had been asleep for years, waked up, and re-dedicated themselves to God. I got access to many people that were once very much opposed to us, and this was mostly due to a dear Bro. John A. Cargile, a Baptist minister, who is doing much in these parts for God's truth. I expect, if he keeps near Jesus, he will do much towards sounding the cry, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh." One thing is true, he loves the truth better than any church fellowship. He is to be tried for his faith in Feb. next. God bless the dear brother. Brethren, pray for him.

On Nov. 2nd, I returned in company with Bro. C. to Tenn., and found the contemplated debate between Bro. Grant and J. Kimbrough was understood to begin on the 12th. Truth is getting a strong hold on this people.

Friends in the north, give us your prayers, for we need them in our conflict with error.

Correspondence.

From Sr. S. E. Teeple.

BRO. GRANT:—I thought I would like to communicate a few thoughts through the Crisis. I do not wish to intrude on its columns, but it is about the only method that I have to let the church and world know how I am getting along, and also to exhort them in the name of Jesus. Luke says, in the 21st chapter and 34th verse, that we should take heed to some important things, and more especially down in these last moments of time, when iniquity abounds, and the love of many waxes cold. The thirty-fifth verse says—"For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth." Well, then it does not belong to us who are of the household of faith, because we are pilgrims and strangers here, and have no abiding place, no continuing city; but the thirty-fourth verse, I think, must apply to those who are looking for the Son of man (or profess to be looking). He has tarried beyond their expectation; and had there not been danger of being overcharged, he would not have admonished them; but he says, "Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares." It is our hearts that are in danger of being overcharged. When was there ever a time when not only the world, but the professed church, and even those who have taken their lamps and gone out to meet the Bridegroom, were so overcharged by the cares of this world? There is so much to do; so many cares; so hurried, living so fast. Go where you will, it is the same sad and awful state of things. Who will heed the admonition? who will be ready to meet the King in his beauty? He is coming soon. It is no tale of fiction. It must, it will be a tale of reality soon. He went away, and in like manner this same Jesus will come again.

"And my longing heart cries out, oh, come,
Creation groans for thee;
The weary pilgrim sighs, oh come,
Bring immortality."

The world at large has been stirred. The masses seem to heed it not. It shall be as it was in the days of Noe, and of Lot—eating and drinking, and knew not. They know not now. They are willingly ignorant.—They will soon be caught in the snare. It will soon be too late. O God, save. My God, have mercy. Pity the careless and the indifferent. Stretch out thy hand once more to save the people. I weep, I groan, I sigh, and my heart is wrung with anguish, because some are too stubborn to yield. I cannot give vent in words, because my voice has been hushed to a whisper for these last eighteen months; and so I resort to pen and paper; but I cannot tell it. I can feel it. Sometimes it seems as if I must hide in the bowels of the earth. Again, I feel at times that I am hid in a small valley, called Cross Brook. Once the saints of God could find me. Every few days a pilgrim passed this way to get a cup of cold water, or a bit of something to eat to help him on his way, or a bed to lie on to rest his weary limbs as he would stop over night. "As iron sharpeneth iron, so doth the countenance of a man his friend." We felt strengthened to see each other. Our conversation was in heaven, from whence we looked for the Savior. We bent the knee in prayer and praise together; we made the earth vocal with our songs of praise. O blessed, blessed. Those were golden, happy days, spent in prayer and praise.

How changed the scene! Scarcely one calls on me now; they have so much to do they cannot find time. No meetings here, as formerly. The flock is scattered, and has died out. But what earthly shepherd would leave one or two sheep in a pasture, and never go near them, even if they were lame, or could not bleat, and so feeble they could get into no other pasture. O, thank God, Jesus is good. He is precious. His name is worthy of praise. He wants none of these little ones to perish. In times of affliction, he has been very near and precious. In trouble, he has not forsaken me; and when, to all appearance, the grave must be my resting-place, he has rebuked disease, and I yet live to praise him, and have been able to attend more of the means of grace for the last few weeks than for two years. To God be all the praise.

My willing soul would stay in such a frame as this; but that cannot be. We must part, each to our homes, and I not knowing as I will ever meet with the loved ones again. I came back to my pasture, not knowing as ever an earthly shepherd will pass this way to see whether I am dead or alive; but I am thinking that not one of God's little ones, or one kernel of wheat will be left to burn, and so in the great reckoning day there will be an angel sent to this little valley, and I do believe I shall be so glad to see him. I mean to be all ready to go, so as not to detain him, for I know he will be in a hurry. I must, I can, I will say—

"My all to Christ I've given,
My talents, time, and voice;
Myself, my reputation,
The lone way is my choice.
The cross of Christ I'll cherish,
His crucifixion bear;
All hail reproach and sorrow,
If Jesus leads me there."

Truly he has led me through some of these places, but I love him still. I trust him now. He is mine, and I am his. O praise him now. We will praise him. O glory, hallelujah; this peace, this joy, is worth worlds, and it keeps us above the world while we are in it. O glory to God forever. Amen and amen. Yours in the faith of the gospel, Hotchkissville, Ct. SUSAN E. TEEPLE.

From Bro. M. W. Lutz.

BRO. GRANT:—God is blessing us in New Haven, Conn., and many who were once in the gall of bitterness and bond of iniquity are rejoicing in Jesus. Sr. H. L. Hastings came here Oct. 31st, and commenced meetings in the Advent church on Beers St., with a few people, who had been praying God to revive his work in this place; and they have found that the effectual, fervent prayers of the righteous avail much. She found these faithful ones, and in the name of Jesus (blessed name, how I love it), they commenced a revival meeting. God did bless from the beginning, and every night since some one has started to serve the Lord. I was on my way home to Philadelphia, when I was impressed to go and help those women that labored in the gospel. I asked the Lord, and it seemed to be his will. I arrived at New Haven on the 8th of this month, and found that some had been praying God to send me along, if it was his will.

Sunday, 10th, was a high day in Zion, and the Spirit of the Lord was with us. Sr. Hastings and myself preached the word to a crowded house, and ten came forward to the anxious seats for prayers. The great fire in Boston made it necessary for Sr. Hastings to leave, and I staid another week; although loved ones at home were waiting for me to come, and I was anxious to go and rest awhile, which I need. I felt to say, Not my will, but thine be done. The meetings increased in interest and numbers, and sinners still kept coming to the anxious seat, and were converted. Backsliders confessed and gave over their wanderings, and the shouts and rejoicing of the saints were joyful and refreshing. One seventy years old is seeking earnestly, and drunkards and harlots also. Praise God for his goodness in saving the lost and fallen.

I am so glad Jesus loves me. Hallelujah! I have planted many in the likeness of Christ's death, raised them in the likeness of his resurrection; and many are still waiting to go. The interest is such, that the church will not hold the eager multitude that come night after night to hear the blessed truths that we as a people love so dearly. They hear of the coming King; of the earth made new, as the home of the saints forever; and of the resurrection of the dead. Many have renounced the devil's lie—the immortality of the soul, and the sky kingdom, and are becoming sanctified through the truth, and love the appearing of Jesus in person. Bro. A. A. Phelps, of Vineland, N. J., was with us last Sunday, 17th, and was good help; and Bro. Boutell, of Chelsea, was with us Tuesday, 19th, and preached from Titus 2: 11-13. It was blessed.

The interest is increasing, also the people; and the brethren, owing to the increasing numbers that cannot get into the church, have rented the large Congregational church, on House St., near the centre of the city, and we shall move in Sunday, Nov. 24th, where we believe the Lord will display his power in saving the perishing. All denominations work harmoniously with us, and the work goes well. My health is good, and my peace flows like a river. I ask the saints scattered abroad to pray much for me, that my righteousness may extend like the waves of the sea. Sr. Hastings has returned, and we shall, in the name of Jesus, labor here as long as he shall direct, and when our Captain says go, we are ready to go north, south, east, or west, or to the eternal kingdom. Brethren, pray for us; for Paul may plant, and Apollos may water, but we are sensible that God must give the increase. As I have received many letters from friends full of christian love, and many calls to come to other fields and labor, this letter must do for all, as I have not time to answer. I will always be glad to hear from all the saints of Jesus. Your Bro. in Jesus, MARVIN W. LUTZ.

From Bro. S. Woodruff.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—We love Christ because he first loved us. Love is the mainspring of the Christian religion. It was love that first caused the door of salvation and eternal life to be opened to the lost race of man. O the unbounded love of God to man! Our hearts, without this love, never can be right in the sight of God, for he is love. Without this love, we can never bear the message of salvation and eternal life to the perishing of earth, and make them feel the need of partaking the word of truth. It was love which caused God's dear Son to come down from the realms of glory, and walk here a man of sorrow, and acquainted with grief. In him was no guile. We may talk about love, but we must needs have it deeply in our hearts, partake of this love first ourselves, before we can make others feel the need of it. When out of a full heart, burning with this love, we can tell the story, it is then hearts will begin to feel the need of Christ; for it will burn its way into stubborn hearts, and cause them to yield to grace and become acquainted with the God of life and power. I love him, because he first loved me.

Many talk of loving him, but the evidence of his near approach seems no cheering news to them. O, I do like to hear about Jesus, and of his soon coming to earth again. I have a daughter at Boston, whom I love as a father should his children. A few days ago, the news reached us that Boston was on fire, and that some lives were lost. Do you think I was a disinterested one in the matter? Nay, verily. I was anxious to hear more in that direction, for my daughter, with others whom I loved, were there exposed to danger. I sent every day to the post-office, eagerly grasping every letter from there my hand could reach. Seals were broken quickly to know about the daughter. My feelings were ofttimes aroused, when I heard the rumbling of Nahum's chariot-wheels running with their lightning speed, in hopes they would remove my anxiety by bringing the absent one home. I was interested, because I loved her.

A few years ago, at the West Winsted grove, I heard a servant of God proclaiming—"Behold, the Bridegroom cometh." Was I disinterested in these things? No, it is the greatest event that will ever transpire. It brings Him whom we love. O blessed Lamb of God, we hail thy speedy return. We cannot be disinterested, for we love thee, and every token of thy return cheers our waiting hearts. We welcome thy return, thou dear Redeemer, to reign as King, and let us see thy glory, and in our Eden home let us dwell with thee; for we love thee.

O ye wanderers from this Savior, how can you stay away? He loves you still. His everlasting arms of mercy are laid underneath you for good. O ye wanderers, return, ere the harvest day be past. O sinner, can you hate this Savior? Will you thrust him from you arms? For you he groaned and died; for you he now lives and pleads. But, ah! in a little while his pleadings will be over, and the last ray of glimmering hope be past; the King in his beauty will appear, admired by all them that believe. Believe on the Son of God, and with the righteous share the glories of the everlasting kingdom, and be forever with the Lord.

From Bro. E. McCullock.

BRO. GRANT:—It may be for the encouragement of the church at large, to know that the Lord is raising up standard-bearers to spread the glorious news of a soon coming Savior, to a perishing world, and an expectant and waiting church. By the request of Bro. G. W. Stetson, we visited the church in Pittsburg, Pa., on the 10th of Nov., to assist in the ordination of Bro. G. D. Clowes, to the work of the gospel ministry. Bro. Clowes is a man that is highly esteemed, and respected, and has been a local preacher in the M. E. church, for a number of years. We think he will be an efficient laborer in the cause of truth. The church in Pittsburg, though small in numbers, is now prospering, under the pastoral labors of Bro. Stetson, who has been earnestly endeavoring to unite, in christian order, the believers in the glorious truths of the gospel connected with the second advent of Jesus Christ; and he has succeeded in gathering together some noble, self-sacrificing hearts, who are willing to make large sacrifices in order to more effectually spread the truths we hold so important and dear to us as a people. We trust there will be a large church established in that city, which shall prove a light to the world, and do honor to the cause of Christ.

Nevada, O., Nov. 20th.

From Bro. L. Boutell.

DEAR BRETHREN:—We have consented, at the earnest request of the church in Worcester, to call a session of the Mass. Advent Conference, at Worcester, the nineteenth of Dec. It was with reluctance that we called the meeting at that time, as it might look like interfering with the time meeting. The object of the church in Worcester is to induce a greater number to attend. Our meeting will not be opposed to or crowd out any arrangements of the time conference. Let all the lovers of the Lord's coming come up to these meetings with the Spirit of Christ, and love for truth, and one another, and speak freely, act liberally, and love with pure hearts fervently.

"TRUMPET FOR THE WATCHMAN."—This is a book written by Bro. Geo. Thomson, and designed to be put in the hands of all the New England clergy. It is well adapted to instruct and enlighten on the Bible plan to save and redeem lost, mortal man, and give him eternal life through Jesus Christ at his coming. Will not the brethren who are able send in donations, to distribute or buy the book, and give it to your ministers in town? Come, the work of spreading the light on Bible subjects is ours. The truth is with us; it must be scattered. Who will say, I'll help?

L. BOUTELL.

THE NEW POSTAL CODE.—Perhaps some of our readers may not be aware of some of the changes introduced by the Code of June 8th, 1872.

For the benefit of such we will state some of those that seem important. Letters not fully prepaid, but which are prepaid one rate or more, are sent, and double the amount unpaid is collected on delivery.

To state this as plainly as possible, let us furnish an example. A firm in this place a few days since received a letter from Hartford, on which one rate of postage (i. e., three cents) had been paid, but which required fifteen cents to fully prepay it; thus the unpaid amount was twelve cents, and double this amount was what had to be paid on delivery of the letter here.

Transient newspapers cannot be sent unless fully prepaid by stamps at the rate of one cent for each two ounces or part of two ounces.

Small packages of merchandise, containing no writing, may be sent at two cents for each two ounces if so wrapped as to be easily inspected. Such packages are limited to twelve ounces in weight.—Ex.

SUTTON. Died in Philadelphia, Oct. 18th, 1872, George Sutton, aged eighty-four years.

After a few hours of intense suffering our father fell asleep, but only for a little while, for he held fast to the promise that if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even to them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.

In early life he commenced to serve God, and forsook him not when he was old and grey. Since 1842 or '43 he has been a firm believer in the speedy coming of Christ, and often has expressed a hope that he might live to see it, but when the summons came he was resigned to go.

We have cause to believe that, when called to leave his dusty bed, his eye shall be no longer dim, nor his step feeble, for he will come up clothed with immortality and eternal life.

W. SUTTON.

MAYBERRY. Died in Casco, Me., June 5th, 1872, Bro. Oliver Mayberry, aged seventy-seven years.

It is pleasant, when one has fallen thus old and full of days, to know that his life has been a grand success, and that whenever thought of by townsmen or friends, his influence like a persuasive voice calls loudly to all to be honest with men and faithful to God. Such was our brother, and so death found him ready. A widow and children mourn him. J. ALBERT LIBBY.

GAY. Died in South Casco, Nov. 3d, 1872, Bro. Lewis Gay, father of Eld. Jesse Gay, aged seventy-one years.

Bro. Gay, although holding connection with the F. Baptists, had come to see the truth of life and immortality through Christ alone. He loved the gathering together of the saints of this faith, and was ready to bestow for the upbuilding of the cause. His sickness was typhoid fever, and his sudden fall is a severe affliction to the lonely widow and the children left. Sermon at the funeral by Eld. James Libby. J. ALBERT LIBBY.

CLARK. Died in Providence, R. I., Aug. 30th, of consumption, Eliza J. Clark, aged forty-two years.

Our sister was the subject of renewing grace when but thirteen years of age. From her first espousal of Christ and his cause she was identified with those looking for "that blessed hope."

Faithful in every relation, she clung to Jesus through every trial and conflict, until in the last dread struggle she found His arm an almighty support. She rests sweetly with Jesus, and soon will awake joyfully to sing "the song of Moses and of the Lamb." L. OSLER.

BOOKER. Died in Worcester, Oct. 19th, 1872, Mary Booker, aged seventy-eight years.

For thirty-five years she had been connected with the visible church of Christ, and became very much interested in the lectures of Bro. Miller, in 1842-3, and maintained her interest and faith in the great doctrinal truths of the Lord's soon coming. She died as the righteous die, "looking for that blessed hope." S. AYRES.

HUTCHINS. Died in Haverhill Centre, N. H., Nov. 15th, 1872, Joseph Hutchins, aged fifty-seven years, seven months, and twenty days.

He leaves a sick wife and five children, besides a large circle of friends to mourn his loss; but we sorrow not as those that have no hope. He sleeps, but not forever. GEO. E. BROWN.

DOW. Died in Canterbury, N. H., Oct. 26th, 1872, George Dow, aged twenty-nine years and five months.

His loss is deeply felt by all who knew him. Words of comfort were spoken by T. E. Lang, from 1 Thess. 5: 18. B. R. NEAL.

LAWRENCE. Died at the residence of his brother, Pere H. Lawrence, Nov. 18th, 1872, Wm. B. Lawrence, in the sixty-fourth year of his age.

Peace be to his ashes.

FRANCE.

The political crisis in France continues. The situation is viewed as highly precarious. All efforts toward effecting a reconciliation of the differences between Thiers and the Assembly have hitherto failed. Theirs persists in the declaration that the government should be conducted on a Republican basis, and that the declaration of Republican principles by the Assembly would be the only means of firmly establishing the government and preventing more serious complications. Great difference of opinion meanwhile exists among the various parties in the Assembly regarding the most practicable method of settling the present difficulties, and numerous plans and propositions made with this view create considerable confusion. The members of the Right now propose to solve the problem by electing Changarnier dictator, with Batbie, d'Audrifet, Broglie and Des Jardines as Ministers. Special despatches from Paris to London evening papers report that the situation is gloomy. The majority in the National Assembly, it is stated, has determined to adhere to the position it has taken, and a compromise of the differences between the executive and legislative departments of the government is regarded as impossible.

Dec. 2nd. The resignation of Lefranc last evening has been followed, as was expected, by the resignation of the entire Cabinet, this forenoon the remaining members tendering their resignation to Thiers in a body. A new Cabinet is now forming, and it is reported that Perier will be selected as Premier. It is stated that the members of the Left have resolved to move a dissolution of the Assembly when it meets to-morrow. The President is much affected by the last vote of the Assembly. He says the only course left for him is to resign. Nothing is yet settled. The situation is one of the gravest. Paris is uneasy, but the Monarchists are firm and confident.

ITALY.

Despatches from Rome state that that city was thrown into a fever of excitement by the startling announcement that five of the prominent leaders of the Radical party have been arrested on the charge of high treason and imprisoned by order of the government. A case of bombs, destined for Rome, has been seized at Leghorn, causing intense excitement. The bombs are the regular Orsini pattern, and are the most deadly and effective known. The authorities are on the watch lest any of these dangerous missiles should be secretly conveyed into Rome, in which event they will be immediately seized. The government is in possession of information showing the plot to be of a formidable character and criminating a number of other persons in the conspiracy. It is confidently expected that further arrests will be made. The royal Cabinet is greatly excited over the discovery of the plot, and precautions for ensuring the safety of His Majesty's person from assault have been redoubled.

LONDON, Dec 2. The steamship Dalmatian, from Liverpool for the Mediterranean, has been wrecked. Thirty-five of the passengers and crew were lost.

PARIS, Dec. 2. Two Cabinet Councils, each of long duration, were held yesterday. After a full deliberation upon the situation M. Thiers finally agreed to remain in the Presidency if the Ministers who tendered their resignations yesterday would withdraw them, and the latter consented.

It is reported that General Ducrot is summoned of Versailles to reply to reports accusing him of preparing his troops to act in a hostile attitude to the Government in case of a crisis, and of issuing circulars to gendarmene in his district ordering them to make inquiry into the political opinions of the inhabitants.

The Debats says the fact that Ducrot is in possession of an important command, is not reassuring to those who fear a coup.

CONCORD, N. H.—N. H. ADVENT CONFERENCE.

Correspondence of the Boston Journal.

Concord, N. H., Nov. 25. The annual Conference of the Adventists in New Hampshire commenced at the City Hall in Concord Wednesday afternoon of last week, and closed on Sunday evening. The sessions were all well attended and the proceedings were quite interesting. Rev. John Couch, President of the Conference presided, and some thirty other clergymen were present. The forenoons were devoted to business, and the afternoon and evening sessions were taken for sermons and revival meetings. The report of the Secretary showed the denomination in New Hampshire to be in a prosperous condition and with a considerably increased membership over a year ago.

During the meetings sermons were preached by Rev. Mr. Couch, Elder Hastings of Boston, Rev. A. Ross, of Plymouth, Rev. N. Wheeler of Lisbon, Rev. Mr. Stewart of Exeter and Rev. J. G. Smith of Farmington. The meetings on Sunday were largely attended and a deep interest was manifested by the assembly. In the morning Elder Couch preached an able discourse, followed by an entertaining discourse by Rev. Mr. Wheeler in the afternoon. The administration of the communion in the evening was a solemn occasion. Elder Couch, after delivering an impressive discourse, officiated at the communion, assisted by other ministers. Over three hundred communicants joined in the service.

The principal officers of the Conference for the ensuing year are: President, Elder John Couch; Vice President, Rev. T. W. Piper of Tuftonborough; Treasurer, Rev. J. G. Smith of Farmington; Secretary, Rev. C. H. Fletcher of Newport. The times and places for the quarterly meetings were left with the Executive Committee. There are now between eighty and ninety ministers in the New Hampshire Conference. F. F.

In Brief.

—— The horse disease has affected the mules at Memphis, Tenn., severely. Business is almost at a standstill.——Since the 11th of May there have been 927 deaths from small-pox in St. Louis.——Berlin is said to be the most rapidly growing city of Europe. It numbers about one million of inhabitants, and has all the nuisances of a large city.——The Left of the French Assembly has frankly declared for Gambetta, believing that he will more readily relieve France from her troubles than Father Thiers can, possibly.——Paris has not so many inhabitants by one hundred and fifty thousand as it had just previous to the late war.——The prisons of France are crowded to overflowing with convicts, numbering over ten thousand female prisoners.——A Postal Convention has been concluded with the province of Newfoundland, reducing the international letter rate between the U. S. and Newfoundland, after Dec. 1st, from 10 cts. to 6 cts. per half ounce, and fixing the rate for newspapers at two cents each, prepayment being compulsory.——A correspondent in Corea reports a dreadful famine in that country. The Regent has seized all crops for the public benefit, but these are not sufficient, and many are dying. Millet is sold at fabulous prices.——The epizootic disease is quite prevalent in Newark county, N. J., among the cattle and also among barn-yard fowls. At Lyons Farms the disease is quite fatal, one farm having lost twelve cows, while another has lost one hundred and seventy-five out of two hundred chickens which were attacked. Several milkmen who have overworked their horses have lost them by death during the past week.——Mr. Greeley's life was insured for $100,000 for the benefit of the Tribune Association.

A YEAR OF DISASTER.—The year eighteen hundred and seventy-two, now within four weeks of its close, will be memorable in history as a year of disaster and death. It is especially within its latter half that an unparalled number of heart-rending disasters apalled mankind. The fearful collision on the Sound, which sent the propeller Metis to the bottom of the waters with over eighty human beings, had hardly been announced when the destruction by fire in the Bahamas channel of the steamship Bienville followed, with still greater loss of life. The steamer Missouri met a like fate, and steamers, barques and schooners on the upper lakes went down with their precious living freight before a gale as furious as was ever experienced. And now sorrowful tidings reach us from the north of Europe. A terrific gale sweeps the British coast and leaves death and desolation in its track. The waters, lashed by the howling storm, break into mines and bury the operatives. On the Baltic coast of Germany the fury of the hurricane seems to have glutted itself with human life. And of still more local interest, our fearful Boston conflagration seems a culminating catastrophe.—Globe.

UNUSED SPICES.

"Now upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the sepulchre, bringing the spices which they had prepared."—LUKE 24: 1.

What said those women as they bore
Their fragrant gifts away—
The spices that they did not need
That resurrection day?

Did Mary say within her heart—
"Our work hath been in vain"?
Or, counting o'er the spices bought,
Of so much waste complain?

Not so; for though the risen Lord
Their offering did not need,
Not unrewarded was the love
That planned the reverent deed.

For, though unused their fragrant store,
Yet well might they rejoice,
Since they the first who saw the Lord,
The first who heard his voice.

Sweet story, hast thou not some truth
For my impatient heart—
Some lesson that shall stay with me,
Its comfort to impart?

Have I not gathered in the past,
In days that are no more,
Of spices sweet and ointment rare,
What seemed a precious store?

A little knowledge I had gained,
A little strength and skill;
I thought to use them for my Lord,
If such should be his will.

Alas! my store unused hath been,
The strength I prized hath gone;
My weary hands have lost their skill,
And yet my life goes on.

In all the busy work of life
I have but scanty share,
And scanty is the service done
For Him whose name I bear.

So many plans and hopes have died,
In weariness and pain,
My heart cries out, in sore distress—
"Was all my work in vain?"

Be still, sad heart, thy hopes and plans
Are known to One divine;
He knoweth all thou wouldst have done,
Had greater strength been thine.

My unused spices! Dearest Lord,
They were prepared for thee;
Yet if for them thou hast no need,
Let LOVE my offering be.

NEWS FROM ENGLAND.

(From our English Correspondent.)

My letter should start to-day with "Ebenezer," for God has prospered us so far in testimony for his name as to give us a room at Weymouth, which we have rented for twelve months, having faith that he will provide the means for its sustenance. On Sunday evening last it was nearly filled, and those present listened with great attention and interest. How truly then do we say, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us."

Monday, we left our headquarters for Pulham, having received an invitation from the brethren living there. We found a very devoted people at this place, who extended us a cordial welcome to their homes and hospitalities. But never did we so realize the state of the agricultural poor as we now do. The poverty of the people here is truly affecting; yes, almost to tears. It has long been an old truism that the farm-laborer of Dorset is an under-paid bireling; but this has often been regarded as a wolf-cry originated by chronic grumblers. I am sorry, however, to have to confirm the complaint; and never would I have believed such a condition of affairs existed in my native country had I not verified them personally. Even our Bro. George A. Brown now says, "I am ashamed of my own country!"

The wages of the laborer here amount to the colossal and extraordinary sum of $2.50 a week! Out of this paltry, even insignificant pittance, they have to provide food, house, clothing, fuel, and education, for themselves and families. And what makes the matter still worse is that some of the laborers are irregularly paid, and are consequently set at a disadvantage through the carelessness of their employers. Provisions are getting very high in England. Since I left this country, two years ago, they have taken a long upward stride, and they are growing still dearer. Many of the necessaries of life are as dear here as in America. Bread is fifteen to sixteen cents a loaf; butter from thirty-two to thirty-six cents a pound; cheese at from twelve to twenty-four cents a pound; beef at twenty to twenty-two cents (bone not cut out); and pork at sixteen cents. And I ask you to realize what livelihood can be got out of $2.50 per week, for a man with a family, with prices so high as those quoted? Alas! it is not a living; the supply of nutriment is often less than the demand and waste; so that declining health and gradual starvation are frequently the portion of this dear people. Meat seldom graces the table of these honest but indigent individuals. A bit of the hardest and least nutritious cheese is, with bread, the alpha and the omega of edibles.

I am thinking now of a case of a family living near one of our brethren; and it is far from being the worst in the neighborhood. It is composed of father, mother, and six children. Father is a laborer, and I am credibly informed one of the steadiest and best in the vicinity. He has had long experience, thoroughly understands his work, is tough and enduring, abstains from the poisoned cup, and is altogether a worthy man. And what do you imagine the gold worth is of such a man's services per week? Eight shillings and something called a house; not too good for pigs to live in! How can eight people pick up even crumbs on this? They cannot; so two of the juveniles are turned out to toil through the tender years of childhood, while they should be learning and playing. These earn, respectively, five shillings and one shilling and sixpence. Thus the total earnings of the family are fourteen shillings and sixpence. But should a wet day prevent the parent from working, that day's wages is deducted from his pay. Now, supposing that his life is "ALL work, and no play," the family receipts are $3.48 gold. This is to feed, warm, clothe and instruct eight persons; or to speak individually, a subsistence for each must be dragged out of forty-three cents per week! A person to live on forty-three cents a week, with food prices nearly on a par with those of New England! How can they live? There's the question—and the mystery also. It is not quite enough to buy three loaves of bread a week for each "living soul"—say nothing of butter, cheese, tea, firing, and education. A coat for father puts away three weeks' wages. How do they live? Bread—and not enough of that. Half a pound of bacon a week among the whole eight! Rags—anything they can beg for clothes. Education—what one of our brethren gives them in a night school. Alas! alas! Can you wonder that the hearts of such people grow weary, and that they become self-depreciated, till they lose all ambition, esteem life a necessary evil, and death—to use a phraseology of their own—"a happy release"? Home, what sort of a place is it? Only an old tumble-down hut, with flooring of cold and broken flagstones, and walls of cement, falling down for want of repairs. The furniture!—indeed the name is a sarcasm on the one dilapidated wooden chair, and the little low form. What will they get fuel for the winter? That's what they ask. They can only dread the teeth of the frost, and sit and shiver in the darkness, praying God to send warmer weather and finer days. Could you see the mother, how you would feel—I trust, in your pocket! The pallor of her face shows her pressing need of staminal aliment; and her whole appearance is a strong prayer to a man who has a sixpence left in his pocket, and a spark of pity in his soul. I would to God he would open the heart and pocket of some brother, who wants help, to send for the man!

But this is only a case by way of example. The consequence of such ill-paid labor is, that little boys of five and six years of age are compelled to leave home, and go out into the fields to scare birds, or do little chores on the farm, to get even a crust. These little ones are "booted" with clumps of leather of great thickness, covered on the bottom with large hob-nails, iron toe caps and cues, till they are crippled, their legs are stiffened, and they limp like old men. Let me picture one. In the morning he gets his food bag, into which his mother puts a piece of bread (with sometimes a piece of double-skimmed-milk cheese), to last the brave little man till night. He goes to work at six o'clock. Nine o'clock comes; he is hungry, and uses his teeth on the piece of bread, which rapidly lessens till it is gone—eaten. Dinner time comes; but he has nothing to eat, except some motherly dame or kind-hearted "chum," a trifle better off, should say, "Jake, he's a part of my crust!" Such is the poverty of the Dorset laborer, and I make these assertions with cases in my mind, and proofs at my fingers' ends.

Still worse, these people are priest-ridden as any Catholic community. I can now say what I never did before of "the church as by law established." It is a notoriously wicked and cursed institution. The "priest," as he now calls himself in the ritualistic section, is, to borrow the words of Wesley, "a supreme nuisance." He is intolerant to the last degree,—a miserable pestiferous "varmint," as the country illiterate say. Should a man become converted, go to a dissenting meeting, or be what God made him, a MAN, he is cut off from all the charities (shame to say charities; it is nothing but his rights, in another form). Here is a case in point. It is an old woman of nearly seventy years. Five shillings were coming to her out of the coal club, but she opened her house for a prayer-meeting, and the coal was withheld. To be a dissenter is to lose the grocery ticket. To be a dissenter, is to lose the mess of pottage, or the basin of soup from the parson's kitchen. To be a dissenter is to be cold all the winter night, with no use of the charity blanket. To be a non-conformist is to be a social martyr, a martyr for years, even life, which is far less to be preferred than a brief personal martyrdom at the stake. A late specimen of a priest at a village parish, when spoken to of a dissenting minister, raised himself in supercilious scorn, and said with disdain—"What! me, a gentleman, talk to that blackguard!" He professed to be a successor of the apostles. Doubtless this "gentleman" successor forgot his ancestry—a Peter, with a fishy smell; a Matthew, a public tax-gatherer; a Paul, a knotty-handed tent-maker! If his gentility were only such as theirs, he might well be proud.

The taxes levied to support this "house of death"—this admirable church—are amazing. Small farmers are "screwed," cry, or no cry. One small field near by, two acres in size, is subject to a tax of nearly $2.50 per year, gold. The brother who has given me some light on this subject rents a small farm which is taxed for the church nearly $100. No wonder the "Church of England" has in her "service" so many "God have mercy's upon us!" She wants them badly enough; but she will never get them. We have come to this people with the word of life—"the gospel of our salvation"; and they have received it as hungry men receive food.

Yesterday we concluded a week of services, and not without profit. It is true, there are no conversions to report; but the saints were comforted, edified and blessed. There was also a deep conviction resting on the unconverted, and we sincerely hope that the seed will yet germinate, stem, fill and ripen to the praise of the God of heaven. Two believers were taught the first step of obedience in public profession of Christ, and they consented to the teaching, waiting only an opportunity, while one other brother is also ready to confess our Lord, and wait in faith, hope and joy his revelation from heaven.

They want a chapel. O that America would stretch out the hand of brotherly love to them! The spirit of hearing is great here. They have only a little room to meet in—twelve feet by twelve—and the desire to hear is so intense that this place, which is far too strait, is filled to overflowing. On Tuesday and Sunday evenings last, about sixty persons were crowded into this small space, and some went away disappointed, unable to gain admission—not able to hear that they might believe! Every other night, though the weather was very inclement and unpropitious, a goodly number were in attendance, who gave to us a pressing call to come again. They want a chapel. I wish we could assist them. They are certainly too poor to raise one themselves, many of them being unable to contribute two cts. a week. They are one with us, and are willing to come into fellowship with a conference which we are proposing for the south and west of England. They hold the life views, and are waiting for the kingdom of God. If they had a chapel, they could get many more in, and it would be filled. An estimate has been made for a good, plain, substantial, brick building, twenty feet by thirty-five, and for the land, building, seating, and light fixtures, the cost would be about $685. I can cordially recommend this to the notice of those who are entrusted with the wealth of this world, and who desire to serve God with their substance. It would give a chance to many to hear and be pleased; and the donor of the money for its erection would in no wise lose his reward.

Here, then, is ground with standing corn. Shall we enter in and reap? Brethren, say, what shall be done? We are your servants for Christ's sake. Will you give the poor of England a place in which to hear the gospel? The brethren here send their love to you, their American brothers. Do all that is in your hearts. Address letters to the care of Geo. T. Adams, Boston, Mass. W. K.

SANDY HILL, N. Y.

On the banks of the grand old Hudson, in Washington County, N. Y., is located the quiet little village of Sandy Hill. This village embraces within its corporated limits about three thousand inhabitants, and is noted, among other things, for its spirit of enterprise and for its being a county seat. There are six churches in this village, including the Advent Christian church, which holds regular service on the Sabbath. The Advent church was organized about twenty years ago, during which time it has had the following pastors:—Elds. J. Barry, S. G. Mathewson, O. R. Fassett, C. H. Leverton, R. Mosher, and the writer, who is now officiating. The church has furnished its quota of preachers, or at least there are quite a number who have gone from this body into various fields, and are laboring successfully in proclaiming "the gospel of the kingdom." We find among others the names of Brn. D. Mathewson, J. Ferris, and C. Pike. This, as well as other churches, has had to contend with adverse influences. Many have moved away, some have died, others have united elsewhere, some have backslid; but there are quite a goodly number now, who are looking for the return of the Nobleman, and are striving to keep the banner of truth unfurled, so that they with all the host of God may hear the King say at last, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." We are hoping and praying that the ranks that have been thinned may be filled up by new recruits, so that we may present a solid front to the enemy, and successfully make aggressive movements on his forces, and in the "name of the Lord set up our banners."

There is published in this place a weekly newspaper, of respectable appearance—"The Sandy Hill Herald," having quite an extensive circulation for a paper published in an inland village. About eighteen miles from this place, on the line of the Rensselaer and Saratoga R. R., is located Saratoga Springs—one of the great watering places of the world. This place has a world-wide reputation, on account of its numerous mineral springs. Thousands resort here annually during the summer months for the recuperation of their physical energies, and health, generally, and doubtless experience great benefit from drinking of the waters of these springs. The most noted of these springs are the Geyser, Empire, High Rock, Star, Excelsior, Hathon, and Seltzer. Many diseases are said to be cured by drinking this water; such as those of a cutaneous nature, and kidney diseases, liver complaints, dyspepsia, billiousness, acidity of stomach, constipation, etc. We think these waters must exert a powerful influence over the human system; partaking as they do so largely of mineral substances. Many of the mineral elements enter into the composition of the physical body, that are found in these waters. Among the many fountains of a mineral character, the Geyser or the "Spouting Spring," seems to take the lead in point of popularity. This wonderful fountain was discovered in February, 1870. It was developed by experimental drilling in the solid rock. The water vein was struck by the drill in the birds-eye limestone, one hundred and forty feet beneath the surface rock. The water immediately commenced spouting at the surface, being forced up from the depth of the earth by the pressure if its own carbonic acid gas, spouting to the height of thirty feet. The orifice bored in the rock is five and a half inches in diameter; through which the water is continually forced up day and night, by its own gas. The water of the Geyser is said to possess wonderful remedial elements; some of which are the following:—chloride of sodium, chloride of potassium, fluoride of calcium, bi-carbonate of magnesia, bi-carbonate of iron, etc.

In Saratoga there is an Advent Christian church, under the pastoral charge of Bro. and Sr. Durand. May God greatly bless them.

AMUSING.

BRO. GRANT:—A rich little incident, in relation to the Crisis, occurred here (Pittsburgh, Pa.) recently, which I must relate.

A lady and her son, both members of the M. E. church, residents of this city, and regular recipients and readers of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, have for some time past been also favored with the Crisis and its reading. One Sunday morning, only a few weeks since, the son's attention was arrested by the earnest calling out of—

"Mark! Mark! MARK!"

"What, mother?"

"Come here, Mark! come here!"

Entering the room where his mother sat, with the Advocate in one hand, and the Crisis in the other, he said—

"Well, mother, what is the matter?"

"Why, Mark, this paper,—take it away; I don't want it here any longer; it has got to be as bad as any of the others; it is so sectarian and one-sided, I don't want it any more. I used to think it was tolerant, and had some charity for other people besides those of its own particular views; but it has got to be just like all the rest; take it away."

Mark, wondering what had so moved his mother's ire against the Crisis, requested her to point out the offending article; when she very significantly pointed to an article in the Christian Advocate (and it was taken away), supposing it all the while to be the Crisis. That REMAINS. G. W. STETSON.

THE NEXT ADMINISTRATION.

F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

Again the seasons have run their rounds, and we are near the close of another year. We have seen and heard during the year much to remind us that the earth still groans under the curse, and also that decay and death continue doing their work. The wicked still do wickedly, and evil men and seducers wax worse and worse. While knowledge is increased in the earth, and many are running to and fro, demons and their helpers in human form are in haste to fill up the measure of their crimes, seeming in some sense to realize that their time is short. Two great armies are about to meet on the appointed field, to fight the last great battle, the battle of the great day. That day will show the folly of fighting against God. The result of that battle will settle the question regarding our future form of government, and there will be no longer any doubt in regard to the fitness to rule of that King who shall "reign in righteousness."

Human governments thus far have failed to give satisfaction. They have been more or less corrupt, oppressive, partial, and transitory. But the government of the Prince who is to come will not be open to any of these charges. When the Anointed One shall take the kingdom under the whole heaven, and reign "from the river unto the ends of the earth," there will be no more agitation or rebellion throughout his vast domain. No question in regard to a successor, no desire for a change of government or of rulers. For he shall reign forever, and of his kingdom and dominion there shall be no end. Reader, are you a servant of this king? The decision must soon be made. All who love, serve, and obey him shall have endless life, and all who rebel against him must perish.

FULL SALVATION.

Precious Savior, thou hast saved me;
Thine, and only thine, I am;
O! the cleansing blood has reached me—
Glory, glory to the Lamb!

Long my yearning heart was trying
To enjoy this perfect rest;
But I gave all trying over—
Simply trusting, I was blest.

Trusting, trusting every moment,
Feeling now the blood applied;
Lying at the cleansing fountain,
Dwelling in my Savior's side.

Worldly things cannot attract me,
I have counted all as dross;
All my pleasure and my glory
Is in clinging to the cross.

Precious Jesus! how I praise thee
For thy wondrous love to me—
That thou mad'st me, so unworthy,
Light in thy pure light to see!

Now I'm thine, oh, deign to use me!
Let me thy dear image bear;
Magnify thy great salvation—
All thy love and power declare.

Consecrated to thy service,
I will live and die to thee;
I will witness to thy glory
Of salvation full and free.

Yes, I will stand up for Jesus;
He has sweetly saved my soul,
Cleansed me from inbred corruption,
Sanctified, and made me whole.

Glory to the blood that bought me!
Glory to its cleansing power!
Glory to the blood that keeps me!
Glory, glory, evermore!

—Advocate of Chris. Holiness.

WORDS OF COMFORT.

MARVIN W. LUTZ.

Look up, sad soul! Behind a frowning providence, God hides a smiling face. Though fire has burned, and clouds have gathered darkness, and the tempest has threatened instant destruction, and the monster death has robbed you of your fairest treasures, or poverty stares you in the face, remember the sun shines just as bright as ever, and we know the darkest hour is just before day. Do you bemoan and condemn yourself, and think it is because you have offended a just God? I counsel you to remember his servant Job. When he lost all, was it because he had sinned? Nay, verily; but to show forth to that idolatrous generation what the power and grace of God could do for his servant, who lived in obedience to his command. Although tempted and tried like as you are, he came out like pure gold. Job's afflictions were to refine him, and put on the polish, that he might the more beautifully reflect the image of his Maker, and convince his hypocritical friends where his trust was. It may be God wants some Jobs now. Who are willing? Who can say in the hour of adversity, Though he slay me, I will trust him. Though I love my all, I will not despair. His grace will be sufficient for you. The scourging iron burns the flesh, and it takes more than moral courage to stand for God in these days of fire and tempest, sickness and death; but if we stand in the strife till the end of life, like Paul and Job we will hear him say, when he comes again—"Well done, good and faithful servant, . . . enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

If God designs to use you for his glory, depend upon it, every bit of your patience will be tried, and every nerve put to the rack. If you can stand the wrenching and breaking of bones, the scourging and the trials; if there is any gold in you, it will be qualified to reflect the image of your Maker, and fit you to be useful in this life, and for a home in paradise restored, when Jesus comes to be a King. It will manifest to those around that you have been with Jesus, and learned of him. "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

If trials here below bow down your heart in sadness,
It's only for the night, we shall happy, happy be;
We know their cheer ahead, the past is cold and dead,
Brighter days will dawn, a welcome sight for thee.

Don't you see, the better land's before us,
Brighter days will dawn on you as well as me;
For there we all will meet upon the golden street,
Sorrows are unknown upon that better shore.

"SITTING UNDER HIS SHADOW."—The Rev. Mr. Young was one stormy day visiting one of his people, an old man, who lived in great poverty in a lonely cottage. He found him sitting with the Bible open on his knees, but in outward circumstances of great discomfort, the snow drifting through the roof and under the door, and scarcely any fire on the hearth.

"What are you about to-day, John?" was Mr. Young's question on entering.

"Ah! sir," said the happy saint, "I'm sitting under His shadow with great delight."

LETTER FROM HAVERHILL.

Haverhill, Mass., Oct. 25th, 1872.

Editor Journal:—Last Sabbath evening we had the pleasure of listening to an able and cheering lecture from Rev. Wm. H. Spencer, at his church in Crescent Place; subject, "The Golden Age." Mr. Spencer found his text in 1 Cor. 2: 9—"Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." The subject was handled in a thorough and master-like manner. After a short introduction the speaker spoke of the creation of man. He did not believe that man had fallen from Paradise; he said there had been no fall of man, that the first inhabitants of the earth were but very little above the brute creation, and that ever since man had been improving in every thing that was for the better.

In regard to Darwinism, the speaker thought it of little consequence. He thought it of more importance to know "what I am now," than "where I came from, or where I am going to." All the revelations of archeology show that the first inhabitants of the earth were of the lowest brutality. History and all the recent discoveries plainly teach that the world was nothing but a battle-ground for the ancients; that every thing found that was used by them was some implement to kill with. The height of their ambition was to kill. Was it so now? Truly man is advancing in every thing which makes him better. The Golden Age is in the future, not in the past. Man did not fall from a paradise, but is slowly and steadily rising into one. The millennium will come yet. Bad as man is to-day, by comparison he is much better than in the past. The present age is much better than the ancient Jewish time. The speaker alluded to Abraham. That he was considered a good man in his day, but what would become of a man to-day if he were to do what Abraham did?

After alluding to several other important points, the speaker alluded to skepticism in the present age, and he was glad of it, that it was a good sign. That where there was skepticism there was progress and faith. There is more faith in honest doubt than in all the creeds. God's hand is on the rudder, and the race is moving on. Humanity is still in its infancy, though many thousand years old. Man was never banished from a beautiful paradise, but an angel stands beckoning us on to the golden age before us, and we are just entering it. The speaker closed by reading, in a very earnest manner, that beautiful poem, "The good time now." Excellent music was furnished by the choir, and the whole service was full of life and instruction.

"A LITTLE WHILE."

Oh for the peace which floweth as a river!
Making life's desert places bloom and smile;
Oh for a faith to grasp that bright "forever,"
Amid the shadows of earth's "little while."

"A little while" for patient vigil keeping,
To face the storm, to wrestle with the strong;
"A little while" to sow the seed with weeping,
Then bring the sheaves and sing the harvest song.

"A little while" to wear the robe of sadness,
To toil with weary steps through erring ways;
Then to pour forth the fragrant oil of gladness,
And grasp the girdle of the robe of praise.

"A little while" 'mid shadow and delusion,
To strive by faith life's mysteries to spell;
Then read each dark enigma's clear solution;
Then hail light's verdicts, He doeth all things well.

"A little while" the earthern pitcher taking
To wayside brooks from far-off fountains fed;
Then the parched lip its thirst forever slaking
Beside the fullness of the Fountain Head.

"A little while" to keep the oil from failing;
"A little while" faith's flickering lamp to trim,
And then the Bridegroom's coming footsteps hailing,
To haste to meet him with the bridal hymn.

And he who is at once both Gift and Giver,
The future glory, and the present smile,
With the bright promise of the glad "forever"
Will light the shadows of the "little while."

THE WAYS OF GOD.

A. BOYNTON.

"Have I not chosen you twelve, and one of you is a devil?" John 6: 70. If it was in the economy of God in past ages to use, yea, chose, wicked men, through whom to accomplish many of his purposes, why not now? Has he not a right to do what he will with his own? If one out of Jesus' own selecting were found a devil, think you a less ratio now will be found, when sinful men have so much to do with setting men in the ministry? Has the church, by schools, theology, and the accumulated wisdom of the sages, so purified herself as to be measurably free from evil men? Nay, verily. What saith the record? "Evil men and seducers [or teachers] shall wax worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived." 2 Tim. 3: 13. And this calamitous state of things is so to increase, that Jesus, by the spirit of prophecy, exclaims—"When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" Luke 18: 8. This would give the child of God far greater sadness, were he not conscious of the fact that our heavenly Father reigns, and his broad promise, covering all circumstances and conditions, is accepted as strong comfort and support, so that with the apostle he can say—"And we know that all things work together for good, to them that love God; to them who are the called according to his purpose." Rom. 9: 28. For further light, strength and comfort, in this direction, please read the rest of the chapter.

In building a nice edifice, much lumber is necessary for staging; but when the house is finished, it may be used as fuel. Here is a rule of general application. It is so in the church. Pharaoh in the beginning of God's church under Moses, and Judas at its more glorious development under Jesus, were used of God as instruments of his power to carry out his purposes. So, in all things, we learn to see and realize the unseen; and this causes the soul to rest, although earth's tumultuous waves run high, and fiercely lash the rock-bound shore; rest in hope of the full completion and perfection of the temple of God, when grace shall end in glory, and prayer be lost in praise.

THE Rev. John Clark was asked one day by a friend how he kept himself from being involved in quarrels. He answered—"By letting the angry person always have the quarrel to himself." This saying had great influence on some of the inhabitants of the town where he resided; for when a quarrel was likely to ensue, they said, "Come, let us remember Mr. Clark, and leave the angry man to quarrel by himself." If this maxim were followed, it would be a vast saving of expense, of comfort, and of honor to thousands of the human race.

THERE are three things which make good ballast for a christian,—knowledge, grace, and experience. Knowledge, sanctified knowledge, to ballast the head; grace, to ballast the heart; and experience. Treasure up your experiences,—what manifestations from God, what temptations, what victory over them, what bitterness in sin, what sweetness in Christ. The remembrance of these may be of use.

THE Rev. T. Carter once came unexpectedly behind one of his parishioners, who was busily engaged in his trade as a tanner. He gave him a pleasant tap on the shoulder; the good man looked behind him, started, and said—

"Sir, I am ashamed that you should find me thus employed."

Mr. Carter replied—"Let Christ, when he cometh, find me so doing."

"What!" said the good man, "doing this?"

"Yes," said Mr. C., "faithfully performing the duties of my calling."

DR. JUDSON once said, "I am not tired of my work, neither am I tired of the world; yet when Christ calls me, I shall go with the gladness of a boy bounding away from school. Death will never take me by surprise, do not be afraid of that, I feel so strong in Christ."

Hygiene.

"This is for your Health."—Paul.

HEALTH OF PREACHERS.—Preaching is favorable to longevity. Preachers ought to outrank philosophers and scientists in approximating, if not actually reaching, "a green old age." Why they should excel the men of philosophy and science in the race for length of days, we may explain hereafter. Suffice it to say at this time, that although preaching, as an exercise, is eminently conducive to health, the duties attaching to the clerical profession render its members necessarily more irregular in the hours of labor and in personal habits.

Clergymen, as a rule, when away from home, are the "best abused" class of persons extant. Not intentionally, however. It is generally through unintelligent kindness or downright carelessness. When they visit among their friends, they do not have the plain, wholesome food they are accustomed to at home. The dainties and nick-nacks, kindly intended, are sure to give them a premonition of the dyspepsia, unless they show discourtesy by refusing. And when they go from their warm, perhaps over-heated, rooms in the city to see their country friends "in cold, stormy weather," they are put in cold, damp bed-rooms, and perhaps retire with cold feet, that grow colder half the night, rendering refreshing sleep impossible.

We advise clergymen to treat themselves, and demand treatment of others, as though they were mentally and physically subject to precisely the same material influences as all other human beings. They should write their sermons, or think them out in the fore-part of the day, and never work on them or at anything else requiring strong mental effort in the sitting position, less than two hours after dinner. Evenings, when given to mental labor, should be devoted to lighter and promiscuous work-revising, reviewing, reading (not studying), making notes, etc.—Science of Health.

WHY WE SHOULD WEAR BEARDS.—There are more solid inducements for wearing the beard than the mere improvement of a man's personal appearance and the cultivation of such an aid to the every-day diplomacy of life. The hair of the moustache not only absorbs the moisture and miasma of the fogs, but it strains the air from dust and the soot of our great, smoky cities. It acts also in the most scientific manner, by taking heat from the warm breath as it leaves the chest, and supplying it to the cold air taken in. It is not only a respirator, but with a beard entire we are supplied with a comforter as well, and these are never left at home like the umbrella and all such appliances when they are wanted. Moffatt and Livingstone, the explorers, and many other travelers, say that at night no wrapper can equal the beard. A remarkable fact is, too, that the beard, like the hair of the head, protects against the heat of the sun, it acts as the thatch does to the ice-house; but, more than this, it becomes moist with perspiration, and then, by evaporation, cools the skin.

A man who accepts this protection of nature may face the rudest storm and the hardest winter. He may go from the hottest room into the coldest air without dread; and we verily believe he might sleep in a morass with impunity; at least, his chance of escaping the terrible fever would be better than his beardless companions.—American Artisan.

PURE COLD AIR.—Don't be afraid to go out of doors because it is a little colder than usual. The cold air will not hurt you if you are properly protected, and exercise enough to keep the circulation alive. On the contrary, it will do you good; it will purify your blood, it will strengthen your lungs, it will improve your digestion, it will afford a natural, healthful stimulus to your torpid circulation, and strengthen and energize your whole system. The injury which often results from going into a cold atmosphere is occasioned by a lack of protection to some part of the body, exposure to strong drafts, or from breathing through the mouth. Avoid these, and you are safe.

Don't be afraid to sleep in a cold room at night with the window open. Cold air, if pure, will not hurt you at night any more than in the day, if you are protected by sufficient clothing and by breathing through the nostrils. If you do not breathe thus, acquire the habit as soon as possible.

If you wish to be subject to colds, coughs, and fevers, shut yourself in close, hot rooms day and night. If you wish to be free from their companionship, always have plenty of pure air to breathe, night and day, take daily out-door exercise regardless of the weather, except as to protection, and eat, drink, and bathe, as a christian should.—Good Health.

CARE OF THE TEETH.—Rosseau said that no woman with fine teeth could be ugly. The too early loss of the first teeth has an unfavorable influence upon the beauty and duration of the second. The youngest should accordingly be made to take care of them. All that is necessary is to brush them several times a day with a little ordinary soap, or magnesia and water. After eating, the particles of food should be carefully removed from the teeth by means of a tooth-pick of quill or wood, but never of metal. Camphorated and acid tooth powders are injurious, both to the enamel and the gums, and, if employed, every particle should be removed from the gums by carefully rinsing. The habit which some ladies have of using a bit of lemon, though it may whiten the teeth, and give a temporary firmness and color to the gums, is fatal to the enamel, as are all acids. No one, young or old, should turn their jaws into nut-crackers; and it is even dangerous for women to bite off, as they often do, the ends of thread in sewing. It is not safe to bring very hot food or drink, especially if immediately followed by anything cold, in contact with the teeth.—Country Gentleman.

EARTH POULTICES.—The value of earth as a disinfectant and deodoriser is well known, and the treatment of ulcerated sores and gangrenous wounds with it is becoming very general. A new application of this system has lately been described, namely, the use of clay as a dressing for the face in two cases of confluent small-pox—dusting it, in fine powder, over the faces of the patients as soon as the pustules become fairly developed. This, it is stated, formed a clean, dry, wholesome scab, absorbing the infectious material, scaling off during convalescence, and leaving the underlying skin in its natural and normal state. The painful and persistent itching, which is well known as one of the worst characteristics of the disease, was by this simple means entirely abated. The earth used was fine pipe clay.—Herald of Health.

DISOBEDIENCE TO PARENTS.

Robert, and Henry, and John, were at home for the mid-summer holidays.

"Father," said Robert one fine morning, "may we not take the boat and sail down the river till dinner time?"

"By no means," said Mr. H. "I could not trust you alone, for fear of some accident. I am pretty sure you would not sit still, and then your danger would be very great."

"O yes," said Henry, "we will, if you will but let us go; we will be sure to be quiet, and to take care—and there is scarcely any wind this morning."

"I have no objection to your having a sail," said Mr. H., "but you must not go by yourselves. I forbid your doing so. I will speak to Thomas, the gardener; he knows well how to manage the boat, and he shall go with you in about an hour." Mr. H. then went out from home for the day.

As soon as he was gone, Robert said, "I am sure I would not wait; the gardener may not be ready all day. I am old enough to manage the boat; I have often been out with my father."

"Yes, but," said John, "father forbade our going alone; and so we must not go."

"But how will he know it?" said Robert; "he is gone out, and won't be at home till five o'clock. We shall come back long before that time; and if Thomas does not tell him, how will he know? And I can speak to him to say nothing about our having gone by ourselves." They, therefore, determined to go.

The boat went on very well for some time, as the breeze was but a gentle one. And Robert said, "I am glad we have not got the gardener with us; he would have spoiled all our sport, and we can do better without than with him; as if we could not manage the boat, indeed!"

But now the breeze became a brisk gale, and the boat had scarcely enough of ballast for the largeness of the canvas. The young people did not pay any attention to this circumstance, as they were busy at play; in an instant, therefore, when they all ran to one side of the boat, it upset and threw them into the river.

Happily, the gardener missing them, and fearing some accident, hastened down by the side of the river. He just came up to them as the misfortune happened; and as he could swim very well, he leaped into the stream, and by great efforts he saved Henry and John from a watery grave.

But disobedient Robert sank, and could not be found. The current bore him down so far that his body was not seen for several days afterward, when it was brought to his distressed father by a fisherman.

Dear children, remember how Robert was drowned because he would not do as his father bade him; and do not forget that no good ever did or ever can come from disobedience to parents.—London Teacher's Offering.

DON'T BE COWARDS.

"I won't tell a lie! I won't be a coward!" said a fine little fellow, when he had broken a little statue of his father's in showing it to his playmates, and they were telling him how he could deceive his father and escape a scolding. He was right. Cowards tell lies; brave little boys tell the truth. So was Charlie Mann right, and was rewarded for it, as the following story will show:

A young offender, whose name was Charlie Mann, smashed a large pane of glass in a drug store, and ran away at first, for he was slightly frightened; but he quickly began to think, "What am I running for? It was an accident; why not turn about and tell the truth?"

No sooner thought than done. Charlie was a brave boy; he told the whole truth—how the ball with which he was playing slipped out of his hand, how frightened he was, how sorry, too, at the mischief done, and how willing to pay if he had the money.

Charlie did not have the money, but he could work, and to work he went at once, in the very store where he broke the glass. It took him a long time to pay for the large and expensive pane he had shattered; but when it was done, he had endeared himself so much to the storekeeper by his fidelity and truthfulness, that he could not hear of his going away, and Charley became his clerk. "Ah, what a lucky day it was when I broke that window," he used to say.

"No, Charlie," his mother would respond, "what a lucky day it was when you were not afraid to tell the truth."—Youth's Companion.

BEWARE OF IMPATIENCE.—There's many a pleasure in life which we might possess, were it not for our impatience. Young people, especially, miss a great deal of happiness, because they cannot wait till the proper time. A man once gave a fine pear to his little boy, saying to him, "The pear is green, now, my boy, but lay it by for a week, and it will then be ripe, and very delicious."

"But," said the child, "I want to eat it now, father."

"I tell you it is not ripe yet," said the father, "it will make you sick."

"No it won't, father, I know it won't, it looks so good. Do let me eat it."

After a little more teasing, the father consented, and the child ate the pear. The consequence was, that the next day he was taken sick, and came very near dying. Now all this happened because the child was impatient. He could not wait, and accordingly, the pear that might have been very pleasant and harmless, was the occasion of severe illness. Thus it is that impatience, in a thousand instances, leads children, and pretty old ones too, to convert sources of happiness into actual mischief and misery.

UNUSED SPICES.

"Now upon the first day of the week, very early in the morning, they came unto the sepulchre, bringing the spices which they had prepared."—Luke 24: 1.

What said those women as they bore
Their fragrant gifts away—
The spices that they did not need
That resurrection day?

Did Mary say within her heart—
"Our work hath been in vain"?
Or, counting o'er the spices bought,
Of so much waste complain?

Not so; for though the risen Lord
Their offering did not need,
Not unrewarded was the love
That planned the reverent deed.

For, though unused their fragrant store,
Yet well might they rejoice,
Since they the first who saw the Lord,
The first who heard his voice.

Sweet story, hast thou not some truth
For my impatient heart—
Some lesson that shall stay with me,
Its comfort to impart?

Have I not gathered in the past,
In days that are no more,
Of spices sweet and ointment rare,
What seemed a precious store?

A little knowledge I had gained,
A little strength and skill;
I thought to use them for my Lord,
If such should be his will.

Alas! my store unused hath been,
The strength I prized hath gone;
My weary hands have lost their skill,
And yet my life goes on.

In all the busy work of life
I have but scanty share,
And scanty is the service done
For Him whose name I bear.

So many plans and hopes have died,
In weariness and pain,
My heart cries out, in sore distress—
"Was all my work in vain?"

Be still, sad heart, thy hopes and plans
Are known to One divine;
He knoweth all thou wouldst have done,
Had greater strength been thine.

My unused spices! Dearest Lord,
They were prepared for thee;
Yet if for them thou hast no need,
Let love my offering be.

NEWS FROM ENGLAND.

(From our English Correspondent.)

My letter should start to-day with "Ebenezer," for God has prospered us so far in testimony for his name as to give us a room at Weymouth, which we have rented for twelve months, having faith that he will provide the means for its sustenance. On Sunday evening last it was nearly filled, and those present listened with great attention and interest. How truly then do we say, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us."

Monday, we left our headquarters for Pulham, having received an invitation from the brethren living there. We found a very devoted people at this place, who extended us a cordial welcome to their homes and hospitalities. But never did we so realize the state of the agricultural poor as we now do. The poverty of the people here is truly affecting; yes, almost to tears. It has long been an old truism that the farm-laborer of Dorset is an under-paid hireling; but this has often been regarded as a wolf-cry originated by chronic grumblers. I am sorry, however, to have to confirm the complaint; and never would I have believed such a condition of affairs existed in my native country had I not verified them personally. Even our Bro. George A. Brown now says, "I am ashamed of my own country!"

The wages of the laborer here amount to the colossal and extraordinary sum of $2.50 a week! Out of this paltry, even insignificant pittance, they have to provide food, house, clothing, fuel, and education, for themselves and families. And what makes the matter still worse is that some of the laborers are irregularly paid, and are consequently set at a disadvantage through the carelessness of their employers. Provisions are getting very high in England. Since I left this country, two years ago, they have taken a long upward stride, and they are becoming still dearer. Many of the necessaries of life are as dear here as in America. Bread is fifteen to sixteen cents a loaf; butter from thirty-two to thirty-six cents a pound; cheese at from twelve to twenty-four cents a pound; beef at twenty to twenty-two cents (bone not cut out); and pork at sixteen cents. And I ask you to realize what livelihood can be got out of $2.50 per week, for a man with a family, with prices so high as those quoted? Alas! it is not a living; the supply of nutriment is often less than the demand and waste; so that declining health and gradual starvation are frequently the portion of this dear people. Meat seldom graces the table of these honest but indigent individuals. A bit of the hardest and least nutritious cheese is, with bread, the alpha and the omega of edibles.

I am thinking now of a case of a family living near one of our brethren; and it is far from being the worst in the neighborhood. It is composed of father, mother, and six children. Father is a laborer, and I am credibly informed one of the steadiest and best in the vicinity. He has had long experience, thoroughly understands his work, is tough and enduring, abstains from the poisoned cup, and is altogether a worthy man. And what do you imagine the gold worth of such a man's services per week? Eight shillings and something called a house; not too good for pigs to live in! How can eight people pick up even crumbs on this? They cannot; so two of the juveniles are turned out to toil through the tender years of childhood, while they should be learning and playing. These earn, respectively, five shillings and one shilling and sixpence. Thus the total earnings of the family are fourteen shillings and sixpence. But should a wet day prevent the parent from working, that day's wages is deducted from his pay. Now, supposing that his life is "ALL work, and no play," the family receipts are $3.48 gold. This is to feed, warm, clothe and instruct eight persons; or to speak individually, a subsistence for each must be dragged out of forty-three cents per week! A person to live on forty-three cents a week, with food prices nearly on a par with those of New England! How can they live? There's the question—and the mystery also. It is not quite enough to buy three loaves of bread a week for each "living soul"—say nothing of butter, cheese, tea, firing, and education. A coat for father puts away three weeks' wages. How do they live? Bread—and not enough of that. Half a pound of bacon a week among the whole eight! Rags—anything they can beg for clothes. Education—what one of our brethren gives them in a night school. Alas! alas! Can you wonder that the hearts of such people grow weary, and that they become self-depreciated, till they lose all ambition, esteem life a necessary evil, and death—to use a phraseology of their own—"a happy release"? Home, what sort of a place is it? Only an old tumble-down hut, with flooring of cold and broken flagstones, and walls of cement, falling down for want of repairs. The furniture!—indeed the name is a sarcasm on the one dilapidated wooden chair, and the little low form. Where will they get fuel for the winter? That's what they ask. They can only dread the teeth of the frost, and sit and shiver in the darkness, praying God to send warmer weather and finer days. Could you see the mother, how you would feel—I trust, in your pockets! The pallor of her face shows her pressing need of staminal aliment; and her whole appearance is a strong prayer to a man who has a sixpence left in his pocket, and a spark of pity in his soul. I would to God he would open the heart and pocket of some brother, who wants help, to send for the man!

But this is only a case by way of example. The consequence of such ill-paid labor is, that little boys of five and six years of age are compelled to leave home, and go out into the fields to scare birds, or do little chores on the farm, to get even a crust. These little ones are "booted" with clumps of leather of great thickness, covered on the bottom with large hob-nails, iron toe caps and cues, till they are crippled, their legs are stiffened, and they limp like old men. Let me picture one. In the morning he gets his food bag, into which his mother puts a piece of bread (with sometimes a piece of double-skimmed-milk cheese), to last the brave little man till night. He goes to work at six o'clock. Nine o'clock comes; he is hungry, and uses his teeth on the piece of bread, which rapidly lessens till it is gone—eaten. Dinner time comes; but he has nothing to eat, except some motherly dame or kind-hearted "chum," a trifle better off, should say, "Jake, he's a part of my crust!" Such is the poverty of the Dorset laborer, and I make these assertions with cases in my mind, and proofs at my fingers' ends.

Still worse, these people are priest-ridden as any Catholic community. I can now say what I never did before of "the church as by law established." It is a notoriously wicked and cursed institution. The "priest," as he now calls himself in the ritualistic section, is, to borrow the words of Wesley, "a supreme nuisance." He is intolerant to the last degree,—a miserable pestiferous "varmint," as the country illiterate say. Should a man become converted, go to a dissenting meeting, or be what God made him, a MAN, he is cut off from all the charities (shame to say charities; it is nothing but his rights, in another form). Here is a case in point. It is an old woman of nearly seventy years. Five shillings were coming to her out of the coal club, but she opened her house for a prayer-meeting, and the coal was withheld. To be a dissenter is to lose the grocery ticket. To be a dissenter, is to lose the mess of pottage, or the basin of soup from the parson's kitchen. To be a dissenter is to be cold all the winter night, with no use of the charity blanket. To be a non-conformist is to be a social martyr, a martyr for years, even life, which is far less to be preferred than a brief personal martyrdom at the stake. A late specimen of a priest at a village parish, when spoken to of a dissenting minister, raised himself in supercilious scorn, and said with disdain—"What! me, a gentleman, talk to that blackguard!" He professed to be a successor of the apostles. Doubtless this "gentleman" successor forgot his ancestry—a Peter, with a fishy smell; a Matthew, a public tax-gatherer; a Paul, a knotty-handed tent-maker! If his gentility were only such as theirs, he might well be proud.

The taxes levied to support this "house of death"—this admirable church—are amazing. Small farmers are "screwed," cry, or no cry. One small field near by, two acres in size, is subject to a tax of nearly $2.50 per year, gold. The brother who has given me some light on this subject rents a small farm, which is taxed for the church nearly $100. No wonder the "Church of England" has in her "service" so many "God have mercy's upon us!" She wants them badly enough; but she will never get them. We have come to this people with the word of life—"the gospel of our salvation"; and they have received it as hungry men receive food.

Yesterday we concluded a week of services, and not without profit. It is true, there are no conversions to report; but the saints were comforted, edified and blessed. There was also a deep conviction resting on the unconverted, and we sincerely hope that the seed will yet germinate, stem, fill and ripen to the praise of the God of heaven. Two believers were taught the first step of obedience in public profession of Christ, and they consented to the teaching, waiting only an opportunity, while one other brother is also ready to confess our Lord, and wait in faith, hope and joy his revelation from heaven.

They want a chapel. O that America would stretch out the hand of brotherly love to them! The spirit of hearing is great here. They have only a little room to meet in—twelve feet by twelve—and the desire to hear is so intense that this place, which is far too strait, is filled to overflowing. On Tuesday and Sunday evenings last, about sixty persons were crowded into this small space, and some went away disappointed, unable to gain admission—not able to hear that they might believe! Every other night, though the weather was very inclement and unpropitious, a goodly number were in attendance, who gave to us a pressing call to come again. They want a chapel. I wish we could assist them. They are certainly too poor to raise one themselves, many of them being unable to contribute two cts. a week. They are one with us, and are willing to come into fellowship with a conference which we are proposing for the south and west of England. They hold the life views, and are waiting for the kingdom of God. If they had a chapel, they could get many more in, and it would be filled. An estimate has been made for a good, plain, substantial, brick building, twenty feet by thirty-five, and for the land, building, seating, and light fixtures, the cost would be about $685. I can cordially recommend this to the notice of those who are entrusted with the wealth of this world, and who desire to serve God with their substance. It would give a chance to many to hear and be pleased; and the donor of the money for its erection would in no wise lose his reward.

Here, then, is ground with standing corn. Shall we enter in and reap? Brethren, say, what shall be done? We are your servants for Christ's sake. Will you give the poor of England a place in which to hear the gospel? The brethren here send their love to you, their American brothers. Do all that is in your hearts. Address letters to the care of Geo. T. Adams, Boston, Mass. W. K.

THE cross once seen is death to every vice.

SANDY HILL, N. Y.

G. W. STETSON.

On the banks of the grand old Hudson, in Washington County, N. Y., is located the quiet little village of Sandy Hill. This village embraces within its corporated limits about three thousand inhabitants, and is noted, among other things, for its spirit of enterprise and for its being a county seat. There are six churches in this village, including the Advent Christian church, which holds regular service on the Sabbath. The Advent church was organized about twenty years ago; during which time it has had the following pastors:—Elds. J. Perry, S. G. Mathewson, O. R. Fassett, C. H. Leverton, R. Mosher, and the writer, who is now officiating. The church has furnished its quota of preachers, or at least there are quite a number who have gone from this body into various fields, and are laboring successfully in proclaiming "the gospel of the kingdom." We find among others the names of Bro. D. Mathewson, J. Ferris, and C. Pike. This, as well as other churches, has had to contend with adverse influences. Many have moved away, some have died, others have united elsewhere, some have backslid; but there are quite a goodly number now, who are looking for the return of the Nobleman, and are striving to keep the banner of truth unfurled, so that they with all the host of God may hear the King say at last, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." We are hoping and praying that the ranks that have been thinned may be filled up by new recruits, so that we may present a solid front to the enemy, and successfully make aggressive movements on his forces, and in the "name of the Lord set up our banners."

There is published in this place a weekly newspaper, of respectable appearance—"The Sandy Hill Herald," having quite an extensive circulation for a paper published in an inland village. About eighteen miles from this place, on the line of the Rensselaer and Saratoga R. R., is located Saratoga Springs—one of the great watering-places of the world. This place has a world-wide reputation, on account of its numerous mineral springs. Thousands resort here annually during the summer months for the recuperation of their physical energies, and health generally, and doubtless experience great benefit from drinking of the waters of these springs. The most noted of these springs are the Geyser, Empire, High Rock, Star, Excelsior, Hathon, and Seltzer. Many diseases are said to be cured by drinking this water; such as those of a cutaneous nature, and kidney diseases, liver complaints, dyspepsia, billiousness, acidity of stomach, constipation, etc. We think these waters must exert a powerful influence over the human system; partaking as they do so largely of mineral substances. Many of the mineral elements enter into the composition of the physical body, that are found in these waters. Among the many fountains of a mineral character, the Geyser or the "Spouting Spring," seems to take the lead in point of popularity. This wonderful fountain was discovered in February, 1870. It was developed by experimental drilling in the solid rock. The water vein was struck by the drill in the birds-eye limestone, one hundred and forty feet beneath the surface rock. The water immediately commenced spouting at the surface, being forced up from the depth of the earth by the pressure of its own carbonic acid gas, spouting to the height of thirty feet. The orifice bored in the rock is five and a half inches in diameter; through which the water is continually forced up day and night, by its own gas. The water of the Geyser is said to possess wonderful remedial elements; some of which are the following:—chloride of sodium, chloride of potassium, fluoride of calcium, bi-carbonate of magnesia, bi-carbonate of iron, etc.

In Saratoga there is an Advent Christian church, under the pastoral charge of Bro. and Sr. Durand. May God greatly bless them.

AMUSING.

BRO. GRANT:—A rich little incident, in relation to the Crisis, occurred here (Pittsburgh, Pa.) recently, which I must relate.

A lady and her son, both members of the M. E. church, residents of this city, and regular recipients and readers of the Pittsburgh Christian Advocate, have for some time past been also favored with the Crisis and its reading. One Sunday morning, only a few weeks since, the son's attention was arrested by the earnest calling out of—

"Mark! Mark! MARK!"

"What, mother?"

"Come here, Mark! come here!"

Entering the room where his mother sat, with the Advocate in one hand, and the Crisis in the other, he said—

"Well, mother, what is the matter?"

"Why, Mark, this paper,—take it away; I don't want it here any longer; it has got to be as bad as any of the others; it is so sectarian and one-sided, I don't want it any more. I used to think it was tolerant, and had some charity for other people besides those of its own particular views; but it has got to be just like all the rest; take it away."

Mark, wondering what had so moved his mother's ire against the Crisis, requested her to point out the offending article; when she very significantly pointed to an article in the Christian Advocate (and it was taken away), supposing it all the while to be the Crisis. That REMAINS. G. W. STETSON.

THE NEXT ADMINISTRATION.

F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

Again the seasons have run their rounds, and we are near the close of another year. We have seen and heard during the year much to remind us that the earth still groans under the curse, and also that decay and death continue doing their work. The wicked still do wickedly, and evil men and seducers wax worse and worse. While knowledge is increased in the earth, and many are running to and fro, demons and their helpers in human form are in haste to fill up the measure of their crimes, seeming in some sense to realize that their time is short. Two great armies are about to meet on the appointed field, to fight the last great battle, the battle of the great day. That day will show the folly of fighting against God. The result of that battle will settle the question regarding our future form of government, and there will be no longer any doubt in regard to the finsess to rule of that King who shall "reign in righteousness."

Human governments thus far have failed to give satisfaction. They have been more or less corrupt, oppressive, partial, and transitory. But the government of the Prince who is to come will not be open to any of these charges. When the Anointed One shall take the kingdom under the whole heaven, and reign "from the river unto the ends of the earth," there will be no more agitation or rebellion throughout his vast domain. No question in regard to a successor, no desire for a change of government or of rulers. For he shall reign forever, and of his kingdom and dominion there shall be no end. Reader, are you a servant of this king? The decision must soon be made. All who love, serve, and obey him shall have endless life, and all who rebel against him must perish.

FULL SALVATION.

Precious Savior, thou hast saved me;
Thine, and only thine, I am;
O! the cleansing blood has reached me—
Glory, glory to the Lamb!

Long my yearning heart was trying
To enjoy this perfect rest;
But I gave all trying over—
Simply trusting, I was blest.

Trusting, trusting every moment,
Feeling now the blood applied;
Lying at the cleansing fountain,
Dwelling in my Savior's side.

Worldly things cannot attract me,
I have counted all as dross;
All my pleasure and my glory
Is in clinging to the cross.

Precious Jesus! how I praise thee
For thy wondrous love to me—
That thou mad'st me, so unworthy,
Light in thy pure light to see!

Now I'm thine, oh, deign to use me!
Let me thy dear image bear;
Magnify thy great salvation—
All thy love and power declare.

Consecrated to thy service,
I will live and die to thee;
I will witness to thy glory
Of salvation full and free.

Yes, I will stand up for Jesus;
He has sweetly saved my soul,
Cleansed me from inbred corruption,
Sanctified, and made me whole.

Glory to the blood that bought me!
Glory to its cleansing power!
Glory to the blood that keeps me!
Glory, glory, evermore!

—Advocate of Chris. Holiness.

WORDS OF COMFORT.

MARVIN W. LUTZ.

Look up, sad soul! Behind a frowning providence, God hides a smiling face. Though fire has burned, and clouds have gathered darkness, and the tempest has threatened instant destruction, and the monster death has robbed you of your fairest treasures, or poverty stares you in the face, remember the sun shines just as bright as ever, and we know the darkest hour is just before day. Do you bemoan and condemn yourself, and think it is because you have offended a just God? I counsel you to remember his servant Job. When he lost all, was it because he had sinned? Nay, verily; but to show forth to that idolatrous generation what the power and grace of God could do for his servant, who lived in obedience to his command. Although tempted and tried like as you are, he came out like pure gold. Job's afflictions were to refine him, and put on the polish, that he might the more beautifully reflect the image of his Maker, and convince his hypocritical friends where his trust was. It may be God wants some Jobs now. Who are willing? Who can say in the hour of adversity, Though he slay me, I will trust him. Though I love my all, I will not despair. His grace will be sufficient for you. The scourging iron burns the flesh, and it takes more than moral courage to stand for God in these days of fire and tempest, sickness and death; but if we stand in the strife till the end of life, like Paul and Job we will hear him say, when he comes again—"Well done, good and faithful servant, . . . enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

If God designs to use you for his glory, depend upon it, every bit of your patience will be tried, and every nerve put to the rack. If you can stand the wrenching and breaking of bones, the scourging and the trials; if there is any gold in you, it will be qualified to reflect the image of your Maker, and fit you to be useful in this life, and for a home in paradise restored, when Jesus comes to be a King. It will manifest to those around that you have been with Jesus, and learned of him. "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

If trials here below bow down your heart in sadness,
It's only for the night, we shall happy, happy be;
We know their cheer ahead, the past is cold and dead,
Brighter days will dawn, a welcome sight for thee.

Don't you see, the better land's before us,
Brighter days will dawn on you as well as me;
For there we all will meet upon the golden street,
Sorrows are unknown upon that better shore.

"SITTING UNDER HIS SHADOW."—The Rev. Mr. Young was one stormy day visiting one of his people, an old man, who lived in great poverty in a lonely cottage. He found him sitting with the Bible open on his knees, but in outward circumstances of great discomfort, the snow drifting through the roof and under the door, and scarcely any fire on the hearth.

"What are you about to-day, John?" was Mr. Young's question on entering.

"Ah! sir," said the happy saint, "I'm sitting under His shadow with great delight."

LETTER FROM HAVERHILL.

Haverhill, Mass., Oct. 25th, 1872.

Editor Journal:—Last Sabbath evening we had the pleasure of listening to an able and cheering lecture from Rev. Wm. H. Spencer, at his church in Crescent Place; subject, "The Golden Age." Mr. Spencer found his text in 1 Cor. 2: 9—"Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." The subject was handled in a thorough and master-like manner. After a short introduction the speaker spoke of the creation of man. He did not believe that man had fallen from Paradise; he said there had been no fall of man, that the first inhabitants of the earth were but very little above the brute creation, and that ever since man had been improving in every thing that was for the better.

In regard to Darwinism, the speaker thought it of little consequence. He thought it of more importance to know "what I am now," than "where I came from, or where I am going to." All the revelations of archeology show that the first inhabitants of the earth were of the lowest brutality. History and all the recent discoveries plainly teach that the world was nothing but a battle-ground for the ancients; that every thing found that was used by them was some implement to kill with. The height of their ambition was to kill. Was it so now? Truly man is advancing in every thing which makes him better. The Golden Age is in the future, not in the past. Man did not fall from a paradise, but is slowly and steadily rising into one. The millennium will come yet. Bad as man is to-day, by comparison he is much better than in the past. The present age is much better than the ancient Jewish time. The speaker alluded to Abraham. That he was considered a good man in his day, but what would become of a man to-day if he were to do what Abraham did?

After alluding to several other important points, the speaker alluded to skepticism in the present age, and he was glad of it, that it was a good sign. That where there was skepticism there was progress and faith. There is more faith in honest doubt than in all the creeds. God's hand is on the rudder, and the race is moving on. Humanity is still in its infancy, though many thousand years old. Man was never banished from a beautiful paradise, but an angel stands beckoning us on to the golden age before us, and we are just entering it. The speaker closed by reading, in a very earnest manner, that beautiful poem, "The good time now." Excellent music was furnished by the choir, and the whole service was full of life and instruction.

"A LITTLE WHILE."

Oh for the peace which floweth as a river!
Making life's desert places bloom and smile;
Oh for a faith to grasp that bright "forever,"
Amid the shadows of earth's "little while."

"A little while" for patient vigil keeping,
To face the storm, to wrestle with the strong;
"A little while" to sow the seed with weeping,
Then bring the sheaves and sing the harvest song.

"A little while" to wear the robe of sadness,
To toil with weary steps through erring ways;
Then to pour forth the fragrant oil of gladness,
And grasp the girdle of the robe of praise.

"A little while" 'mid shadow and delusion,
To strive by faith life's mysteries to spell;
Then read each dark enigma's clear solution;
Then hail light's verdicts, 'He doeth all things well.

"A little while" the earthern pitcher taking
To wayside brooks from far-off fountains fed;
Then the parched lip its thirst forever slaking
Beside the fullness of the Fountain Head.

"A little while" to keep the oil from failing;
"A little while" faith's flickering lamp to trim,
And then the Bridegroom's coming footsteps hailing,
To haste to meet him with the bridal hymn.

And he who is at once both Gift and Giver,
The future glory, and the present smile,
With the bright promise of the glad "forever"
Will light the shadows of the "little while."

THE WAYS OF GOD.

A. BOYNTON.

"Have I not chosen you twelve, and one of you is a devil?" John 6: 70. If it was in the economy of God in past ages to use, yea, chose, wicked men, through whom to accomplish many of his purposes, why not now? Has he not a right to do what he will with his own? If one out of Jesus' own selecting were found a devil, think you a less ratio now will be found, when sinful men have so much to do with setting men in the ministry? Has the church, by schools, theology, and the accumulated wisdom of the sages, so purified herself as to be measurably free from evil men? Nay, verily. What saith the record? "Evil men and seducers [or teachers] shall wax worse and worse, deceiving, and being deceived." 2 Tim. 3: 13. And this calamitous state of things is so to increase, that Jesus, by the spirit of prophecy, exclaims—"When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" Luke 18: 8. This would give the child of God far greater sadness, were he not conscious of the fact that our heavenly Father reigns, and his broad promise, covering all circumstances and conditions, is accepted as strong comfort and support, so that with the apostle he can say—"And we know that all things work together for good, to them that love God; to them who are the called according to his purpose." Rom. 9: 28. For further light, strength and comfort, in this direction, please read the rest of the chapter.

In building a nice edifice, much lumber is necessary for staging; but when the house is finished, it may be used as fuel. Here is a rule of general application. It is so in the church. Pharaoh in the beginning of God's church under Moses, and Judas at its more glorious development under Jesus, were used of God as instruments of his power to carry out his purposes. So, in all things, we learn to see and realize the unseen; and this causes the soul to rest, although earth's tumultuous waves run high, and fiercely lash the rock-bound shore; rest in hope of the full completion and perfection of the temple of God, when grace shall end in glory, and prayer be lost in praise.

THE Rev. John Clark was asked one day by a friend how he kept himself from being involved in quarrels. He answered—"By letting the angry person always have the quarrel to himself." This saying had great influence on some of the inhabitants of the town where he resided; for when a quarrel was likely to ensue, they said, "Come, let us remember Mr. Clark, and leave the angry man to quarrel by himself." If this maxim were followed, it would be a vast saving of expense, of comfort, and of honor to thousands of the human race.

THERE are three things which make good ballast for a christian,—knowledge, grace, and experience. Knowledge, sanctified knowledge, to ballast the head; grace, to ballast the heart; and experience. Treasure up your experiences,—what manifestations from God, what temptations, what victory over them, what bitterness in sin, what sweetness in Christ. The remembrance of these may be of use.

THE Rev. T. Carter, once came unexpectedly behind one of his parishioners, who was busily engaged in his trade as a tanner. He gave him a pleasant tap on the shoulder; the good man looked behind him, started, and said—

"Sir, I am ashamed that you should find me thus employed."

Mr. Carter replied—"Let Christ, when he cometh, find me so doing."

"What!" said the good man, "doing this?"

"Yes," said Mr. C., "faithfully performing the duties of my calling."

DR. JUDSON once said, "I am not tired of my work, neither am I tired of the world; yet when Christ calls me, I shall go with the gladness of a boy bounding away from school. Death will never take me by surprise, do not be afraid of that, I feel so strong in Christ."

Hygiene.

"This is for your Health."—Paul.

HEALTH OF PREACHERS.—Preaching is favorable to longevity. Preachers ought to outrank philosophers and scientists in approximating, if not actually reaching, "a green old age." Why they should excel the men of philosophy and science in the race for length of days, we may explain hereafter. Suffice it to say at this time, that although preaching, as an exercise, is eminently conducive to health, the duties attaching to the clerical profession render its members necessarily more irregular in the hours of labor and in personal habits.

Clergymen, as a rule, when away from home, are the "best abused" class of persons extant. Not intentionally, however. It is generally through unintelligent kindness or downright carelessness. When they visit among their friends, they do not have the plain, wholesome food they are accustomed to at home. The dainties and nick-nacks, kindly intended, are sure to give them a premonition of the dyspepsia, unless they show discourtesy by refusing. And when they go from their warm, perhaps over-heated, rooms in the city to see their country friends "in cold, stormy weather," they are put in cold, damp bed-rooms, and perhaps retire with cold feet, that grow colder half the night, rendering refreshing sleep impossible.

We advise clergymen to treat themselves, and demand treatment of others, as though they were mentally and physically subject to precisely the same material influences as all other human beings. They should write their sermons, or think them out in the fore-part of the day, and never work on them or at anything else requiring strong mental effort in the sitting position, less than two hours after dinner. Evenings, when given to mental labor, should be devoted to lighter and promiscuous work-revising, reviewing, reading (not studying), making notes, etc.—Science of Health.

WHY WE SHOULD WEAR BEARDS.—There are more solid inducements for wearing the beard than the mere improvement of a man's personal appearance and the cultivation of such an aid to the every-day diplomacy of life. The hair of the moustache not only absorbs the moisture and miasma of the fogs, but it strains the air from dust and the soot of our great, smoky cities. It acts also in the most scientific manner, by taking heat from the warm breath as it leaves the chest, and supplying it to the cold air taken in. It is not only a respirator, but with a beard entire we are supplied with a comforter as well, and these are never left at home like the umbrella and all such appliances when they are wanted. Moffatt and Livingstone, the explorers, and many other travelers, say that at night no wrapper can equal the beard. A remarkable fact is, too, that the beard, like the hair of the head, protects against the heat of the sun, it acts as the thatch does to the ice-house; but, more than this, it becomes moist with perspiration, and then, by evaporation, cools the skin.

A man who accepts this protection of nature may face the rudest storm and the hardest winter. He may go from the hottest room into the coldest air without dread; and we verily believe he might sleep in a morass with impunity; at least, his chance of escaping the terrible fever would be better than his beardless companions.—American Artisan.

PURE COLD AIR.—Don't be afraid to go out of doors because it is a little colder than usual. The cold air will not hurt you if you are properly protected, and exercise enough to keep the circulation alive. On the contrary, it will do you good; it will purify your blood, it will strengthen your lungs, it will improve your digestion, it will afford a natural, healthful stimulus to your torpid circulation, and strengthen and energize your whole system. The injury which often results from going into a cold atmosphere is occasioned by a lack of protection to some part of the body, exposure to strong drafts, or from breathing through the mouth. Avoid these, and you are safe.

Don't be afraid to sleep in a cold room at night with the window open. Cold air, if pure, will not hurt you at night any more than in the day, if you are protected by sufficient clothing and by breathing through the nostrils. If you do not breathe thus, acquire the habit as soon as possible.

If you wish to be subject to colds, coughs, and fevers, shut yourself in close, hot rooms day and night. If you wish to be free from their companionship, always have plenty of pure air to breathe, night and day, take daily out-door exercise regardless of the weather, except as to protection, and eat, drink, and bathe, as a christian should.—Good Health.

CARE OF THE TEETH.—Rossean said that no woman with fine teeth could be ugly. The too early loss of the first teeth has an unfavorable influence upon the beauty and duration of the second. The youngest should accordingly be made to take care of them. All that is necessary is to brush them several times a day with a little ordinary soap, or magnesia and water. After eating, the particles of food should be carefully removed from the teeth by means of a tooth-pick of quill or wood, but never of metal. Camphorated and acid tooth powders are injurious, both to the enamel and the gums, and if employed, every particle should be removed from the gums by carefully rinsing. The habit which some ladies have of using a bit of lemon, though it may whiten the teeth, and give a temporary firmness and color to the gums, is fatal to the enamel, as are all acids. No one, young or old, should turn their jaws into nutcrackers; and it is even dangerous for women to bite off, as they often do, the ends of thread in sewing. It is not safe to bring very hot food or drink, especially if immediately followed by anything cold, in contact with the teeth.—Country Gentleman.

EARTH POULTICES.—The value of earth as a disinfectant and deodorizer is well known, and the treatment of ulcerated sores and gangrenous wounds with it is becoming very general. A new application of this system has lately been described, namely, the use of clay as a dressing for the face in two cases of confluent small-pox—dusting it, in fine powder, over the faces of the patients as soon as the pustules become fairly developed. This, it is stated, formed a clean, dry, wholesome scab, absorbing the infectious material, scaling off during convalescence, and leaving the underlying skin in its natural and normal state. The painful and persistent itching, which is well known as one of the worst characteristics of the disease, was by this simple means entirely abated. The earth used was fine pipe clay.—Herald of Health.

DISOBEDIENCE TO PARENTS.

Robert, and Henry, and John, were at home for the mid-summer holidays.

"Father," said Robert one fine morning, "may we not take the boat and sail down the river till dinner time?"

"By no means," said Mr. H. "I could not trust you alone, for fear of some accident. I am pretty sure you would not sit still, and then your danger would be very great."

"O yes," said Henry, "we will, if you will but let us go; we will be sure to be quiet, and to take care—and there is scarcely any wind this morning."

"I have no objection to your having a sail," said Mr. H., "but you must not go by yourselves. I forbid your doing so. I will speak to Thomas, the gardener; he knows well how to manage the boat, and he shall go with you in about an hour." Mr. H. then went out from home for the day.

As soon as he was gone, Robert said, "I am sure I would not wait; the gardener may not be ready all day. I am old enough to manage the boat; I have often been out with my father."

"Yes, but," said John, "father forbade our going alone; and so we must not go."

"But how will he know it?" said Robert; "he is gone out, and won't be at home till five o'clock. We shall come back long before that time; and if Thomas does not tell him, how will he know? And I can speak to him to say nothing about our having gone by ourselves." They, therefore, determined to go.

The boat went on very well for some time, as the breeze was but a gentle one. And Robert said, "I am glad we have not got the gardener with us; he would have spoiled all our sport, and we can do better without than with him; as if we could not manage the boat, indeed!"

But now the breeze became a brisk gale, and the boat had scarcely enough of ballast for the largeness of the canvas. The young people did not pay any attention to this circumstance, as they were busy at play; in an instant, therefore, when they all ran to one side of the boat, it upset and threw them into the river.

Happily, the gardener missing them, and fearing some accident, hastened down by the side of the river. He just came up to them as the misfortune happened; and as he could swim very well, he leaped into the stream, and by great efforts he saved Henry and John from a watery grave.

But disobedient Robert sank, and could not be found. The current bore him down so far that his body was not seen for several days afterward, when it was brought to his distressed father by a fisherman.

Dear children, remember how Robert was drowned because he would not do as his father bade him; and do not forget that no good ever did or ever can come from disobedience to parents.—London Teacher's Offering.

DON'T BE COWARDS.

"I won't tell a lie! I won't be a coward!" said a fine little fellow, when he had broken a little statue of his father's in showing it to his playmates, and they were telling him how he could deceive his father and escape a scolding. He was right. Cowards tell lies; brave little boys tell the truth. So was Charlie Mann right, and was rewarded for it, as the following story will show:

A young offender, whose name was Charlie Mann, smashed a large pane of glass in a drug store, and ran away at first, for he was slightly frightened; but he quickly began to think, "What am I running for? It was an accident; why not turn about and tell the truth?"

No sooner thought than done. Charlie was a brave boy; he told the whole truth—how the ball with which he was playing slipped out of his hand, how frightened he was, how sorry, too, at the mischief done, and how willing to pay if he had the money.

Charlie did not have the money, but he could work, and to work he went at once, in the very store where he broke the glass. It took him a long time to pay for the large and expensive pane he had shattered; but when it was done, he had endeared himself so much to the storekeeper by his fidelity and truthfulness, that he could not hear of his going away, and Charley became his clerk. "Ah, what a lucky day it was when I broke that window," he used to say.

"No, Charlie," his mother would respond, "what a lucky day it was when you were not afraid to tell the truth."—Youth's Companion.

BEWARE OF IMPATIENCE.—There's many a pleasure in life which we might possess, were it not for our impatience. Young people, especially, miss a great deal of happiness, because they cannot wait till the proper time. A man once gave a fine pear to his little boy, saying to him, "The pear is green, now, my boy, but lay it by for a week, and it will then be ripe, and very delicious."

"But," said the child, "I want to eat it now, father."

"I tell you it is not ripe yet," said the father, "it will make you sick."

"No it won't, father, I know it won't, it looks so good. Do let me eat it."

After a little more teasing, the father consented, and the child ate the pear. The consequence was, that the next day he was taken sick, and came very near dying. Now all this happened because the child was impatient. He could not wait, and accordingly, the pear that might have been very pleasant and harmless, was the occasion of severe illness. Thus it is that impatience, in a thousand instances, leads children, and pretty old ones too, to convert sources of happiness into actual mischief and misery.

The "Crisis" is devoted to the exposition of all Bible truth; especially the doctrine of the immediate, personal coming and reign of Christ on the earth; holiness of heart; the unconscious state of the dead; their literal resurrection, and final destruction of the wicked.

TRUST IN JESUS.

Christian! wherefore yield to sadness?
Fix thy heart and hopes above;
Look to Jesus, and with gladness
Trust his gracious, pardoning love;
Trials here will sorely press thee,
Let thy trust on him be stayed;
He will cheer, and guide, and bless thee
With his ever-present aid.

Think how kind, how condescending!
Jesus calls himself thy "Friend";
From his throne in glory bending,
He will every prayer attend.
He will never, never leave thee,
Through thy pilgrim days below;
Then at last he will receive thee,
And a crown of life bestow.

WOMAN FROM A BIBLE STAND-POINT: Or, DO THE SCRIPTURES FORBID THE PUBLIC LABOR OF WOMEN?

S. MATHEWSON.

If the rostrum, as well as the public press, both secular and religious, furnish a correct criterion by which to judge, public opinion allows woman a much wider sphere than it did a few years since. Facts have proved the efficiency of woman in filling many places requiring skill and talent. In many of the moral enterprises of the day, excelsior has often been written upon her efforts. Many are the examples where her tender, persuasive eloquence has won her fellow beings, of both sexes, from the paths of the destroyer.

In religious revivals, in the cause of temperance, in moral reform generally, her labors have been crowned with abundant success. And this very fact, coupled with the mistaken notion that Inspiration disapproves public effort in the female sex, has elicited infidel suggestions, like the following—If Paul were writing now, he would approve what he disapproved some eighteen hundred years since. Alas! what folly is this to charge upon God. As a man, Paul was mortal, of course, and liable to change of opinion; but what the Holy Spirit moved him to write more than eighteen hundred years since, remains the same to-day. Let us ever bear in mind that the Scriptures were not written by the will of man, or of the flesh, but holy men wrote as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. Were these suggestions from an avowed infidel, then the proof, which is clear and abundant, should be given of their Divine origin; but they come from those professing to receive them as the will of God to man, the Word, or law, which shall judge them at the last day. Hence, they greatly dishonor the Scriptures and their Author.

A professed Christian gentleman, after listening to a lady revivalist, argued that the reason why Paul discarded female labor was, that he was a bachelor; that he did not appreciate the sex. Heaven save us from such blasphemy! Sad indeed is it that the divinity of the Word of God should thus be supplanted by its professed friends. No marvel at the declaration of our Creator—"Thou thoughtest I was altogether such an one as thyself." Yes; because poor erring man changes his mind so much, he imagines his Creator does the same. But, oh man, there is neither variableness nor shadow of turning in the God of the Bible.

The Bible is a book of facts, and the present design is, to offer the facts relative to woman's sphere as set forth by Divinity itself.

There seems to have been no change relative to the position allotted woman by Deity, since the happy pair were excluded from Eden's bowers. So far as exercising her gift in public was concerned, it was the same under the Law as under the Gospel, as we shall find by the Apostle's teaching in 1 Cor. 14: 34.

But first let us glance at woman's creation. She was the last piece of Divine mechanism attesting creative power. A beautiful and perfect earth existed, teeming with animal and vegetable excellence, all adapted to the service and pleasure of man. Yet there was a lack which elicited the declaration—"It is not good that the man should be alone." Then immediately followed the benevolent design and Divine proposition—"I will make him an helpmeet for him"; or, more properly, helpmate. Says Dr. Adam Clarke—"If this word be rendered scrupulously literal, it signifies one like or as himself, standing opposite to or before him: implying that the woman was to be a perfect resemblance of the man, possessing neither inferiority or superiority, but being in all things like and equal to himself." The very term helpmate seems to indicate, at least, her position to be the opposite of what modern fancy may have painted her—a kind of sylph-like creature, partaking more of the ethereal than the material; a beautiful statue, a doll, a mere plaything, destined to no share in the sober realities of life. Nay, a helpmate is a being that can sympathize with and enter the sphere of meditation and feeling peculiar to man, and assist him in all the vocations of life, whether physical or mental.

The term helpmate so clearly implies a companion as well as an assistant, that many have volunteered to define the term as being wholly of a domestic nature. But where is the authority for such a definition? Does her Creator even hint such a thing? Nay, verily. Shall we not then safely conclude that the many examples of holy women as given in the Scriptures are patterns for us to copy, and give us the proper definition? And if, on examination of the Sacred Oracles, we find holy women rendering efficient aid to man in other than domestic matters, will it not be safe for those possessing like gifts to follow in their footsteps?

It is true, the Scriptures abound in patterns of excellence found in the vale of domestic life. The Apostle recognizes Sarah, the wife of Abraham, as belonging to this class, and points her out as a model for Christian women. He particularly recommends her reverential obedience to her husband's office, as the oracle of God. Heaven had bestowed honor upon him, and she paid great deference to this holy position, calling him "lord." But did this destroy her individuality? Did she sit down in listless unconcern as though free from responsibility? Nay. It is quite apparent she sought that wisdom which is from above, for herself; hence her excellent judgment relative to important matters connected with the moral well-being of her family. Abraham did not agree with her opinion of the case, until he heard the voice of God saying—"In all that Sarah hath said unto thee, hearken unto her voice." Here is an example, then, where a deeply pious, intelligent prophet of God is directed to listen to the counsel of a pious wife.

Sarah did not assume the leadership, or try to lord it over her husband; but it appears she had sought and received heavenly instruction upon a point concerning which Abraham's mind had been biased. And, as Mr. Fowler of phrenological reputation says—"Woman is the natural counselor and adviser of man, her organism proving the same." Sarah here only acted the part of a true helpmate.

But regarding the claim that the Apostle Paul discarded the pious public labor of females. So far was this Apostle from debarring pious women from improving the talent committed to them, he gives the most ostensible appreciation of such labor, in that he plainly acknowledges the fact of laboring with them himself; and not only this, but he writes to his particular friend in the ministry to have him assist such women—help them along. Hear him—"And I entreat thee also, true yoke-fellow, help those women which labored with me in the gospel." What man ever exercised truer Christian courtesy towards a woman laboring in any moral enterprise?

But when viewed in the light of Inspiration, it is plain that God approves of woman doing all she can for the good of the human family. But after all this, says one, Paul does forbid women even speaking in a public meeting of the saints. Does he? Now, to say nothing of Inspiration by the Holy Spirit, or even religious principle in the matter, it is quite a grave charge against a well-educated writer that he plainly contradicts himself; and Paul, unlike most of the Apostles, was a highly educated man; and, much more than this, he was the recipient of many miraculous gifts from God,—as being inspired to write the Scriptures, conferring the Holy Spirit upon others by laying on of hands, healing the sick, and raising the dead. Now shall we accuse such an one of contradicting himself? or shall we accuse the Holy Spirit of such blasphemous absurdity?

But does not Paul, in harmony with other scriptures, teach that man is the head? He does. He teaches that man being created first, and the woman being first deceived, are the two reasons why she should not teach in a dictatorial manner the opposite sex. But what does this prove against the public labor of pious women? In the same passage where it says—"The head of the woman is the man," it says also—"The head of Christ is God." But that does not prove that Christ has no public labor of his own to perform. Nay, verily. Neither does it prove that woman should take no share in witnessing for Christ, and laboring with an apostle in the gospel.

But, says one, how do you harmonize this helping women to preach the gospel, and then directing them to "keep silence in the churches," and refrain from teaching, etc? I understand the Scriptures to teach that there is a time to speak, and there is a time to refrain from speaking, for woman, as well as for man; and that there is a time when women are to refrain from speaking in the church, which privilege is allowed to man; also a time and place where she is not to teach. I know of but two places in the Scriptures which are quoted to prove that women are to take no part in public worship; the one is found in 1 Cor. 14: 34, 35—"Let your women keep silence in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak; but they are commanded to be under obedience, as also saith the law. And if they will learn anything, let them ask their husbands at home; for it is a shame for women to speak in the church." The other is in 1 Tim. 2: 11, 12—"Let the woman learn in silence with all subjection. But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence."

These scriptures are plain and positive. It is apparent that neither trope or figure is employed here by the sacred writer, but the passages evidently mean just what the plain letter of the Word expresses; no more, no less. They prove beyond contradiction that there is a restriction laid upon woman from which the other sex is free. They plainly teach that women must learn something; that is, gain knowledge at church; and this must be done silently. Had the customs of divine worship, that is, of listening to the minister of God's word, been as at present, there would have been but little danger of breaking this command, even had it been imposed upon both sexes. But the customs were far different then, and called for this restriction, as we shall see. Says Dr. Adam Clarke—"It was permitted any man to ask questions, to object, altercate, attempt to refute a speaker, in the synagogue; but this liberty was not allowed any woman."

Paul's object seems to be to show that the same custom should exist in the Christian church relative to this matter, as in the Jewish church. Thus his remark, "As also saith the law." Does not the context here prove this particular imposition of silence on the female sex to be on just such an occasion? "If they will learn anything," showing conclusively the object of this speaking is to learn, being quite a different motive than imparting knowledge or witnessing for Christ, comforting, exhorting, or even explaining a text of Scripture. The idea is simply this—If woman does not understand or doubts relative to the statements of a preacher, they must ask at home, and not question or dispute in public with the opposite sex. This prohibition is absolute, and means all it says; therefore, whoever knowingly violates this command is just as culpable as one who knowingly violates any other command. It had never been allowed in the Jewish church, and the teaching of Inspiration here is, that such questioning and debating was equally indecorous for Christian women. But, as before remarked, little danger exists now of violating this rule, on account of the change of custom in questioning public preachers. It is very rare now, and would be considered a great breach of propriety in the sanctuary, that men even should question the statements of a public preacher; but formerly it was common practice. But whatever be the usage relative to this practice, this prohibition will ever remain binding upon Christian women.

But this being the only interdiction of Inspiration relative to the public speaking of women in the church, it in no way debars her from doing what she can for Christ, by way of imparting light upon scriptural truth, or otherwise laboring for the salvation of her fellow beings.

It is quite obvious the other passage referred to in Timothy refers to the same circumstance, but makes one addition, which we will notice hereafter. Its context proves the fact. It is this—"Let the woman learn in silence"; in Corinthians, let them "keep silence"; that is, without questioning in their assemblies of worship. Both passages command absolute silence in the church, or public assemblies; either on a special occasion, or on all occasions. To say that it teaches women shall never open their mouths in the church, proves too much. Now from the context of each of these scriptures does it not appear obvious when and where women are to keep silence in the church?

We will now look at the phrase in Timothy not found in Corinthians. In addition to the command that the woman "learn in silence," it says—"But I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence"; and renders this reason—"For Adam was first formed, then Eve. And Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression." Now is it not apparent that the general scope and bearing of these texts, with their contexts, is what has before been alluded to, viz., that "man is the head" and that woman shall accede to this as the Divine arrangement? This idea is embodied in the command relative to the conjugal relation,—that man shall love his wife, as Christ loved the church, and the wife see that she reverence her husband; proving, of course, she is to regard him as her head, because it is utterly impossible to reverence what is below us. The woman, then, must not usurp or seize upon that authority which belongs to man.

But can a woman instruct, or expound a text of Scripture, without dictating, or usurping authority over the opposite sex? Can she publicly labor for the moral amelioration of mankind, in revivals of religion, in the cause of temperance, in moral reform generally, without seizing upon any authority especially belonging to man? If so, does she at all infringe upon the teachings of the above scripture? What Christian man feels robbed of any power or authority because the voice of a pious and talented woman is listened to, as she pleads in tender accents for the sinner to receive Christ and be saved; or reasons of temperance, seeking to rescue the fallen and degraded, and save those who are just entering the paths of the destroyer?

The idea seems to be this: that wherever teaching is connected with authority or dictatorship over the opposite sex, woman is to forbear. It shows there is one restriction on woman's teaching, but does not prove she is not to teach anywhere, under any circumstances. If we should thus wrest this scripture from its obvious meaning, giving it an absolute sense, we shall find most Christian churches and families are constantly acting contrary to its demands. But allowing it the place designed by Inspiration, it clothes woman with that modesty becoming her sex, while it allows her the full exercise of those gifts with which nature and grace may have endowed her.

SANCTIFICATION.

W. A. P. GILBERT.

"For this is the will of God, even your sanctification."—1 Thess. 4: 3.

I would not lower this standard. No, no! I wish to maintain it scripturally and intellectually. I believe that God's plan for saving men is a reasonable one, and so plainly given in the Bible that all would see it, if they desired, as clearly as that two and two make four, if it were not for the fog of former teachings, and consequently the darker cloud of Spiritualism, which is fast lowering down upon the church, to close entirely and forever the eyes of those who do not love and obey the truth.

I wish now to answer those who say they are willing to give up all, and yet do not find peace and joy. Let us see if you are not deceiving yourself. Do you not feel in your heart something like this: I will not be satisfied until I have received a certain blessing and state of feeling, or until I feel that peace or blessing that others speak of enjoying? I know that some of you will say, "Yes; and should I be satisfied without it?" Brother, or sister, do you see those three little words at the head of what you have just sanctioned, "I WILL NOT"? What does that mean? O! it means that you have got a will of your own yet; that will is not lost in God's will. When it is, you will say and feel in the deepest corner of your heart, "Not my will" how I feel, what I am, or where I am, "but thine, O Lord, be done." Then peace like a river, pure and steady, deep and healthful, will pervade your whole being. You can then see the storms arise and billows roll, yet feel that you are safely anchored to that within the vail, with no fears for the future. You live by the moment, trusting in God, knowing that He who has said, My grace is sufficient for you, will give it in every time of need, and in every temptation will make a way for your escape.

But others wish to ask, Why is it we do not keep this peace? You say, "I have often enjoyed it for a little season, and as often lost it, I know not how nor why." I answer, It is because of the fog. You have not understood God's plan of saving by faith alone; and not seeing plainly how we obtain that peace, we would not be likely to see how to retain it. If it is obtained alone by submitting your will to God's will (faith alone can do this), it is retained alone by keeping your will on the altar. Everything goes with the will. When your will is consecrated, your all is there, and will remain there as long as your sacrifice of will is on the altar. Withdraw your will, and you no longer walk by faith, or in the light; and in what you do submit, or consecrate, you measure out to God to buy his favor or appease his wrath. This will never bring that peace that passeth all understanding. It is not necessary for us to say in our hearts, I will NOT preach the gospel, or give my goods to feed the poor, or confess I have been wrong, or do any other duty made known to us, in order to break up or disturb that peace. It is sometimes lost by willing to be more holy than God wills us to be, or doing more than God wills us to do. For instance, I have known a number of devoted men and women who have enjoyed this peace, walking in the light for months, and some for years, and the devil, seeing he could not keep them below the mark, in making them say, "I cannot or will not do this or that," tempted them to feel, "I have done well now, I can do better; I will be more holy than I have been; I will do more good than I have done"; and thus they begin to look around for the means, and, through the false teaching, they begin to pray for sanctification; whereas, they had been entirely given up to God for months or years. Or they pray to be filled with the Holy Ghost, or that they may be made as holy as it is possible for man to be; also begin to devise their own schemes for doing good, showing their zeal for the Lord. Some of those persons have soon felt their loss, and after groping in darkness for awhile, found their way back to peace, by the first process of submitting their will to God's will, while others have given up a profession altogether; but the greater part of them were left to fall into delusion, teaching things contrary to the word of God; some denying it altogether, others believing they are led by the Spirit independent of the word, having visions, etc, etc.

Now, why have they thus made shipwreck of faith? It was because they did not see that they could not be more holy than to walk in obedience, trusting in God; waiting to know his will when to go, and when not to go; what to say, and what not to say; when to do, and when not to do; leaving the consequences with God. I once lost this peace, after enjoying it for nearly two years, by being wrongly taught on the subject of sanctification. I was young, and looked up to ministers and old professors with a reverential awe. I was in company with such one day (a privilege I did not often enjoy), when this subject came up, and, to my surprise, they said I must yet be sanctified; there was a greater blessing for me, even holiness. Supposing they knew all about it, I reasoned upon it in this way: If I am not holy, I am not what God wants me to be; and why should I pray and labor with and for others when I am not right myself? I had about five miles to go to reach home. I started alone on horseback, and had a good chance for reflection. I resolved, when parting with them, that I would make it my first business to seek this blessing, and was lost in meditation all the way. My horse brought me to my gate, when I awoke as it were from a dream, to find myself in utter darkness. The light had all gone out, my peace was gone, and for six long, bitter months I groaned, and prayed, and labored for sanctification, and every day found myself deeper in darkness, with no power to resist temptation, to feel wrong if I did not do wrong.

I will give one instance on this point. There was a cow in our yard which was very troublesome to milk; once I could milk her without a thought of impatience; now I found, however well I could govern my acts, I could not govern my feelings. A desire to scold, strike, or revenge, some way would come over me. I felt it was not so once. I chose to milk that cow to test myself, every time going to my room, asking for grace to overcome that feeling. I would then go praying with tears still bedewing my cheeks, sit down to milk, and the cow would commence her stepping and frisking, and the same feeling would come up, while my hopes went down. Although I never spoke cross to her or struck her, while others were wondering how I could be so patient, yet I felt almost as guilty as as though I had killed her. I went on through distress, temptation, and pain, amounting to an agony. I well remember the distress that at last filled my heart after asking, yes, pleading from time to time, for some one to show me the way to obtain the blessing I sought; for I said continually, I will not give up until I have found sanctification. After going with but little food or sleep for days, the time came when I could live so no longer. I laid all night in my room with my face upon the floor, agonizing and weeping until the tears formed a stream and ran some distance. In the morning I arose with feelings of utter despair, concluding my condition was hopeless. I could not work, eat, or sleep. After about two hours conflict with despair, I threw myself on my face again, and in agony cried out, Lord, I can do no more; take me, and do with me as seemeth good unto thee; and with the words the change came, a change I hardly dare to put into words, they seem to come so far short of conveying the whole truth; but I do know what Paul meant when speaking of the peace that passeth all understanding (Phil. 4: 7), and can also testify to the truth of the Psalmist's declaration, when he says—"Great peace have they that love thy law, and nothing shall offend them"; and to a hundred other similar texts. I felt their fulness, and went on my way rejoicing.

This, of course, was sanctification. I never doubted it, nor did any one who knew me; but how did I obtain it? Simply by one short step,—submitting my will to God's will; not by my struggling, or weeping, or praying, but by giving that all up; and the moment I felt willing to give up that will of mine, which said, I will not give up until I get the blessing, that very moment every nerve and muscle of body and mind relaxed; I threw myself into the arms of an Almighty God and loving Father, and my peace flowed like a river. I had to do this very thing, and in the same way, when I first believed, or was first converted, and received the same blessing of peace; the only difference was, as the darkness was greater, the light shone brighter. I then commenced just where I left off six months before—to live by faith; trusting in God for everything; believing that if I committed my way unto him, he would direct my steps; which has been fulfilled in my case. Several times since then have I taken my will from the altar, but soon saw where I was, and soon submitted again, sometimes within half an hour, sometimes longer.

This taking my will into my own hands always produced the same effect of darkness and confusion of mind; and submitting again always brought peace. All this proves to a certainty, as far as experience goes, that, in my case, when I submitted myself to God, trusting that he knew it all, and would do it all, I was then sanctified, justified, sins forgiven, ready to every good word and work; and it seems to me that every one that has a good foundation for hope, must look back to some point when he had peace in believing; a witness of the Spirit that he was a child of God; and this must have come through yielding his will to God's will; not a part of it, but the whole will. You must then have been sanctified, and all that was then necessary was to obey the injunction of the apostle, "As ye have received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him," growing up into Christ your living head. Grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth, and not be turned unto fables by the traditions of men, or trusting in man, thinking I can do this or that, or say so and so, or follow this one's or that one's example because he is a minister or a deacon, or because he is so much better than I am.

Now if we fall into any of these things we take our own will off the altar, and the consequence is darkness and confusion, trying to work out our own salvation by weeping, praying, good deeds, etc.; but inwardly we are condemned, knowing that we have not the fruits of the Spirit within, or perfect peace is not there; our light is gone out. "If our heart condemn us, God is greater than our hearts and knoweth all things. Beloved, if our heart condemn us not, then have we confidence toward God." 1 John 3: 20. Then, and not till then, are we justified; for we cannot be both justified and condemned at the same time. See other Scripture testimony on this subject. Paul says, in Rom. 8: 1—"There is therefore now no condemnation to them who are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." By reading to the ninth verse, you will find what is meant by walking after the Spirit—"But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Now if you have the Spirit, you will bring forth the fruits of the Spirit, one of which is that peace you seek, and which sanctification brings. You see, then, those who have the Spirit have no condemnation.

He that hath slight thoughts of sin, never had great thoughts of God.—Dr. Owen.

JESUS LOVES ME.

L. J. ADAMS.

"I am glad that Jesus loves me,
Jesus loves even me."

"Come and hear, all ye that fear God, and I will declare what he hath done for my soul." Perishing sinners, come and listen too, and may the Spirit of God awaken in your heart an earnest longing "to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge," and give you no rest day nor night, till you have washed in the blood which cleanseth from all sin.

I was a stranger to peace and happiness. There was an aching void in my heart, which only Jesus could fill, and I knew it; but I did not know when I knelt on the old camp-ground at Wilbraham, in the fall of '62, to have the children of God pray for me, how much happiness Jesus had in store for me in this life. Wisdom's "ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace."

"O let me kiss his bleeding feet,
And bathe and wash them with my tears;
The story of his love repeat
In every drooping sinner's ear,
That all may hear the welcome sound,
Since I, e'en I, have mercy found."

"He brought me up . . . out of a horrible pit, out of the miry clay, and set my feet upon a rock, and established my goings; and he hath put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God." My heart rejoiceth with joy unspeakable and full of glory. With Jesus I can be happy anywhere; without him, I should be unhappy everywhere. While he gives me life, my lips shall tell the story of his wonderful love to me. "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me bless his holy name."

My sins had separated me from God, and made me unfit to dwell in his presence, but the blood of Christ has washed away every stain, and no evil can befall me, for he has said—"Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Sorrow and suffering cannot come unless it is his will, and my heart says, "Not my will but thine be done." "He knoweth the way that I take. When he hath tried me, I shall come forth as gold;" so when trials come, I clasp my hands in prayer, and I send the coming tears back with the whispered word, He knows," and in the midst of sorrow rejoice, knowing that "our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." Death cannot lay his icy hand upon my brow until my work is finished, and why should I fear to fall asleep then? for my "life is hid with Christ in God. "When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."

"O glorious hour! O blest abode!
I shall be near and like my God."

The words of one who lived centuries ago have touched a responsive chord in my heart—"Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire beside thee." "As for me I will behold thy face in righteousness. I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." Yes, when I am permitted to behold the King in his beauty, I shall be fully satisfied, and not till then. All this the love of Jesus has done for me. What has it done for you?

"O! if there's only one song I can sing,
When in his beauty I see the great King;
This shall my song in eternity be,
O what a wonder that Jesus loves me?"

REMARKS ON DAN. 9: 25.

JOHN LYLE.

Information of "the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem" was given to Daniel the prophet, to be noted and comprehended by him, as a living witness of a remarkable epoch in the history of his own nation. The words of the angel show this—"O Daniel, I am now come forth to give thee skill and understanding, ... know therefore," etc. Such being the fact the commandment must have been issued either by Darius, the Mede, in whose reign the interview recorded took place, or by Cyrus, who succeeded him in about a year afterward, in the early part of whose reign Daniel died, Dan. 1: 21. Therefore it is unreasonable to suppose that the commandment intended by the angel came from any Persian king that reigned after Daniel's time; for how could he, a dead man, know anything about edicts of the successors of Cyrus? But it is unnecessary to advance an argument to prove that Cyrus gave the command, and that it went into effect and fulfilled the letter and spirit of the angel's instruction, for the prophet Isaiah predicted that Cyrus would do so, and Ezra has declared that he did do so. Isa. 44: 28; 45: 1-13; Ezra, chap. 1.

What is the object of this commandment? To relieve the Jews from their seventy years captivity, allow them to repair and inhabit the places in the land of their fathers which Nebuchadnezzar had laid waste, and thus fulfill the word of the Lord by Jeremiah 29: 10. Daniel had just witnessed the "punishment" of Babylon, which had been foretold in the above chapter, as a sign when their captivity would end. He is so moved by witnessing the fulfillment of Jeremiah's prophecy, which had been his study (Dan. 9: 2), that he comes before his God in supplication for his nation, fulfilling by the act just what the prophet said a godly, representative Israelite would do at the end of the captivity. Jer. 29: 12-14.

Daniel is then and there shown that the edict about to go forth would begin a prophetic line of sixty-nine weeks, or four hundred and eighty-three years, that would reach to Messiah the Prince, the Lord Jesus Christ, a greater than Cyrus, who will gather his elect from every land and establish them in a glorious inheritance, where the heavenly Jerusalem would be its joy and eternal excellency.

The time of Jesus' birth is a sure standpoint from which we can look back and find the date of the command of Cyrus. I will not occupy space to prove that our Lord was born about B. C. 5. I believe this date is generally accepted by Scripture expositors. (See Robinson's "Harmony of the Gospels." Boston, 1871.) They reject the so-called date of A. D. 1, known as the Vulgar Era, which was the result of the computations of a monk named Dyonisius, in the sixth century, and was not generally received till two centuries afterward. Jarvis' Chron. p. 104.

The publishers of our family Bibles reject the Vulgar Era date and place the birth of Christ at "the fourth year before the common account called Anno Domini," as we may see at the head of the second chapter of Matthew.

The birth of our Lord is the end of the sixty-nine prophetic weeks, and from this we look back four hundred and eighty-three years and come to the promulgation of Cyrus in about B. C. 488. Bro. Thurman has proved this position by astronomical and historical research, that cannot be set aside by simply quoting the commendations of some of the learned admirers of Ptolemy's Canon.

Thus we learn that the prophetic line of sixty-nine weeks gives no light on the time of the second advent of Christ, but it pointed out most clearly to the prophet and all the devout in the Jewish church the time of the first advent, and hence we are informed that at that time some pious Israelites were looking for the Messiah. Luke 2: 38.

We must look for a separate and distinct light on the time of our Lord's second coming. This may be found in the seventy prophetic weeks of Dan. 9: 24, and may be noticed hereafter.

RECEPTION DRESS.

S. R. GIFMAN.

"Heart purity," dwelt upon so much of late by some of the most devoted and faithful servants of Jesus, seems to be of the utmost importance just now when Christ is at the door. Without it, we will be all unprepared to receive him, and instead of greeting him with a glad smile of welcome, saying—"Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us," we shall be among those who will seek a hiding place "in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains;" crying—"Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; for the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand?" For without holiness no man shall see the Lord, but—"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." But there is no need for any of the Lord's children to be found thus unprepared. The glorious Bridegroom has made every provision for the complete readiness of his bride. He has detailed very minutely every requisite, even stating where and how each may be obtained; has explained to her by what means she can know when his coming "is nigh, even at the doors," and after every preparation has been made, he says to her—"Watch, therefore; for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come."

Ample time, and every opportunity being allowed for a complete preparation, would a true bride suffer herself to be found wanting in any requisite? much less the bridal robe? No, she would be all ready and waiting; earnestly looking and longing for the appearing of her lord.

When we are expecting a very dear friend, or a lover, to visit us, we first set every thing in and about the house in order; arranging every article in the way that we think will be most pleasing to his eye. We will toil early and late to accomplish our purpose, and even delight in it, counting it all joy—a real pleasure—because we are doing it for whom we love. But what is the last thing we do? It is to lay off our soiled, worn working-dress, and don one that is clean and new—the very best our wardrobe affords, taking every care to have our personal appearance faultless.

Thus it is with those who are looking for the coming of Jesus, their best and dearest friend. They have long been earnest and faithful workers in the vineyard of the Lord; having "endured a great fight of afflictions;" willing to bear reproach, and to be "made a gazing stock" for Jesus' sake; counting it all joy when they fall into divers temptations; taking joyfully the spoiling of their goods, knowing that they have "in heaven a better and enduring substance;" letting "patience have her perfect work," that after having done the will of God, they might receive the promise. And now that "signs there is no mistaking proclaim Messiah near," they are looking to their personal appearance, to see that all is in the divine order. They are laying aside every weight, and the sins which did so easily beset. Sin has no longer any dominion over them. Those "dogs of sin," referred to by Bro. Burr, though long chained, still existed; now they are being killed outright and thrown away. The bridal robe is one of righteousness, and the bride is sweetly resting and trusting in Jesus, patiently waiting for his coming. But while she is waiting, she is not slumbering, or idle, but is wide awake and watching unto prayer. She is keeping oil in the vessel, and her path "is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." The final preparation has been made, and she has on, as it were, the reception dress for Jesus. Let both writer and reader have on this dress of holiness.

Entire consecration is a precedent to holiness. God will not accept a mutilated sacrifice. You must recognize him as the sole proprietor of your whole being. It belongs to him; lay yourself right down on God's altar,—the offering never to be resumed. Body, soul, mind, will, culture, character, social position, kindred, property, friends, life, death, this entire devotement is an element of soul-life. You must seal the consecration with vows akin to the solemnity of an oath,—down on your knees, on your face in the dust, in the deepest self-abasement.—Rev. A. Lowry.

ARE WE READY?

What do we most need at the present time? What should receive our first attention? In what respect are we most likely to fail in the judgment? Will it be because we did not have a perfect knowledge of prophecy, or of all points of doctrine? We think no one would like to assume such a position. Then where is our danger? Why will many be rejected at the final judgment? The answer is easily given. Because their hearts were not pure. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Then it follows that the impure in heart shall not see him. This, and many other similar Scriptures, show the importance of having a clean heart. They that were "ready" went in to the marriage, and "the door was shut."

If no one can be "ready," unless he understands the chronology of the Bible, so that he can make it out definitely from creation, it is quite evident that but a very small number will be saved; for probably not one in a hundred of the lovers of Jesus understand history, prophecy and chronology well enough to make out with any degree of certainty the precise number of years since the creation of Adam. Even the best chronologers, who have made the subject a special study for years are not agreed; how, then, can it be expected that those who are unlearned, and have no means, talent, or time to search into these things, can be so well informed as to be fully satisfied that they know the precise number of years from creation? The Lord, in his his wisdom, has not seen fit to make our salvation depend upon a complete understanding of all the chronological periods. If this were the case, many of Jesus' warmest friends would be lost, who now ardently love his appearing, and are sweetly resting in his loving embrace. We are taught in the Scriptures that there is a crown for all those who "love his appearing." One may love his appearing without knowing when he is coming; and a person may believe he is coming at a given time and not be ready.

In the parable of the ten virgins, half were shut out from the marriage; not because they did not go forth to meet the bridegroom with a strong faith that he was coming at a definite time, but because they had no oil in their lamps. They could not go in the bridal procession with unburning lamps. Their lamps were of no use without oil. It is quite evident that the lamp represents the Bible, and the oil the Holy Spirit. "Now, if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Rom. 8: 9. "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption." Eph. 4: 30. "Be ye filled with the Spirit." Eph. 5: 18.

From these and many other passages, it appears evident that, in order to be ready for the coming of Christ, we must be filled with the Holy Spirit of God, which he is more willing to give than parents are to give good gifts to their children. A man may be filled with this Spirit who has never heard or read a word about any chronological arguments; or he may be destitute of the Spirit who has a thorough understanding of the subject of Bible chronology and prophetic periods; hence something more than a belief in the "definite time of the Lord's coming" is necessary to prevent our being found among the "foolish virgins." We must have the Spirit of Christ, or we shall not be ready for his coming.

We most firmly believe that the second advent of our Savior will take place within a brief period. The past and passing events foretold in prophecy leave no room for doubt in our mind. On this point we are settled. We long to see him coming, and feel all ready to meet him; but our readiness is not based on a clear knowledge of the commencement and termination of the prophetic periods; if it were, our evidence would be very unsatisfactory.

It has been our conviction for many years that a short time before the coming of Christ, his bride will in some way receive satisfactory evidence on the time of his coming; but she will be all ready before this information is given, and no one will get ready afterward. It will then be too late to obtain the oil, or to prepare. All things indicate that the time has now come to put on the bridal robes of Christ's righteousness, and stand waiting for his coming. We believe the especial work of the ministry should now be to urge all to prepare to meet our coming Lord. Let us be ready, with lamps trimmed and burning. Christ is coming, Christ is coming. We shall soon see the dear One who died that we might through him receive eternal life.

A SAD FACT.—In a late sermon by Moses Smith, in the Leavitt Street Congregational church, Chicago, he is reported to have said:

"Fellow disciples, confessedly the churches of Jesus Christ in our land, in our city, are weak. There are less conversions in the full-manned organizations of these United States than in the feeble, extemporised churches on heathen shores. Nor is the reason far to be sought. The prayer-meeting is the strength of any church. It is stronger than the pulpit, stronger than all other forces combined. The church can live without a pastor, without a choir, without an edifice. The church can even conquer its foes and build up into all these, but it cannot even live without the prayer-meeting."

We think Mr. Smith has not overrated the importance of the prayer-meeting. In every place where there are two or three christians, a prayer-meeting should be established. Do not stay away from the prayer-meeting.

BRO. HASTINGS' OUTLOOK.—In the Christian for Nov., Bro. Hastings gives his "outlook" from the ashes of his Repository, and in summing up says:—

"The future is bright. We do not see a cloud. The outlook takes in the mighty roll of everlasting years, and though trifling hindrances may be around us, they are not worthy to be compared with the far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory which bounds the bright horizon.

And as we sit at our borrowed table and write by our flickering candle in one corner of a large and lonely building, 'a great while before day,' we are full of peace and rest, and joy and hope and faith.

What we shall do hereafter we know not. Where we shall pitch our moving tent is known to our Father; and it is enough for him to know it. Our way is forward, and the dead past must bury the dead. Whether we work or rest, prosper or fail, live or die, we are the Lord's, and all is well."

THE CHRISTIAN, which was commenced in Jan. 1866, is published monthly at 60 cents a year, and is filled with choice reading. Now is a good time to subscribe. It is worthy of a place in every christian family. Those who prefer, can have the Christian and the Bible reader's map for $1.00, on rollers $1.25, which is less than the price of the map alone. The map is 29 by 39 inches, and should be in the hands of every Bible reader.

THE WORCESTER CONFERENCE.

FARE REDUCED.

The friends attending the meeting to be held at Worcester, commencing Dec. 16th, and continuing through the week, and over Sunday, the 22nd, going over the Boston and Albany R. Road, will purchase regular tickets at the various stations on this road, and they will be entitled to a return ticket free, to be obtained at the Rail Road ticket office in Worcester. G. T. A.

THE LAST STRUGGLE.

In all parts of the world men are being convinced that earth's closing scenes are fast approaching. The impression is deepth at some overwhelming event is at hand. All are not agreed as to the nature of the event, but they are united in the belief that wonderderful things will soon be witnessed. Those who are familiar with the signs of the times, and the prophetic Scriptures need not be in doubt as to what is coming. The great clock of time is about to strike for the last time in the present dispensation. A new era is soon to commence, when the works of the devil will be demolished, and the saints will be changed to immortality.

In a late eloquent sermon by Dr. Scott, in San Francisco, on the "Boston fire," and "the lesson conveyed in it," he says:—

"Our times are evil. The love of many professing christians waxes cold, faith is feeble, and iniquity abounds. We have worshiped material progress, until there seems to be no god so powerful as Mammon, nothing to be sought but wealth, and the usury and social position that wealth commands.

Our daily papers tell us of frauds in the taxes, frauds in the country and in the city, frauds in the harbor business, and frauds in our hospitals and jails and penitentiaries, and in administering justice, and in every department of our respective branches of government, and even of frauds in the milk and bread with which our orphans and inmates of our asylums are fed. We have corruption and frauds in the corner groceries and in the plate-glass palaces, frauds in all the learned professions and in the street hucksters, and frauds and shams and lies even in our holiest places. Frauds are seen in the very getting up of our fashionable persons, who are perfume and falsehood, and in our splendid turnouts, and in our stocks and diamonds. But why continue the catalogue? Where is there not humbug, quackery, knavery, cheating, lying, stealing, perjury, false swearing, pure hard cursing, drunkenness, rags and filth; contempt for religion, dishonoring of our holy faith, indifference to the Lord's day, and a studied neglect of the awful realities of a coming eternity; unbelief, disbelief, misbeliefs of every hue and complexion, from the modest doubt to the boldest abnegation of the Eternal. Look at the things done in our streets, from day to day, and recorded by our almost omnipresent newspapers, and tell me candidly, is there not cause for shame and serious alarm? Where are these things to end? What is to become of our children, and the children's children, if we go on with this railway speed in our departure from the belief, simple faith and honesty and pious ways of our fathers? And what shall I say of our corrupted public sentiment, pride, ingratitude, unthankfulness and vain boasting; of our bloodshedding, and licentious books, and dens of iniquity? Only that they call loudly for repentance and reformation, or we may expect divine justice to overtake us.

The real conflict of ages has gathered in a heap upon us in a new and, I believe, the last great struggle concerning the great truths of religion; mainly, concerning the person of Christ and the Inspiration of the Holy Scriptures. No proofs are needed from me at this time to show that these are the points upon which the great thinkers of the age are now centered. The phases are not all alike, but terminate on the same great nerve-centres of christianity. The main questions discussed relate to the personality of God, and a superhuman intervention in the government of the world. And these questions of course imply, Is Jesus of Nazareth the Christ of God and the Savior of men? Is there any superhuman element in the Bible, or is it altogether a mere human production? If so, there is no reality in miracles or prophecies, and no efficacy in prayer. This aspect of a modern religious thought is regarded as the serious conflict of the age both by believers and unbelievers. It has come upon us through our increased and still advancing knowledge of the laws of nature, by which we have gained an almost unlimited control over the elements themselves. The advance of science is marked by the material advance of mankind, increasing wealth and luxury, and increasing crime, especially against life and property. And at the same time we are summoned to record and consider the voice of divine sovereignty in great political events and great public calamities.

FALSE HOPES.

We were told thirty years ago that the science of war, and the enlightenment of the great nations, would prevent the terrible scourge of the sword from recurring again. But the prophecy has proved to be false. The most gigantic armies and wars on record have been waged since then. And it was thought the discipline, intelligence, art and skill of modern times, and especially in our American Athens, would prevent or render impossible any serious destruction of life and property by fire. But the smouldering flames and smoking ruins of Boston tell us this was a mistake. Does not the calamity of the goodly city tell us that vain is the wisdom of man? that, 'except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it; except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain?' And with all our advance of science, who can arrest the cholera, or prevent our domestic animals from pestilence? How many noble ships have perished at sea during the past twelve months? How many precious lives, and how many millions of property have been lost by the destroying elements—water, fire, and lightning? What immense changes have come over human conditions, that no mortal foresight could have foretold or prevented?"

TRIP TO CONNECTICUT.

Wednesday, Nov. 27th, we went to Campville, Conn., and attended a meeting in the school-house. The cars were late, so that we had but a short time to speak to the people. We found Bro. St. John present from Wolcottville, and the house well filled. We learned the church there is doing well under the faithful labors of Bro. Elliott, who is a devoted christian, waiting for the coming of Christ. It was pleasant to meet old friends of other days, and find them still passing onward in divine life.

Thursday evening we had quite a large gathering in the pleasant chapel at Wrightville, where we met our only natural brother, who is getting ready to meet the Savior. He loves the blessed hope. He has three sons, born the same day, who are active business men, now about fifty years of age, who each have children married.

Friday morning, Nov. 29th, we had a smart snow-storm, producing winter sleighing. We went to Winsted, and, as usual, met a warm reception from old friends. Winsted is one of the most pleasant villages we have found in all our travels. Every year adds to its inviting aspect. It is located among the romantic New England hills, on the Conn. Western R. R., and at the termination of the Naugatuck R. R. It is a very desirable place for a residence, and abounds in pleasant cottage homes, and excellent water power for manufacturing purposes, which is well improved.

We had interesting meetings at Camp's Hall. We found that here, as elsewhere, the Holy Spirit had been impressing the hearts of Jesus' disciples with the importance of entire consecration to him, in order to be ready for his coming. Several decided to give up all to the Lord, and received rich blessings.

We were kindly invited by Bro. Graves, the Methodist minister, to preach in the Methodist meeting-house Sabbath evening. We cheerfully accepted the invitation, and had a large and attentive audience. To us, it was a season of more than ordinary interest. Thirty years since we listened in that place to lectures on the prophecies, from Bro. H. A. Chittendon, then a successful Hartford merchant. We went to the first meeting a skeptic, but came away convinced of the truth of the Bible; and four days from that time obtained pardon for our sins. We little thought in 1842, when listening to Bro. Chittendon, that we should ever stand in the same place to declare the unsearchable riches of the Christian religion, and to invite our former associates to accept the offer of eternal life through Christ. What a change! to see the proud, skeptical young man, whose heart was full of opposition to Christ, and who sought his enjoyment at the card-table, the ball-room, and all other merry scenes where the cup of worldly pleasure could be found; who had no love for Christ or sacred things; whose Sabbaths were spent in hunting and fishing, or other amusements; who had never been in a prayer-meeting, but had shunned the society of the holy; now taking his supreme delight in divine things. Again we say, What a change! Then he had no hope; now a "blessed" one. Then no peace; now "great peace." Then the future looked dark; now gloriously bright. Then all was wrong; now "all is well." Then miserable in the devil; now happy in the Lord. "Glory to the Lamb!" All this change has been produced by the power of God's Holy Spirit. As we stood in the desk, to speak of the "perfect love" that Jesus gives, and to urge others to come to "the cleansing stream," and saw them flocking to the altar, and bowing in humble submission to the dear Savior, receiving a full cup of blessings, we had no words to express our gratitude to our loving Lord for what he had done for us, and was doing for others. Praise his name for ever. He is the One "altogether lovely."

We shall remember that meeting with delight. We were much pleased with the kind, christian spirit of Bro. Graves. He invited us to stay longer, or to come again and hold a series of meetings. May the Lord direct. The prospect for good looked very encouraging. We found their hearts warm with love for the Savior, and ready for every good word and work.

THE ANCIENT PLACE FOR SOULS.

Modern theologians are not generally aware that the early believers in the separate existence of the soul, were not believers in its emigration to heaven at death, either among the apostate Jews or christians. But such is the case. The theory of going to heaven at death is a later invention. The Catholics still insist that souls did not go to heaven before the crucifixion. The Douay version in giving a note on Gen. 37: 35, says that souls went "into limbo, the 'place where the souls of the just were received before the death of the Redeemer;" and in a note on Gen. 44: 31, we read that it is the "place of souls below, where the servants of God were kept before the coming of Christ."

In a note on Luke 16: 22, the same imaginary realm is said to be "the place of rest, where the souls of the saints resided, till Christ had opened heaven by his death." From these officially approved comments we learn the faith of the Catholic church on this theme; (1) that all good souls, before the crucifixion, went to limbo, "a region bordering on hell," according to scholastic theory; (2) that this place was located "below;" and (3) that they were all kept out of heaven, and confined in this region below, "till Christ had opened heaven by his death." Then what took place? Another note on Ps. 68: 18, tells us. The text reads—"Thou hast ascended on high, thou hast led captivity captive." The following is the note—"Carrying away with thee to heaven those who before had been the captives of Satan;" that is, kept in limbo, a region bordering on hell.

The apocraphal book of Nicodemus, supposed to be "a forgery toward the close of the third century by some zealous believer," at which time Catholicism was in its incipient state, represents Christ, in his disembodied state, as descending into this underground spirit-world — "Then the Lord, stretching forth his hand, made the sign of the cross upon Adam, and upon all the saints, and taking hold of Adam by his right hand he ascended from hell, and all the saints of God followed him. . . . Then the Lord holding Adam by the hand, delivered him to Michael the archangel; and he led them into Paraeise." 19: 11, 12. 20: 1.

Thus early believers in soul-immortality also believed in an underground spirit-world for good souls, till Catholic speculations devised the theory of their emigration to the skies; yet Protestants accept this sky-kingdom, and curse Catholics for not furnishing it sooner. W. S.

TRANSMIGRATION.

It is sometimes denied that the Pharisees believed in the transmigration of souls, especially by those who refer us to the fact that the Pharisees were believers in the soul's immortality, to whom we often reply—"They also believed in the transmigration of souls." Then comes the denial, with the assurance that the reputed discourse of Josephus on hades, which attributes this faith to the Pharisees, is a document written later than Josephus' day, and falsely attributed to Josephus; and that the critics reject it as spurious. The item in this discourse, pertaining to this theory, reads thus—"He will make a resurrection of all men from the dead not procuring the transmigration of souls from one body to another."

But allowing this discourse to be spurious, as critics claim, still Josephus elsewhere testifies that the Pharisees held this theory. He says—"They say that all souls are incorruptible, but that the souls of good men only are removed into other bodies, but that the souls of bad men are subject to eternal punishment." Josephus Wars b. 2, c. 8, s. 14. Here is evidence from genuine history of Josephus, affirming the belief of the Pharisees in the doctrine of transmigration of souls; not of bad souls, as a sort of punishment, but "the souls of good men only;" not of all good souls, for elsewhere Josephus affirms—"They also believe that souls have an immortal vigor in them, and that under the earth there will be rewards or punishments, according as they have lived virtuously or viciously in this life." Antiq. b. 18, c. 1, s. 3. So they held that some good souls would experience a transmigration, and other good souls would go to a fancied home under the ground.

These three features of their faith had the same origin; (1) soul-immortality; (2) soul-transmigration; (3) soul-reward under the ground. All these views were held by the heathen before the Israelites went into Assyrian and Babylonean captivity; but none of the Israelites held them till after their return from their captivity. They obtained all these views of the heathen, and slightly remodelled the theory in some points. W. S.

ALABAMA.

I clip the following note from the New Era, an Alabama paper:—

"ATTENTION, PRIMITIVE BAPTISTS?—The churches of Sequatchie Valley Association are requested to send two or more delegates to New Hope church, near Boliver Smitch, Jackson County, Ala., on Friday, before the fourth Sunday in February next, at which time and place, Eld. J. A. Cargile has agreed with Eld. S. Beene that he will preach on every point with which he is charged with heresy, and that Eld. S. Beene or any other brother shall have the right to criticize.

The meeting will continue till all points are settled. Elk River, Mud Creek and Wills Creek associations are invited, and especially the committee appointed by Mud Creek to investigate. Brethren, come and let us settle things by the Bible. J. A. CARGILE."

This Eld. Cargile has fully embraced our faith, though still a Baptist preacher; and he is willing to defend it, even against the opposing efforts of the clergy. We hope to hear of good results. Pray for Bro. Cargile. W. S.

THE RESURRECTION OF SPIRITS.

A public speaker recently attempted to prove that the resurrection taught in the Scriptures had no reference to the resurrection of the dead body, but only a resurrection from the dead body—a resurrection of the deathless spirit from the mortal body—and that even the resurrection of Christ was only a resurrection of his spirit from the body. The fallacy of this assumption is apparent when we carefully notice the time of the resurrection. If the resurrection really consists in a release of the spirit from the body, when does that occur? At death, of course.

But did Christ's resurrection occur at his death, when he "gave up the ghost," or gave up the Spirit? No; for before his death he affirmed of the Son of man (referring to himself)—"They shall scourge him and put him to death; and the third day he shall rise again." Luke 18: 33. If his resurrection consisted in a release of the spirit from the body, it ought to have taken place when he "gave up the ghost," and not three days later. Could the spirit be raised from the body three days after it had left the body? After his resurrection, Jesus said—"Thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day." Luke 24: 46. After Christ "gave up the ghost," or spirit, at his crucifixion, what spirit remained to be released or resurrected from the body three days after?

Again, after Lazarus had been dead "four days," and began to putrify, Jesus said to his sister Martha—"Thy brother shall rise again." John 11: 23. Not, did rise four days ago, but "shall rise." If a resurrection of the spirit is meant, it occurred four days to late. Martha's reply shows she did not understand a reference to the spirit—"I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day." She placed the resurrection at the "last day," and certainly she did not think the spirit would remain unreleased from the body till then, and then be released. Jesus "cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth! And he that was dead came forth, bound hand and foot with grave clothes." Was it a spirit bound with grave clothes that was thus raised?

Concerning the future resurrection, Isaiah says—"Together with my dead body shall they rise." So the resurrection will bring up the "dead body," instead of the deathless spirit. W. S.

FROM "REGIONS BEYOND."

[The following letter was addressed to Bro. A. J. Young, of Vallejo, Cal., which we give to our readers without comment. It speaks for itself.—ED.]

"BRO. A. J. YOUNG:—I take the liberty to address you a few lines, with a view of getting your advice, although a stranger to me. We both profess the same faith, and if we love the Lord's Christ, we shall also love one another. I am prompted to write you, from a letter I read from your pen, dated Oct. 22d, 1872, in the Crisis. Now it is a great joy to us (our little Clear Lake band) to hear of your prosperity, and that there is such a lively interest taken in the cause of Christ in the Vallejo church.

But it is of our little band I wish to speak. Brn. Fassett, Reed and Wilson were up here last spring (as I suppose you know), and organized a church. Well, after they returned home, we met with great opposition in the way of false reports about our doctrine; and as we have no pastor, and are isolated from any of our preaching brethren, some of our members have become somewhat discouraged. This county seems to be the field chosen for all the 'plug' (so one of our Methodist brothers call them) preachers in the State; and it does seem to me that they are trying to throw dust in the eyes of the people.

Now we want a pastor, and we must have one who will teach the truth in love. There is a fine opening just now for one of our preachers, as the people, to a great extent, have got over their prejudice against us. The first Sabbath in each month we have meetings at the Pleasant Grove school-house. We get together and do the best we can in the way of holding meetings on those days. Your remarks to Bro. Grant relative to Bro. Bush, struck me that he was the man we wanted, and I called a meeting of our people, read your letter to them, and suggested we write you about the matter. You and he can advise with us, etc. He can preach every Sunday. There is a large field for doing good. We want Bro. Bush, or some other brother, to come over and help us. We as a church ask the prayers of the Vallejo church. Oh! my brother, will you all earnestly supplicate the throne in our behalf? * * * * *

Hoping we shall hear from you soon, I remain your brother, CYRUS CUTLER."

HIGHER UP.

D. W. SMITH.

When Daniel Webster was practising law in Boston, a young student came into his office for some advice. Webster replied,—"There is room higher up." And this is true in the cause of Christ; there is room for us all higher up. But in order to get higher up, we must go down into the valley of humiliation. "He that humbleth himself shall be exalted," saith the Scriptures; and if any have got their feet out of the horrible pit and got on to higher ground, they have a great work before them in helping others up; for if we are the true children of God, we are in a certain sense our brother's keeper, and they expect it of us.

It is said that christians are "known and read of all men," and the unconverted often read them more than they do their Bibles, and they know when they see a true copy. There is not a person however humble or obscure but has an influence over some, and whom he can benefit if he is disposed so to do; and a christian who has not a burning desire to see his fellow men converted and saved hardly deserves the name of Christian. Henry Ward Beecher and A. T. Stewart and many other benevolent men are continually beseiged with letters, and by applicants from the poor, for assistance; and why do they go to these men? Because they know they have the means and disposition to relieve their wants. And when the unconverted want to find their way to the Savior, they will not go to one who is spiritually bankrupt and hardly knows whether he is saved himself; but will find one whose heart overflows with love, and who can lead them right to the Savior.

There died in this city the first of this month a very aged colored woman, said to be one hundred and seven years of age—Margaret Decker. She retained her faculties in a remarkable degree until within a few weeks of her death. She could see and hear and read, and did her own work. She had a distinct recollection of events a hundred years ago. She remembered when Washington had his headquarters in this city, and has often seen him. She would talk about the "dark day" as though it was an event of yesterday. There was at her funeral one of her great, great grand-children. She has a son who is a preacher, and now preaches in Boston at Zion's Church in North Russell street. Rev. L. H. Jagger (white) made some appropriate remarks at the funeral from the words—"He shall come to his age like a shock of corn fully ripe." This might emphatically be said of the deceased, for she was a devoted christian.

But it is not necessary that one should arrive at her age to be ripe for the heavenly garner. A Christian at any age, who has filled his days with usefulness, may be said to be ripe; while the sinner, though he live a hundred years, shall be accursed.

She lived in the most remarkable period of the world's history. A century—who is sufficient to write the history of these eventful years? It has witnessed the travail and birth of this Republic, which has started on its course leading the van with its competitors. During this period all those societies, such as the Tract, Bible, Missionary, Sabbath school, and others, have been created, and now their footprints can be seen in every quarter of the earth. Some of the most important inventions for the use of man have been brought to light during this period. But here is an important question for us to look at: with all this light, and these facilities for its dissemination and for transacting the business of the world, society is becoming more corrupt, and it becomes necessary for the strengthening of bars, bolts, and locks, an increase of police force, the multiplication of prisons and houses of reformation, the lengthing of criminal court terms, and the enactment of more stringent laws. One would naturally suppose that with this increase of light iniquity would hide its deformed head; but facts, observation, and statistics, show that men are becoming more hardened and less susceptible to the influence of Christianity.

There is no reformatory element, in either art or science, but they often [illegible] facilitate the commission of crime; and [illegible] them and the gospel shine never so brightly upon the wicked, they will continue to do wickedly. "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse." These are the words of one who wrote as he was moved by the Holy Ghost to write.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, Aug. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

LETTER FROM BRO. P. G. BOWMAN.

To the Board of the A. A. Mission Society:—

DEAR BRETHREN:—In making this my first quarterly report from this Mission for the present Conference year, I have nothing of very special interest to communicate. We have peace and love among ourselves, as a little band striving together for the "faith once delivered to the saints, looking for and hastening unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall punish the ungodly with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power, when he shall come to be glorified in his saints, and to be admired in all them that believe in that day."

I preach at three different points every other Sabbath. The congregations are large (all things considered), and very attentive to the word preached. We have now two houses of worship in course of erection, which, when completed, will increase our congregations very much, and add to us materially, and, I trust, to an unreserved consecration of heart and life and all to God's glory and man's good. I am selling books and distributing tracts from house to house. The people are anxious to obtain them and read them to profit. I have distributed in the last twelve months $400 or $500 worth of these silent and unpretending preachers, gratis, through this section, and I see the fruit springing up all around. O that the people everywhere would assist the Society liberally and speedily in this godly work, to prepare a people in this last dispensation (and may I not say this last generation?) for the coming of the Just One. Come, oh, come, my dear brethren and sisters; work, work, while you may; the Judge standeth at the door; the dark, dark, everlasting night will soon overtake a guilty world and a worldly church.

I hope the Board will find it convenient to send one, if not two of the brethren, some time the coming winter, to visit this field and deliver a course of lectures on the prophecies in Charleston and Columbia, and at other points in the South. This I have no doubt would wake up a great interest among all spiritually-minded people in all the churches; for this most important subject is almost if not an entirely obsolete subject in the southern pulpit. Desiring an interest in your prayers, I am, dear brethren, yours in the blessed hope,

PEYTON G. BOYMAN, Missionary.

SOUTHERN MISSION.—No. 2.

On my return from Alabama I found notice had been given by Bro. Kimbrough that he should be ready to commence the debate between him and Bro. Grant on Nov. 12th, and if Bro. G. was not on hand, should preach his side of the question. What should be done? Bro. Grant could not be here, and Bro. Kimbrough knew well he could not. I went forward trusting in David's God. The little church, God bless them, stayed up my hands by their prayers. We spent four days in the debate. The questions under discussion were—

1. Do the Scriptures teach that the soul of man is immortal?
2. Do the Scriptures teach the total unconsciousness of the dead between death and the resurrection?
3. Do the Scriptures teach the endless torment of the wicked?
4. Do the Scriptures teach that the setting up of Christ's kingdom is still future?

By request of Bro. Kimbrough we passed the second after two hours debate, and the third without debating at all. I never knew until this debate that truth was so easy to defend. It is taking deep root here, and doors are being throw open in all directions. Where are the men who are ready to forego home and friends, and with the trump to their lips go even among the enemies of the cross and sound the alarm of the coming judgment? They must expect to receive some such treatment as their Master did when preaching unpopular truths; but shall we fail to do our duty because many reject our preaching? God help us to please Him, rather than man.

Two leading persons of the community have been baptized and joined the church since the debate; others are coming.

On Nov. 28th and 29th, I held meetings in a new field some four miles from Cleveland. Left them with a request to return and hold a meeting with them in January. I expect to start this week for Alabama and help Bro. Cargile in his work. We need the prayers of the church. The Master will soon be here, and then he will say—"It is done." God grant we may have our part well done.

H. DAVIS.

ALL the peace and favor of the world cannot calm a troubled heart; but where the peace is that Christ gives, all the trouble and disquiet of the world cannot disturb it. Outward distress, to a mind thus at peace, is but the rattling of the hail upon the tiles, to him that sits within the house, at a sumptuous feast.—Leighton.

MY PRESENT EXPERIENCE.

M. J. HALES.

"For though I preach the gospel, I have nothing to glory of; for necessity is laid upon me: yea, woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel."—1 Cor. 9: 16.

All believers in Christ are called in a certain degree to labor in his cause. Some are called to preach, some to exhort, some to prophesy, and some to teach. Knowing this, I have desired of the Lord, by earnest prayer during the last three years, to understand my position in so great a work—the spreading of the gospel of the kingdom. Had the Lord told me to exhort, or to utter prophecies, or to teach in some other way than by preaching, I would have submitted long ago, and gone about my Master's business; but the passage quoted at the head of this article has been continually in my mind, and has occupied my thoughts day and night. The more I have asked for guidance from on high, the more this text has pressed itself upon me.

I have at last concluded that unless I submit to God's requirements, I shall be shut out of the kingdom for disobedience. I hold myself in readiness to do just what God has for me to do. If God says preach, and he has, I say amen. If called upon by my Savior to leave home, friends, and fireside, to spend my time and strength for him, I say amen to that. I desire not to reach the kingdom on "flowery beds of ease," but feel ready to face a frowning world and obey the Lord, and by so doing have an abundant entrance administered unto me. I feel willing to submit to whatever God has, or will lay down for me. For I am "determined to know nothing among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." My only object is to please Him on whom my hope of eternal life depends.

The step thus taken by me is not the suggestion of friends, nor the desire for an easy life, nor the desire for popularity; but it is taken because "woe is me if I preach not the gospel." I am ready to go forth in the name and strength of Christ, who is my all and in all. Brethren, pray for me, that I may be the means in God's hand of winning many sinners to Christ. Feeling thus, I am ready to go anywhere. I can be reached by addressing in care of H. L. Hastings, 30 Hanover St., Boston, Mass.

Correspondence.

From Bro. S. P. Howland.

BRO. GRANT:—Allow me to say a few words to the brethren and sisters, after thanking you very much for those valuable tracts I received for distribution. I have distributed them to those who will read them, and thank God that they have helped some to come to a knowledge of the truth. Brethren and sisters, let us strive together to bring others to the truth, as well as to keep ourselves unspotted from the world. Let us put on the whole armor of God, and take with us the sword of the Spirit which is the word of God. Let us watch for the promised and soon coming Messiah, and so live as to be accepted by and reign with our blessed Redeemer on the earth restored to its Eden beauty. Let us not fall back now. The race is almost run. Soon we shall change our mortality for immortality, and death shall be swallowed up in victory. Then we may sing, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" Let us not only try but strive to enter that holy city, the New Jerusalem. Let us hold on to the plow and not look back, but keep on, and soon we shall receive our reward, which is glory, honor, immortality, eternal life. Is this not worth striving for?

Jesus is at the door. Signs indicate his speedy coming, and thank God that he is near. If we are faithful, we soon shall be where death is no more and sorrow is unknown. Let us not be afraid of persecution for Christ's sake. What if we even lose our life for his sake; is he not able to raise us up at the last day? Glorious thought! although we die and decay, yet there is One who can give us an immortal life, and take us unto himself, and make us kings and priests, to rule in that glorious kingdom on the earth more beautiful than the garden of Eden. Let us pray daily to our blessed Lord and Master to help us to live unspotted from the world, lest we fall back and be forever banished from the presence of the Lord. Let us not bury our talents in the earth, but improve them in bringing others to the blessed light. Let us search the Scriptures daily, that we may teach others, and so live that others cannot say we do not live any better than those who do not profess to follow Christ.

Brethren, the eyes of the world are upon us watching our daily walk and conversation, and trying every plan to bring us back into the world. Let us not only believe but teach the things contained in the Scriptures. Let us not be ashamed to own our blessed Lord. If we are ashamed to confess Christ before the world, he will be ashamed to confess us before the Father. Let us suffer anything in order to gain that inheritance promised to all those that believe on him and do his will. And let us pray to God to help us in the right way, so that when our King shall come we may be found watching, and all be gathered into that glorious kingdom.

Vinland, Kan.

From Bro. S. Goodhue.

DEAR BRO.:—"Whatchman, what of the night?" Is it a fact that God has appointed watchmen to take the oversight of the closing scenes of this dark night; and if there are dangers to which the church are exposed, is it not their duty to point them out and to give the necessary alarm; and is it not the watchman's business to know the hour of the night, and more especially when such great and important events are to transpire in the morning on which hangs the eternal destiny of watchmen, the church, and the ungodly world unrecounted to God? Can it be that men to whom God has entrusted the care of the church and has told them to be faithful, and has given his word. "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world," I say can it be possible that watchmen have fallen asleep just as the eternal future is to be revealed, and the new dispensation is to be ushered in, when the heavens are to pass away with a great noise and the elements are to melt with fervent heat? My prayer is—God wake up the watchmen! So that they can give meat in due season.

There seems to be a lack somewhere. The church is dying for want of food, men and women who were a few years ago strong in the Lord are now sickly; for the very reason that they have unhealthy food. Food that would give life and animation to the church twenty-five or thirty years ago will kill it now without the present truth. It is every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God that we must have in order to be healthy. O! what a responsible place the watchmen (as well as the church) occupy, when just now the angel has made ready to blow the awful blast which will end probation and to which the precious dust of saints will respond, and come forth, and we all be summoned to the bar of God, to be rewarded as our works shall be.

O then, watchmen, give the trump the right sound. Signs that are being fulfilled speak to us that morning is just beginning to dawn, when sin and wickedness will come to an end; and it does seem to me that God demands by the influence of the Holy Spirit immediate action; and now is the time. There is no time for sleeping, no time to seek the applause of poor mortal man. Be in earnest about the matter, for in a few short months at most, the warfare will be ended, the victory gained, the inheritance given to all his waiting and tried ones; and I expect if faithful to be there.

Wilmot, N. H.

From Bro. J. A. Cleaveland.

Dear Brn.:—"There is a way that seemeth right unto a man; but the end thereof are the ways of death." Prov. 16: 25. This saying of Solomon's with others, is of great importance when carefully considered. Man may be led to think more highly of himself than he ought, and this may be the way of death to him. There are always two opinions of a man; his own and that of others; and as we are all selfish beings it is quite as well for us if we do not form too high an estimate of ourselves. "For I say, through the grace given unto me, to every man that is among you, not to think of himself more highly than he ought to think; but to think soberly, according as God hath dealt to every man the measure of faith." Rom. 12: 3.

We understand this to be one of the traps of the devil to get God's little children to exalt themselves; and as sure as we do, God will abase us in some way. To avoid this snare, let us have no ways of our own, but let God have his way with us; as the clay is in the hands of the potter, so let us be in God's hands.

I think I never saw the time when I felt so much like submitting all to God as now. It may seem right to some to oppose the near coming of Christ, yet it is one of the ways of death. To others it may seem right to follow in the wake of the world, and have a good time generally; we fear they will be lost. The fashions of the day are another step to death.

There is much need of our being fully awake to the subject of purity of heart and holy lives; and when we preach, let the people know we are in earnest. "Cry aloud, spare not; lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and show my people their transgressions, and the house of Jacob their sins." Isa. 58: 1. Every man should be at his post. Sound the alarm. King Jesus is soon coming to take his bride to himself. None but the pure in heart can see God.

The near coming of Christ was never so sweet to me as now. I love to preach it. I love to talk it. It is more than my meat and drink. May the good Lord help us to be ready.

Morrisville, Vt.

From Sr. L. B. Weaver.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—May the blessing of God ever rest and abide with you, and may his presence be ever felt in your hearts. We are almost home. Let us keep ready, pure in heart, for none but the pure in heart shall see God. Let us be holy in life, in word, in deed, in conversation, and have our work well done. We are living in solemn times. My blood almost chills as I think of the awful things that are going on in our midst; and as a dear friend remarked, "We are hardly safe at our own firesides." We have no safety but in Jesus. I do know I am entirely weaned from this ungodly world, and I do not see who can love it.

While I lie here and write, the cold wintry winds blow without, and the snow is falling, carpeting the earth in an emblem of purity—all pure and white. May we be ready when the Master comes, with our garments pure and white and clean. Jesus, keep me in thine own loving arms from all that is impure. I never felt so earnest about being ready every moment of the time. I must be ready. I must have a home in the kingdom. It has been through tribulation deep thus far, and it will be, I have no doubt, clear through to the end; but, by God's help, I can do or bear all things. He is my rock and refuge, my covert from the storm. When the tempest's rage is high, I cling to Jesus, and rest in his strong arms till it is past and the sun shines clear again. What could we do without this precious, blessed Savior? I never can thank him enough for calling to me, and that I was a willing subject and gave up all for him. Now all is well. My sins are pardoned; I am free. Praise the Lord.

To the dear ones who so kindly sent me the aid and present from Alton Bay Campmeeting, I would say, God bless you all eternally. It was very much needed, and may you never lack for anything to make you comfortable. May the good Lord bless and reward you for it. Pray for me.

From Bro. C. W. Huntress.

Bro. Grant:—We feel sad to relate the death of Bro. Orion Green, formerly of South Boston. He went out West with Bro. Daniels to build him a house, and while eating he got a chicken bone in his throat which they were unable to extricate. He lingered a fortnight, suffering intense pain, when death relieved him of his sufferings. He was a faithful laborer in spreading the truths of God's word, and stood for it manfully. He did not shrink from duty, but was firm and bold in the cause of Christ. He will sleep but a little while.

South Boston, Mass.

From Bro. P. Mitson.

Bro. Grant:—I am still, with the help of the Lord, proclaiming the glad tidings of the kingdom, still striving to point out the way and draw souls to Christ through the preaching of the word; and although the spirit of slumber seems to have locked in apathetic security both church and world, I feel like continuing the work to the end of the race.

I came to this place (Ridgway, Iowa), in company with Bro. Chapman, on Saturday last, and by request preached in the schoolhouse the following evening. A fair congregation, and good attention. Bro. Chapman preached two sermons the next day (Sabbath) forenoon and evening, myself in the afternoon. Several who had not been out for six months came to hear this new doctrine (so called); and although some dissented, none scoffed, and many are anxious for light. The only objection urged so far came from the resident minister, the gist of whose argument was, that taking advantage of the blessed franking privilege vouchsafed by our heavenly Father, we are dispensing the word by wholesale to the people without the ecclesiastical post-stamp.

I shall remain over next Sabbath, as the minister (Methodist) says he will then reply to and refute my doctrine. The Lord is with us.

Hersey. William S. Hersey, of Melvin Village, N. H., died Nov. 27th, 1872, aged sixty-four years.

Bro. Hersey was a man of God, a devoted christian, an affectionate and endeared husband, a kind and beloved father, and a much respected and lamented citizen. His heart was truly wedded to Christ, for whose glorious appearing he devoutly prayed, and expectingly waited, for about thirty years. The light of consciousness was swept from his manly intellect in a moment by the dark waters of apoplexy, through which he waded alone forty-eight hours, then went down under the mighty wave of death to the silent mansion, where all the dead sleep, unconscious of time and events, until the life-imparting voice shall awaken the sainted host to the joys of undying glories. May the consoling hope of speedy re-union with the holy dead, comfort the weeping widow and sorrowing children. J. Couch.

Mensel. In Chicago, Ill., Nov. 27th, 1872, of consumption, Mrs. Anna Mensel, aged twenty-eight years.

One year ago disease fastened upon a lonely widow, without child, or living relative, penniless and dependent, and rendered her unable to earn a subsistence. After the terrible fire which swept the city, more than a year since, a devoted sister of our congregation prayed the heavenly father to send some poor destitute one to her, in whom she could be interested, and for whom she could provide. As an answer, Sr. Mensel came, then an unconverted woman. She was received and cared for until her death, with all the interest and affection that one could show to another. In the course of her sickness, she gave the best of evidence of her repentance and thorough conversion. She lingered in much pain during her last days, but the last whispers of her voice were of Jesus' love for her. She sleeps in Rose Hill Cemetery, awaiting the resurrection morning for her crown of glory. Frank Burr.

Batchelder. Died in Haverhill, Mass., Oct. 25th, 1872, of typhoid fever, John W. Batchelder, of West Deerfield, N. H., aged twenty-one years and nine months.

John was loved by all who knew him. He has left a father, brother, sister, and young companion to mourn his death, which, we trust, has been sanctified to their good. The funeral was the most solemn scene I ever attended. It was at West Deerfield, and his schoolmates and youthful companions were all broken down, and many of them have since sought and found the Savior. Upwards of fifty have, we trust, been converted and reclaimed during the protracted meeting held in that place since. Words of comfort were spoken to the mourning circle by the writer. Enoch Morrill.

Hersey. Peacefully fell asleep in Christ, in Tuftonborough, N. H., Nov. 27th, of paralysis, Bro. Wm. S. Hersey, aged sixty-four years and ten months.

Bro. H. made an everlasting covenant with his God some thirty-five years ago, which we think was never broken. For about thirty-two years he has been a firm believer in the coming of Christ and kindred doctrines. He has truly been a pillar in the church, with the armor always on, and was ever ready to take his place in the front rank, to battle for God and truth. He leaves a wife and son and two daughters. May the Lord abundantly bless our sister and her family in their deep affliction. T. W. Piper.

Briggs. Died in Bridgewater, Vt., Nov. 27th, of the heart disease, Rebecca, wife of Jesse Briggs, aged seventy-six years.

Mother has left us sad, but we mourn not as those that have no hope. She died in faith. The last four weeks were weeks of intense suffering, but not a murmer escaped her lips, Jesus seemed so precious. Words of comfort by Eld. Moses Kidder. J. T. Briggs.

FRANCE.

THE IMPENDING CRISIS.

London, Dec. 6. The agitation among the various parties for the dissolution of the French Assembly is increasing. The result of the election yesterday of the legislative committee of thirty, proposed by Dufaure, is still the chief topic of conversation. The attention of all parties is turned toward the government, whose next step is awaited impatiently. It is the general belief that a proposal to dissolve the Assembly will be carried. All efforts toward reconciling the government and the opposition are now regarded as impracticable.

The committee of thirty, appointed by the Assembly yesterday, in accordance with the motion of Minister Dufaure, held its first meeting today. The following officers were elected: President, The Baron De Larcy; vice-president, M. d'Audiffrett Pasquier; secretaries, MM. Lefevre, Pourtalis and Hausmanville. The organization having been completed, the committed adjourned to meet on Monday, when it will proceed to business. According to the motion by which it was created, the comittee is instructed to draw up the project of a law defining the responsibility of ministers and regulating the relations of the several powers of the State. It is expected that it will report a bill declaring that any minister who shall be censured must resign, and excluding the president from debate in the Assembly, but giving him, by the way of compensation, a limited veto power. It is inferred, from the political composition of the committee, that any proposition for a dissolution of the Assembly will be rejected, and nothing more radical than a partial renewal of the Chamber once a year or once every two years, like the American Senate, will be entertained. The Bien Public says that the complexion of the committee makes the situation all the more precarious. While the executive and Assembly are equally averse to a coup, the country cannot tolerate the present state of affairs. It intimates that the country should spontaneously intervene, which is interpreted to mean that it should send in petitions in support of Thiers and his government. President Thiers has resolved that there shall be no change in the Ministry until the report of the committee of thirty is presented; then, if the report is unfavorable to him, he will oppose it in the Assembly.

Evening. The committee appointed to consider the proposal of Dufaure, has elected De Larcy as president, against the government nominee. This choice is regarded as significant, and as a foreshadowing of the character of the report to be made by the Assembly. Theirs is determined to personally oppose the report in the Assembly if it is unfavorable to the government. This afternoon, the excitement in Paris and at Versailles was intense, it being rumored that Thiers will certainly resign before the Assembly adjourns. Business is almost at a stand-still, and the worst fears of the stormy nature of coming events are entertained, producing an extremely panicky feeling on the public mind. The political situation is the sole theme of conversation among all classes, tradesmen being greatly depressed at the prospect of coming disorder.

M. Thiers, at the Presidential reception held to-day, intimated his determination not to modify or change the complexion of his Cabinet until the proposals of the Dufaure commission should be announced. Petitions are being received from all parts of the country urging a dissolution of the Assembly as the first step toward harmonizing the present difficulty.

The present dangerous governmental crisis is felt in its effects in every province of the country, and is having a pernicious and demoralizing effect on trade. An early adjustment of difficulties is hoped for by all classes.

London, Dec. 5. The vote in the French Assembly to-day on the formation of Dufaure's committee excited the liveliest apprehension in Paris, where fighting is expected. Great excitement prevails at Chiselhurst.

Marshal McMahon controls the army, but will act only in obedience to the Assembly, and not to President Thiers. German occupation is certain if fighting occurs.

Correspondence has recently passed between Bismarck and Napoleon. German reoccupation will result in the re-establishment of the empire.

The strike of the stokers of the gas companies continues, but the worst is over. The inhabitants have supplied themselves with oil lamps and candles, and are now able to meet the inconvenience occasioned by the limited supply of gas. Several theatres were lighted with oil last night, and the performance was conducted as usual. The Strand was lighted with burning lime.

Prince Napoleon has summoned several high police officials to pay him 20,000 frans as damages for his arbitrary arrest.

Rome. A military commission to inquire into the defences of Italy has for some time been sitting at Turin under the presidency of Prince Carignan, and it has prepared a plan for fortifying Rome, which, it is said, has been approved by the Minister for War. The Commission stated in its first report on this subject that "in view of the dangers to which Rome is exposed by its proximity to the sea, and the important consequences which the fall of that city would involve both from a political and a military point of view, it is absolutely necessary that Rome should be made a fortress of the first class, so as to be protected against bombardment, and placed in a position to oppose a long and successful resistance to an enemy." To do this, however, an expenditure of 52,000,000 francs would be required; and the committee has therefore abandoned its original plan of surrounding Rome with detached forts and an entrenched camp. The central point of defence is not to be Rome, but Bologna, and the chief object to be attained in regard to the fortifications of the former city is its protection against a sudden attack by land or sea. For this the Commission thinks that the present walls, strengthened by lateral forts, and some works on the Monte Mario, would be sufficient, and it estimates the cost of carrying out its modified scheme at twenty-two million five hundred thousand francs.

The Disastrous Floods in Northern Europe.—Some parts of Prussia and Denmark are suffering at present quite as severely from wind and water as Boston has been from fire. We read of an island being depopulated, of some districts having undergone so much destruction that the people have resolved to emigrate in a body, and of enormous losses in cattle. In the Prussian province of Stausland whole acres of land have been swept away, while at other parts of the same coast new foreshores have been added. The neighboring islands of Zingst, Dars, and Hiddensee have also lost heavily, nearly all the fishing smacks belonging to them having been wrecked. The total number of vessels of all sizes which have been destroyed is eighty, and it is estimated that it will take several millions of thalers to cover the losses in all kinds of property. Efforts are being made in both countries to relieve the people who have been so unexpectedly renedered almost destitute.

The Old Catholics.—According to the Swiss Times the statutes of the Swiss Society of Liberal Catholics have appeared. The aim of this society is, it says, to organize a sturdy resistance against the infallibility Dogma, and further to bring about a reform in the Catholic Church. The means proposed are: 1. To withdraw children from under the influence of priests who favor the new doctrine; 2. To establish Old-Catholic communities; 3. To assist and support worthy ecclesiastics in their opposition to the Infallibility Dogma; 4. To take the necessary steps for enabling Catholic students of theology to procure a thorough scientific education; 5. To get up public lectures and circulate enlightening works; and 6. To keep up a regular correspondence with the central committee of the German Old Catholic Association in Munich.

In Brief.

—— The raging epidemic of the hour is certainly destructive railroad disasters in all directions.——There was a great typhoon at the Phillippine Islands October 12. Three hundred houses were destroyed, and the shipping was much injured.——Cars will be running through the Hoosac tunnel within twelve months.——The cholera is raging in Khiva.——It is said that a hundred hogs have died in Conway from disease similar to that which has affected horses.——It is estimated that over forty thousand persons viewed the remains of Horace Greeley at the City Hall Tuesday.——One great secret of the difficulty of extinguishing the great fire of Boston was the fact that the gas company was not able to shut off from the burning district the supply of that inflammable article.——An Italian letter in the Paris Journal Soir, says that M. Renan has just begun a new work to be entitled the "Antichrist," in which he will maintain that the Antichrist of the Apocalypse is the Emperor Nero.——It is reported that the cupola of St. Peter's at Rome shows unmistakable signs of decay, and a committee of Papal architects and engineers has been appointed to examine it.——Beecher says that more lies have been told about him every year of his public life than would shingle a cathedral.——Mrs. J. F. Cleveland, sister of Horace Greeley, is now lying dangerously ill at her residence in New York.——The flood from the river Po is spreading in the already devastated Italian districts through which it runs.

God's great work is perfect as a whole, because it is perfect in every part. He makes a leaf or a blade of grass with as much care as he makes a world. He polishes the scaly coat of the smallest insect as perfectly as he feathers the wing of the cloud-clearing eagle.

There will be a Conference at the Second Advent Chapel in Worcester, commencing Monday, Dec. 16th, at two o'clock P. M., and continue over the following Sunday. The special object of this meeting will be to mutually consider the evidence in regard to the time of the Lord's coming, and the duties which devolve upon God's people in view of the nearness of "that day." It is specially hoped, and very earnestly requested, that the preaching brethren, near and far, whether identified with "1873," "1875," or with no definite time, may come and co-operate in this interesting and important work. A general invitation is hereby extended to all lovers of Jesus and his appearing. Come, filled with the Spirit, to labor for God and the good of the perishing. The church in Worcester extend a cordial greeting and welcome to all.

H. H. Buxton,
Sam'l. Ayres,
W. M. Hall,
E. G. Higgins,
A. Streeter, } Committee.

The Western District of the N. Y. A. C. Conference will hold its first quarterly meeting with the church at East Shelby, commencing Thursday evening, Dec. 12th, and hold over the following Lord's day. Let each church be represented by delegate or by letter. Let earnest prayer go up to God for his special blessing upon this meeting, that the saints may be the better prepared for the "marriage of the Lamb," and sinners be brought to Jesus.

All persons coming by railroad will stop at Medina, and please write to Frank Carpenter what time you will be there, and accommodations for all to get to the meeting will be made. Come one and all.

A. C. Newell, President.
A. P. Moore, Secretary.

Protracted Meeting.—The Lord willing, there will be a protracted meeting at the Hall at Nottingham, N. H., commencing Wednesday evening, Dec. 18th, and continue one week. We hope to meet the brethren and sisters of this vicinity at this meeting. Come one, come all, and let us have an old-fashioned, Holy Ghost meeting. We especially invite laborers, who have the cause at heart, to come and work with us for the salvation of the perishing.

H. D. Reed, President.
H. S. Mitchell, Secretary.

The time for tent meetings is over for this season, and now is the time for quarterly sessions of the Conference, and protracted meetings in places where they need help. Now let your wants be made known, and we will do the best we can to supply those places. This is the time for work.

L. Boutell, for the Committee.

The Second Quarterly meeting for the Southern District of Wisconsin will be held at Monticello, Green Co., commencing Friday evening, Dec. 13th, 1872, and holding over Lord's day. The several churches in the district are requested to send delegates, and all the preaching brethren are earnestly solicited to attend, as there may be important business to come before the meeting. Brethren, come praying, expecting a good time in the Lord, and we shall have it.

George Howard.

The Lord willing, the first quarterly meeting of the Eastern District of the New York A. C. Conference will be held with the church in Conquest, commencing Thursday evening, Dec. 12th, and holding over Sunday. It is earnestly hoped there will be a general rally of all the forces in this district to this first "district" meeting. Come in the name of the Lord, for the hour of his judgment hasteth greatly. Let us strengthen our hands, and press the battle a little longer while yet we may. Each church should take the quarterly collections early, and all come to help "after a godly sort." Pray for this meeting.

M. R. Miles, President.
Wm. E. Brown, Secretary.

THE HARVEST HOME.

From the far-off fields of earthly toil,
A goodly host, they come;
And sounds of music are on the air,
'Tis the song of the harvest home.
The weariness and the weeping,
The darkness has all passed by;
And a glorious sun has arisen,
The sun of eternity.

We've seen those faces in days of yore,
When the dust was on their brow;
And the scalding tear upon their cheek,—
Let us look at the laborers now.
We think of the life-long sorrow,
And the wilderness days of care;
We try to trace the tear-drops,
But no scars of grief are there.

There's a mystery of soul-chastened joy,
Lit up with sunlit hues,
Like morning flowers most beautiful,
When wet with midnight dews.
There are depths of earnest meaning
In each true and trustful gaze;
Telling of wondrous lessons
Learned in their pilgrim days.

One had climbed the rugged mountain side,
'Twas a bleak and wintry day;
The tempest had scattered his precious seed,
And he wept as he turned away.
But a stranger hand had watered
That seed on a distant shore;
And the laborers now are meeting,
Who never had met before.

And one who had toiled 'mid burning sands,
When the scorching sun was high,
He had grasped the plow with a fevered hand,
And then laid him down to die.
But another, and yet another
Had filled that deserted field,
Nor vainly the seed they scattered,
Where a brother's care had tilled.

Some with eager step went boldly forth
Broad-casting o'er the land;
Some watered the scarcely budding blade
With a tender, gentle hand.
There's one, her young life was blighted
By the withering touch of woe;
Her days were sad and weary,
And she never went forth to sow;

But there rose from her lonely couch of pain
The fervent, pleading prayer,
She looks on many a radiant brow,
And she reads the answers there.
Yes, sowers and reapers are meeting,
A rejoicing host they come;
Will you join the echoing chorus?
'Tis the song of the harvest home.

NEWS FROM ENGLAND.

(From our English Correspondent.)

ENGLISH MISSIONS.

An inspection and analysis of the balance sheets of all the missionary societies in England for the year 1871–2, made by the Colonial Church Chronicle, gives the following result:—

"The sums actually contributed last year by Churchmen at home to seventeen societies was £324,782; while that contributed at home by English Nonconformists to thirteen societies was £290,968, or £33,814 less. The Roman Catholics subscribed £6,463, namely, £1,674 in England, £4,709 in Ireland, and £80 in Scotland, for the Society for the Propagation of the Faith, but it was all spent at home. They maintain, however, a college at Hendon, where there are thirty students, bound to leave Europe for life, and to devote themselves to missionary work."

The whole sum, therefore, subscribed for the evangelization of the world, exclusive of the Catholic contribution, was £615,750, gold, or in American currency, reckoning a sovereign at $5.50, $3,386,625. The way in which some of this money was raised, would justly horrify many good pious souls who rejoice over the result. They would learn of the stinting of poor families even of bread and other necessaries of life, on account of boxes being pressed on the children of the poor agricultural laborer; they would see that much had been given in pride, to make the donors appear as respectable as their neighbors; and many other equally glaring facts, which would take the glitter from the gold. We will not talk of waste in the expenditure of this money, but it would certainly astonish the contributors to see how the sum total had lessened after paying stewards' salaries, the traveling expenses of hired and public beggars, and incidental and office items. The residuum is small indeed.

Now for conversions,—the very object for which this money is professedly raised; and the result is not as satisfactory as some would fondly hope. If your correspondent's memory serves him, he has heard it advocated from a missionary platform, that the conversion of the heathen is according to the amount of money donated and subscribed; on one occasion it having been advanced as an approximate and reasonable estimate that the heathen might be reclaimed and reformed at the rate of one for a pound. What a ringing and stirring thought that was,—"A heathen saved for a pound"! We only wish we could indulge the hope that every hundred pounds secured the conversion of a sinner, and that all the tales and scandals from lands being missioned by the evangelists were the inventions of malice rather than the record of actual crime.

DECLINE OF METHODISM.

As a comment upon the foregoing societies, which have for their aim the regeneration of the world, we may place the following suggestive paragraph on the decline of Methodism, which has had the name of being the most aggressive and missionary system in the world:—

"Mr. Allen, the Liberal member for Newcastle-under-Lyne, in opening a Wesleyan bazaar at Stoke-on-Trent on Tuesday, said it gave him pain to know Wesleyanism had not taken the hold of the potteries people it ought to have done. In 1862, in the three circuits of the potteries—Tunstall, Burslem, and Longton—there were 2,661 members; in 1872 the number was 2,566. Allowing for a slight increase at Longton in 1872, there were 97 fewer Wesleyans than in 1862. He believed it was mainly due to the fact that latterly the Wesleyans had become lax in the way of aggressive work, and made no effort to reach and evangelize the masses."

This is one fact. By it we learn that in three circuits of the potteries, instead of the Methodists increasing in ratio with the population, they have actually been losing ground. They have not only failed to secure an accession to their numbers, but have lost nearly a hundred communicants.

ROMANISM.

On the other side, we learn with sorrow that the perversions to Romanism have been many. A remarkable article appeared in the Weekly Register (an ultramontane Roman Catholic journal) of January 1st, 1871. The writer of it says—

"In England the work of conversion has continued during the past year with steady and not very slow steps. To name, or even indicate, individuals who have been received during the past twelve months, would be foreign to our purpose. This much we may say (and say with truth, the facts being known to many Catholics in London), that the number of converts in London alone has been upwards of two thousand during the past year, and have during the last few weeks increased very much."

"From every Ritualistic congregation in London there is a continual stream of converts drifting towards us, and the number would be increased had we priests sufficient to look after those who are hesitating as to this future step in the right direction. In various parts of the country different Anglican clergymen have been received into the Church, to the number of some ten or a dozen, and at least as many ladies connected with various Anglican sisterhoods have followed in the same direction. Out of every twenty Anglicans who joined the Catholic Church, not less than seventeen have been prepared for the step by the teaching they have heard from Ritualistic pulpits, and by the practices they have got accustomed to in Ritualistic churches. . . . Not only laymen, but Anglican clergymen have been seen devoutly hearing mass at Catholic churches, rather than go to their own places of worship, where what they considered heresy was taught."

With the Methodists losing, and not these only but also every other denomination—two alone excepted, according to their own figures—and the Catholics gaining largely, and daily, we cannot see at present any prospect to hope for the world's subjugation to Christ.

ITS HUMILITY.

The following very modest statement, exhibitive of Roman Catholic humility, is made by a priest, speaking about the repression of the Jesuits in Germany. It is reported in the Kempteuer Leitung:—

"We, the priests, are as high above the Governments, emperors, kings, and princes of the world, as the heavens are above the earth. Kings and princes of this world are as much beneath us as lead compared to the finest, purest gold. Angels and archangels are far beneath the priests, for we can forgive sins as God himself, which faculty angels and archangels never possessed. We stand above the Mother of God, for she has given birth to Christ only once; we priests produce and create him every day—yea, the priests may be said to stand above God himself, because he must be at their service at all hours and in all places; and, at our bidding, in the consecration in every mass, he must come down from his heavens. God has created the world with the words, 'Let there be,' but we priests made God himself with three words. Therefore, in those times when faith and christianity (?) still existed, the priest was held in the highest honor; the people—yea, the emperors and kings—have thrown themselves down before him, and have kissed the soil where he had planted or imprinted his foot."

SUGGESTIVE.

A bad "dilemma" for a minister occurred on Sunday morning, 3d inst., when Mr. Killoe of Boldemere church, Wilde Green, Birmingham, on reaching the pulpit, was compelled to offer an apology to his congregation, and say he had unfortunately left his sermon at home, and they must therefore excuse him from preaching. A gentleman writes to the Birmingham Post, and expresses "wonder" that the reverend gentleman did not fetch the missing sermon, or send somebody after it, seeing the parsonage is next door to the church! Said correspondent was too polite to hint at the non-existance of the discourse, but wondered that, being in the pulpit, he did not try to preach extempore, instead of sending the people "empty away." It is to be hoped that the above will be a caution to parrot-preachers, to remember to take their essays with them. What a pity—what a disgrace—that there should be any preachers who have all their gospel in dead letters on paper, instead of in living force in the heart.

A GRAIN.

Amid the gleaning of a bushel of chaff, our religious contemporaries sometimes present us with an ear of corn. Here is a poetical grain gleaned from the columns of a religious weekly:—

"Look not on the ills around thee,
Earth grows darker every hour;
Let not crime's increase confound thee,
Limited is Satan's power;
Look on to regions pure and bright—
'At evening time it shall be light!'"

OUR MEETINGS.

Yesterday we held two meetings at the room which we have taken in Weymouth for preaching the gospel. In the evening nearly every seat was filled, the subject under consideration being the Omniscience of God. Attention was given to this solemn subject, and remarks were made that the sight would not always be on God's side, since it is written—"Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God." Some slight disturbance was caused by the jeers of young men outside, which my venerable father very pertinently referred to by saying, "It is better to be a heathen with no knowledge of God, than after knowing him to utter the hell-born laugh in derision of his truth." The principal point made in the rebuke was, that young men who had been sprinkled when infants, and sanctified in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, should dare to utter the coarse, infernal laugh, as a laugh from the nether regions, in scorn of God and his truth. It proved to him that their baptism was not the baptism, and its sanctification a farce.

Opposition is very strong in the neighborhood. It is not above board, or on the surface, or it could easily be dealt with; but it is a strong under-current, working out of sight, deep down in the dark. But God can deal with it in his own time, and we wait that time.

GEMS.

The following gems are mostly from English writers:—

God draweth straight lines, but we think and call them crooked.—Samuel Rutherford.

In the worst of times, there is still more cause to complain of an evil heart, than of an evil and corrupt world.—John Fleming.

What unthankfulness is it to forget our consolations, and to look only upon matter of grievance? to think so much upon two or three crosses, as to forget a hundred blessings?—Dr. Sibs.

THE STANDARD OF CHRIST'S TRUTH.—Never was it so solemnly imperative as now, that the standard of Christ's truth—trembling and drooping in the timid, treacherous hands of some; and failing, alas! from the faithful, death-stricken hands of others—should be upraised, unfurled, and flung boldly to the winds of heaven; the signal of battle, the emblem of union, the sign and pledge of victory!—Rev. Dr. Winslow.

We have one Advocate, not many, neither saints, nor anybody else, but only Him, and no other, neither by way of mediation, nor by the way of redemption. He only is sufficient, for he only is all the doer; let him have all the praise. Let us not withdraw from him his majesty, and give it to creatures, for he alone satisfies for the sins of the whole world. So that all who believe in Christ are clean from all the filthiness of their sins. For St. John Baptist saith—"Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." Does the devil call thee from prayer? Christ calls thee unto it again: for so it is written—"To this end the Son of God appeared, to destroy the works of the devil."—Latimer.

Envy not the appearance of happiness in any man; for thou knowest not his secret griefs.

Every new word acquired is a feather added to the wing of thought.

Emotions are worthless which do not grow into deeds.

Believe all the good you hear of your neighbor, and forget all the bad.

ALL MEN DRAWN TO CHRIST.

L. C. WELLCOME.

"And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me. This he said, signifying what death he should die."—JOHN 12: 32, 33.

Christ was lifted up—was crucified, therefore all men will be drawn to him. As certainly as the one was accomplished the other must follow. It is not optional or conditional, it is absolute. And because it is so, many have come to the strange conclusion that all will become his disciples, either in this world, or in the one to come, and be eternally saved. Others have tried to convert the text into a promise that all the inhabitants of the earth, in some favored generation in the future, shall be converted to Christ. What saith the word?

That there were circumstances and influences connected with Christ's earthly history, calculated to more powerfully attract the attention of man to him than to any other personage is true. That the aggravated circumstances of his betrayal, condemnation, crucifixion, the miraculous rending of "the veil of the temple," and of "the rocks" of earth, the conclusive evidences of his resurrection from the dead, were calculated to give Christ greater fame and more notoriety than any other, is evident. Then the facts of his divinity, his fulfillment of prophecy, his sympathy, pity and love for the race of man; together with the sacrifice he made, and the offer to give eternal life to all who come to him, as told in the gospel, set home to the hearts of men by the Spirit, and repeated in a thousand forms by the faithful servants of Christ during eighteen hundred years, has accomplished in drawing men to him, more than all the events connected with any other could do.

But all these attractions combined have never yet fulfilled the promise, nor can they do it in this world. No one generation has been drawn to him; only a portion of each ever heard of him. Yet in the aggregate an immense multitude have been drawn to Christ. But Christ says—"No man can come to me, except the Father which sent me draw him, and I will raise him up at the last day." John 6: 44. It is the Father, then, who now draws sinners to Christ. But in our text Christ says—"I will draw all men unto me." Just above he had used an illustration which develops the subject, showing what is meant: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." John 12: 24.

Christ did die. He says—"And the bread which I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world." John 6: 53. Man was dead—the race sentenced to death because of sin. "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that [or in whom] all have sinned." Rom. 5: 12. Christ came to save that which was lost, that which Adam lost. To do it, he must die with man, "give himself a ransom for all; to be testified in due time." 1 Tim. 2: 5. This gives a universal atonement, reaching the condition of all the race in the grave. Jesus went where man was—in death—to bring him out of death. Thus Paul says, that "Jesus tasted death for every man." Heb. 2: 9. Consequently, Jesus has bought the race of man, and put them under law to himself. "Therefore, as by the offence of one, judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life." Rom. 5: 18. All have a resurrection to life by Christ.

Again, Paul states it thus—"For to this end Christ both died, and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living; . . . for we must all stand before the judgment seat of Christ. For it is written, As I live, saith the Lord, every knee shall bow to me, and every tongue shall confess to God." Rom. 14: 9–11. Therefore, all must be drawn to Christ, at his second coming, to acknowledge his right to control, to command, and to judge the race.

Again, Paul states the same fact thus—"And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Therefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." Phil. 2: 8–11. It is better to be drawn by his love and mercy, to become his disciples and heirs of his kingdom, than to wait until he shall come to summon all nations to judgment, to reward every man according to his works. When he sits upon the "great white throne," Adam and his race will be drawn from death in earth and sea, and stand before him to receive reward. Rev. 20: 12, 13.

TOBACCO.

M. M. TUCKER.

I have used tobacco for eight years, both smoking and chewing. On the tenth of last February, while riding in the cars, these words came to me—"Abstain from all appearance of evil." 1 Thess. 5: 22. I began to think, Do I obey this command? and the more I thought of these precious words of Paul, I thought of my habit of using tobacco, and the more I became convinced that it was wrong to use the filthy stuff, for such it is. At this time I was smoking, so I told the Lord if he would give me an evidence that it was wrong for me to use tobacco, I would leave it off. And as the use of tobacco had never made me sick, I called for sickness as proof of its being wrong, telling the good Lord if I received evidence, I would throw away the vile weed; and God answered my prayer in an instant, in such a blessed way that cigars, tobacco and I separated. It was one of the most blessed times of my experience, for it showed me that a kind Father hears and answers prayer. And I can say from an honest heart that I have never wanted tobacco since. The smell of it now has the same effect as it did when I called for the evidence.

I thank God that his grace and strength are sufficient for all those that do his will. I wonder now I ever used tobacco; and when I did, and met any one that loved the Lord, I always tried to hide the habit from them as much as I could; but it is so offensive, that if any one does not use it, they can smell the poisonous weed even if you do not use it in their presence. And how it looks for any one that says—"From Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness, and the first begotten of the dead, and the Prince of the kings of the earth. Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood" (Rev. 1: 5), to go on through the world chewing and smoking the filthy stuff. When I see my brothers, who profess to love Christ, using the satanic poison, I always think of the words—"Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you." 2 Cor. 6: 17. But, says one, these words do not say any thing about tobacco. It does not in so many words, but it is speaking of things of a worldly nature, and tobacco is of the world; it has no connection with the love of Christ. "And every man that has this hope in him, purifieth himself even as he is pure" 1 John 3: 3.

Think of it, lovers of Jesus, and if you will just leave off this evil habit, you can save many dollars that you now spend for tobacco; you can help along the cause you so much love. Now many of my beloved brothers and sisters use the filthy weed (I say sisters, for many of the sisters take snuff, and many of them even take the old black pipe and puff away), seemingly without any regard to the command in God's word—"Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness, and what communion hath light with darkness?" 2 Cor. 6: 14. May we think of these things, and profit thereby, setting a good example before the world, letting our light shine forth as a light that shineth in a dark place.

Now would any of you put a piece of tobacco into Christ's mouth, if he were here upon the earth? I think you would all say no. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Matt. 25: 40. Do you count yourself one of the least of Christ's brethren? "For whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother and sister and mother." Matt. 12: 50.

Smokers, chewers, and snuff-takers, remember these are Jesus' words. I love his words, and how blessed it is to deny one's self of these things for his sake. May God help us to give up all for Christ. You that use the cursed stuff to chew, did you ever think that every time you partake of the bread as an emblem of Christ's body, you mix with the emblem a mess of tobacco juice, and with the emblem of his spilled blood the same? God forbid that this should be so any longer. May we cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh, give ourselves wholly to God, put all on the altar, and keep it there until Jesus comes, "who hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion, forever and ever." Rev. 1: 6.

"THUS WE LABOR."

E. OWEN.

Though uncertain seem results
As we journey through the land,
Hoping children and adults
Will for truth take noble stand;

'T will be crossing, to be sure,
Will conflict with human pride;
Otherwise men would endure
Transient loss to be supplied.

Conscious grace for every day,
Help for every time of need,
Aid to feel, as well as say,
"It is well," in very deed.

Some of us know this is true,
Some of us have tasted good,
And our calling we pursue,
Trusting God for daily food

Leaving loved ones all alone,
Counting not our lives too dear;
Without murmur, 'plaint, or groan,
Though but little fruit appear.

Yet we labor, preach, and pray,
Warning men in Jesus' name,
Trusting in the final day
Some who hear will 'scape the flame;

Some will be induced to turn,
Will yet think upon their ways,
Indications will discern
Leading them to prayer and praise.

Oh! my God, sustain, we cry,
Give us mighty moral power;
Whate'er else thou shalt deny,
Grant us this important dower.

BRIEFS.

L. BOUTELL.

The month of November, I have spent in Maine and Connecticut. The first two weeks I visited Biddeford, Hollis, and Kennebunkport, and I found the truth was making its way among the people, notwithstanding the indifference of many is apparent.

In Biddeford, by the blessing of God, wonders in the name of Jesus have been accomplished. A few years since I labored there when our dependence was upon God, and four to six reliable brethren. They hired a hall and began courageously for the truth. From this beginning they increased until they built their chapel, and have been on the increase to the present time. Preachers have arisen from this church who have gone out to proclaim the good news to the "regions beyond," and now they have good congregations, with a healthy atmosphere. Seemingly they have a consistent meeting, and preaching the gospel in the love of it is appreciated by those that come to the chapel, and it does them good. They are generally supplied with faithful men to speak the word of life to them. If a good spiritual preacher should consent to live among them, preach part of the time and look after the interests of the church and cause, it would be a great blessing to them in making still greater progress in this holy warfare.

There is still need of a waking up and rising higher in the divine life. The Lord calls for valiant men in this last conflict with the enemy. Brethren, we are abundantly able to go up and possess the land. The Lord is with us. That is good enough. The poor despised followers of Jesus are bearing reproach daily, but they receive blessing an hundred fold, and they will get life when the Life-giver comes.

At Hollis they maintain a good meeting. Some of the old stock yet live and are determined to confess Christ, cost what it will. The school-house was well filled with interested hearers. They have had some revival among them, and the converts confess Christ; and if all would take hold together, bearing financial burdens, and being at their places in meeting, whether preaching or not, and doing all they can to invite sinners to Christ and the meetings, prosperity would be more abundant.

The brethren often act as though they thought if they had preaching, that would do the work; but that is but a little towards making the meeting what it should be. All should be interested, and when the preacher is coming, take active measures to notify and get the people out to hear; then take hold in prayer and show your interest by doing your utmost in the good fight of faith. Show by works that you believe the Lord is soon coming.

At Kennebunkport the old disciples who "have been long time wandering" came out morning and afternoon, with many others of the rising generation, and we had a season that we enjoyed both from a memory of the past and for anticipations of the future. There seemed to be a harmonious state of feeling, but I thought a little more steam would be the thing needed in this rush of things among the last perils. We omitted the evening prayer meeting to go over to the Congregational meeting-house to hear Bro. Edwin Burnham preach upon the fulfillment of prophecy to show the Bible true. All denominations came together to hear him, and he was successful in showing the fulfillment of the Bible historically, not shunning to work in the second chapter of Daniel; and it was a wonder why all could not add did not see that all the evidence adduced to prove the Bible an inspired and truthful book, proved also that earth's history is almost told, and the Lord soon coming; and I think many did see its relationship to the Second Advent of our Lord Jesus Christ.

I have also visited Guilford, New Haven, Yalesville, and Bristol, Conn., besides Westerly, R. I., and I found pretty much the same state of things; some congregations more awake than others; but I find the truth doctrinally making progress in all these places.

In all these churches I find some faithful pilgrims longing for the better country, like the holy men of old, who died in the faith, looking for the same heavenly country.

While I find many interested in the speedy return of the precious Savior, but a few are sanguine on definite time.

There was quite an interesting state of things in New Haven and Bristol. Sister Hastings and Bro. Lutz had been laboring in New Haven. I left them there praying the Lord might add to the church daily such as shall be saved. So I still find abundant encouragement to labor. Good is being done. The Lord is with his people. To him be all the glory.

"BE YE HOLY."—1 Pet. 1: 16.

In this passage we have a concise, absolute command, expressed in three words—"Be ye holy." It is absolute,—addressed to the prince and the peasant; it admits of no exemption; it is irrepealable. It comes with the same force to ministers, and to you who are members of the church,—with the same force to saint and sinner. It is applicable to the saved, the unsaved, and the half saved. The command is universal in its application and comprehension. It is the embodiment of revealed religion, and provides for the largest experience in the things of God. It is the objective point of the Lord's mission to this world. Personal inwrought holiness is the great work procured for us by the sacrificial atonement of Jesus on the cross.

The name of Jesus is the synonyme for salvation from sin. The Father's gushing love was for the accomplishment of the same object,—to save us from perishing, quicken into new life, and make a Savior's love the first impulse towards human recovery. Delighting in the diffusion of holiness, pure himself, he provided for this. The vocation of the Spirit is not less connected with it; he sweeps in on the soul with his refining touch of purity; and with his vitalizing, quickening breath, sends shocks and reverberations through the feelings of man, till his soul is in a blaze of glory. The Spirit applies, and faith puts on the righteousness of God. . . .

"Be ye holy, for I am holy." Have a holiness that resembles God's. The same motive that would enjoin partial holiness is an inducement for entire holiness. To the soul full of sin, this is repugnant; but the christian will not be satisfied without the destruction of sin. He wants a holiness corresponding with the holiness of God's own nature.

How is this attained? 1st. Entire personal holiness is preceded by just ideas of the subject. Here trouble begins. There is delay, failure; and it inevitably results in open opposition to the subject. Want of clear comprehension is a stumbling-block. After all, there is no ambiguity in it; it is nothing but sheer misconception, and usually arises from pride of opinion. . . .

Holiness has two degrees; to be emptied of all sin, and to be filled with the Spirit. We gain by getting Christ Jesus present as a double blessing. We are saved from sin; then he is formed within, the hope of glory. The Spirit is a refining fire.

2. A longing after holiness must precede its attainment. Some admire it, and pray for it; but they do not crave it. We must hunger for it. "Blessed are they who hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled;" and they alone. Men may write, talk, and preach; but they do not receive because they do not hunger. . . . Holiness glitters on our banner, shields, and polemical bayonets; but it does not flash in the volley; it does not glance all along the mustered line; it does not burn and glow in our class-meetings.

What is the cause? We lack an appetite for the bread which a correct theology has placed on our table. We must have a longing for it that will be the spontaneous utterance of our hearts. "My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God; when shall I come and appear before God?"

3. A conviction of inbred sin is a precedent to holiness. Those who do not believe in depravity or regeneration must have a better insight into self. They have mild views of sin—as clean in their own eyes as circumstances will admit. There is a residuum of inbred corruption after regeneration—some disease not mollified with ointment. The character is defective; selfishness, roots of bitterness, and remains of the carnal mind are found. As it respects sin itself, it is seen to be exceedingly sinful, full of turpitude, debasing, repugnant to God; and there is a desire to rid ourselves entirely of it. We abhor sin; it nauseates our inmost soul; we loathe it in all its forms; and this feeling results from the discovery of its contrast with inward holiness. Isaiah saw God on his throne; his train filled the temple; one cried, "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts!" Then Isaiah saw himself undone, unclean; but, at this juncture, one of the seraphim flew down "having a live coal in his hand which he had taken with the tongs from off the altar," and he said—"This hath touched thy lips; and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin is purged."

Entire holiness is obtained by faith; not the faith of assent, but of trust. Trust in Jesus, and in Jesus alone; such a consecration of will as implies renunciation of all other trust. Faith is to the attainment of this blessing what the touch is to a jar of electricity,—the means of communication. Touch Jesus by faith, and the electric shock will come. Exercise faith now; put Jesus to the test; touch, and see if salvation will not flow in streams. Put forth your hand in his gory side, those fingers of confession to the prints of the nails, and bring them out dripping with atoning blood. Renounce the world, the flesh, and the devil; swing off into the unseen; drop into the arms of Jesus, and feel that you are every whit whole, singing, "In the promises I trust."—Advocate of Christian Holiness.

IF you would be perfect, even as your Father in heaven is perfect, let all your work be done as unto him and in his sight. And so, when your toil is done, your life-work shall bear fruit in heaven, and it shall be found precious before God.

FROM AUNTIE C. TULLER.

MY DEAR YOUNG FRIENDS:—I have often written letters for your parents to read, and some of you have read them too, I presume. Now I want to talk particularly with you a little. I hope you all love to read the Bible, and the Young Pilgrim, and the beautiful Pilgrim stories published by Bro. Hastings and others, and the many other good books your parents and friends provide for you. Believing you are made happier and better by reading them, I want to ask if you would not like to deny yourselves of candies, and many other useless things, that you may help the poor freed children to the same enjoyment of books that you have?

Having enjoyed a little rest from a pleasant summer school back in the country, I am again at West Point, and I find the old school books so worn out as to be unfit for use, and many too poor to buy new ones. A want of suitable books for school has made my labor harder. Now would you not like, to gather up dimes and nickels among your mates, and send them down here to buy some school books for these poor ones, so they can learn the faster? Oh, how their eyes would sparkle to have a new "reader" given them. I have a class of seven, the cunningest little creatures, who have shown uncommon smartness, and now need "fourth readers," and I cannot see where they will come from, unless you will all club together and buy them. They also need primers and geographies. There is so little labor, and that so poorly paid, that the parents have all they can do to keep them even thinly clad and fed; yet they love to learn, and I find the more their intellect is roused, the better children they grow; and I hope that some of them will be found among the angel band when Jesus comes, and, with yourselves, washed and made clean from every sin and fault, and presented spotless to our Father, through the grace of our exalted Savior.

May I not hope to hear from the favored children and youth soon, that I may not be hindered in advancing these poor ones in knowledge? They have Testaments, but to make good readers it is necessary that they have other books. I have several promising young people, who have saved their earnings, and are well supplied. I am hoping for a profitable winter, and I want you all to pray for me, that I may above all things sow the good seed of the kingdom.

NAMING THE CHILDREN OVER.

"I have three children to name over," said Mrs. Drew one day, "and I shall name them Half Done, Almost Done, and Done."

Jasper slunk behind his mother's chair with a guilty look. He, I am sure was Half Done, for as quick as lightning, he thought of his martin-house, begun as soon as he had his new box of tools, and never roofed; of his aunt's flower-ladder, which only had the sticks, and that was all; of the latch he began to mend, and left; of his geometry which he missed, because it was only half learned; of the mittens which he lost, because they were only half in his pocket; and, worse than all, of Zebra, the horse, that ran away and broke the buggy, because he was only half harnessed. Jasper, I say, quick as a flash, thought of all these, and shrunk back, more than certain that "Half-done" was his name. If all he thought was true, did he not deserve it?

"You mean me," said Lucy.

"Mean you for what?" asked her mother.

"For Almost Done," said Lucy, blushing. "I was almost done dressing when breakfast was ready. I was almost to school when it began. I had almost done my letter to papa when it was time to send it. I had almost finished, 'Golden Threads' when Jane came for it. Oh dear!" sighed Lucy. "Almost Done is quite as bad as Half Done; and a great deal more provoking, because you see, just a little more trying would have done it."

"'Almost,' cost King Agrippa his soul," said Lucy's mother. "He was almost persuaded to be a Christian, after hearing St. Paul preach; but there the poor king stopped—almost but not altogether. Poor Agrippa! I am so sorry for him."

"And are you sorry for me?" asked Lucy softly.

"Yes, my darling, because 'almost' stops short of reaching the end of what you may most desire and need. Your feet are turned toward the Lord, but they will not take you to him. Your eyes are looking toward heaven; but 'almost' will leave you this side of the Beautiful Gate, and this side is outside, where you would not be left, my child."

"No, mother, I do not want to be left out," she said, "I will put away 'almost' and take up 'altogether,' for 'altogether' means Done, I suppose. Who of us is 'Done?'"

"Who is?" asked mother.

"Arthur!" cried Lucy and Jasper at once, "Arthur does; Arthur finishes." Arthur looked up surprised and pleased, as his brother and sister willingly accorded the credit due him.

How many times they have seen him, small as he was, cipher for an hour at a time, rubbing out and writing figures over and over again, until at last he would bring his small fist whack on the table, shouting,—"It is done!"

How patiently and persistently he would plane and hammer and saw, and saw and plane and hammer, with all his mind on his work, until a boat or a box or a wind-mill, done, and well done, rewarded his labors.

Yes, Arthur was "Done." "He's a finisher," said Jasper, "and I wish I was." "Think, Jasper," said his mother, "how it would be to carry half-done into everything—the bread half-done, your dinner half-done, the table half-set, your new pants and coat from the tailor's half-done; sweeping, washing, sewing half-done."

"Please don't, mother," said Jasper. "Let me think of it."—Child's Paper.

"I SCRUBS."

"What have my class done for Jesus since last we met?" asked the teacher of a large infant class one Sabbath morning.

One said, "I have earned some money for the heathen by doing errands;" another, "I tend our sick baby;" another, "I fetch humpback Billy to school, with the boys a-laughing at me." One after another told, in a half-bashful, half-exultant way, of the little activities and self-denials of the week, so pleasing to the teacher, and still more to Him who said—"Suffer little children to come unto me."

At last a little four-year old hand was stretched up, and moved hastily to and fro to attract the teacher's attention.

"Well, my dear, what are you doing to please Jesus?"

The little eager face flushed with excitement as the unexpected reply came—"I scrubs, ma'am!"

Some of the older children tittered, but the teacher sobered them at once by saying:

"Yes, little Molly's share in the work my class is doing for Jesus is as important as any. If she tries to help her mother by scrubbing a bench or table, even if it has to be done over after her, she earns the same smile of love as the older ones who can do errands, and earn money for the missionary box."

"She hath done what she could," is the highest praise that can be spoken of any one, and little Molly has done that.—American Messenger.

Hygiene.

"This is for your Health."—Paul.

FOUL AIR AND HEART DISEASE.

To keep the body in perfect health it must be duly oxygenated. There must be free and ample interchange between the blood in the lungs and the air entering the pulmonary cells. The life-stream must be purified by its elimination of carbolic acid; it must be vivified by the absorption of oxygen. The fulfilment of these conditions demands a full, free, and constant admission of pure air into the lungs. This full, free, and constant admission of pure air cannot be obtained in badly ventilated houses, crowded buildings, schools as present constructed, theatres, manufactories, pits, underground railways, and the like. When the body has reached that age at which natural decay or degeneration has begun, the absence of pure air hastens and increases the degenerative tendency. Where the heart is more prone than other organs to disease, the want of pure air falls with powerful effect upon the tissues of the right heart. Their nutrition is defective by reason of the impurity of the blood with which they are fed, their vital force is lowered, their muscular fibre loses its tonicity, degeneration and debility take the place of active nutrition and power. If in this condition any stress is thrown upon the heart by hurried walking, by lifting, climbing, violent declamation, passional expression, singing, laughing, or by any unusual exercise of the voice, the tricuspid valve gives way, it henceforth fails to close its aperture, and the results of a back flooding of blood upon the venous system of the body begin to follow. If none of these exciting causes occur, the continued breathing impure air is followed by constantly progressing degeneration of the tissues of the valves and muscular structure of the right heart; they become soft and feeble, their atoms shrink; the segments of the tricuspid are at length unable to meet in their attempt to close their aperture; a small chink or slit is left between them; through this the blood finds its way into the auricle above at every contraction of the heart; and soon regurgitation is followed by the secondary consequences produced in the general system—congestion of the liver, stomach, spleen, kidneys, bowels—by hæmorrhoids, general dropsy, and occasionally by cerebral mischief.—Popular Science Monthly.

APPEAL TO CHRISTIAN MINISTERS ON THE USE OF TOBACCO.

SERVANTS OF CHRIST:—We address you respecting a most popular narcotic, the common use of which ranks with the great evils of the age; an evil, we believe, which tends to obstruct the conversion of sinners about us and the conversion of the world. . . . Addressing men of intelligence, we may assume some things as granted, which we might feel bound to prove dealing with men of a different order.

You well know that tobacco is a poison. It has no tendency to nourish and sustain life; its essential principle is nicotine; its essential action is soporific and anti-vital.

You well know that tobacco is a poison in relation to human organism. Nature unabused repels it. On first contact with the tongue she cries, "I will spue thee out of my mouth." On first contact with the stomach, the whole organ rebels and resents the insult.

You well know that tobacco is a dangerous poison. A cat has many lives and is hard to kill; but you cannot kill a cat more expeditiously with a brick-bat than with a little nicotine. . . .

You well know that poison would prove fatal with more painful frequency were it not for counteracting causes. Constitutional vigor, exercise, perspiration and expectoration are safety valves, throwing off a prodigious amount of effete matter, and hence many of its votaries live, or "have a name to live," who otherwise had been dead long ago. . . .

But however insidious and deceptive its action, you well know that a poison which in materia medica is classed with strychnine, stramonium and prussic acid, must inevitably injure those who freely use it.

Tobacco injures the preacher's voice. An observer who has been in the habit of noticing the qualities of the human voice, cannot only detect the tobacco-user, but he can usually detect the precise form in which he uses it. The cigar is wont to render it rather weak, husky and indistinct; the quid gives it a rough and frog-like note, which often grates like a harrow upon the ear; whilst snuff, as all know, imparts to it the nasal twang, so highly disagreeable.

Doctor Russell, who for forty years has been a professor of oratory, and a cultivator of the human voice, says—"As to the effect of the habitual use of tobacco on the quality and character of the voice, I must say that I know it to be injurious in proportion to the extent to which it is carried. Snuff-taking destroys the natural sound, and the pure ring of healthy human utterance. It deadens the voice, and by impairing its clear resonance, mars the distinctness of articulation. Smoking creates a reedy, burning sound, which hinders purity of tone, and renders the voice more or less grating to the ear. Chewing, by its exhausting effect on the salivary glands, causes the quality of the voice to become dry, hard and bitter.—Anti-tobacco Journal.

"COMPLETE IN JESUS."

Complete in Jesus! oh, how full
Of heavenly peace the thought;
Our souls redeemed, our pardon sealed,
Since Jesus' blood hath bought.

Complete in Jesus! Are we weak?
His power gives strength to all.
Sinful and helpless? He will spare,
And raise us when we fall.

Complete in Jesus! Have our souls
In bitter anguish cried?
'Tis Jesus hears, and gives relief;
'Twas for our souls he died.

Complete in Jesus! Blissful thought,
'Tis ours, whate'er befall;
Our Jesus is our Savior, Friend,
Our life, our hope, our all.

Oh, let us place our hand in his,
As on through life we go;
Like little children, trusting all
To him, come weal or woe!

Thus shall our trembling hearts be filled
With love which grows not dim,
If "Jesus only" be our peace,
And this—"complete in him."

WOMAN FROM A BIBLE STANDPOINT: Or, DO THE SCRIPTURES FORBID THE PUBLIC LABOR OF WOMEN?

S. MATHEWSON.

Very serious objections occur in seeking to place this Scripture in an absolute attitude. In Paul's epistle to Titus, he especially commands "the aged women to be teachers of good things," which proves conclusively that women are to "teach" under some circumstances. If this scripture proves that women may not teach the Scriptures at all, I would inquire what church is not acting antagonistic to such precepts, in employing so many women to teach in their Sunday Schools? which is more emphatically against the absolute letter of the text than to exercise the gift of exhortation. Again, it would forbid the mother's teaching the Scriptures to her children, especially to her sons. And who so competent to impress Bible truths as a judicious and faithful mother? If any still claim that this Scripture proves women may not teach at all, let them be consistent, and carry it out fully, and no more employ women to teach in their Sunday Schools, or allow pious mothers to exercise this gift, especially in teaching the Scriptures to their sons.

All Christians believe the Bible not only allows women to teach its precious truths in the Sunday School, and to their children, but that it makes it their bounden duty thus to do. They do not understand that the sentence—"I suffer not a woman to teach," precludes them from teaching in these places. Then, by the same rule of exegesis, we inquire why it precludes them from teaching the precious volume in all other places, except where it is connected with authority or dictatorship over the opposite sex, making herself the head? The reason given by this Apostle why woman should not thus teach is, that the man was "created first," and was not deceived as was the woman. 1 Tim. 2: 13, 14.

The idea some have advanced, that this scripture allows woman may teach the Scriptures privately, but not publicly, is very dubious. It would be quite a nice point to decide where the line of public and private is to be drawn. Some might decide it to be private if twenty or thirty persons of both sexes were assembled in some of your parlors, and a lady efficient to teach should unfold scripture truths to them. Another might claim this to be just as public as though the same persons were congregated in the lecture or conference room, that the building made no difference. A third might claim that teaching the Scriptures to a class of eight or ten was of a public character.

It must be apparent that one has as much authority to say this Scripture forbids women teaching in the Sunday School, as others to say it forbids her teaching the same Scriptures from the desk. The truth seems apparent, as has been distinctly stated, that all the stricture this passage imposes on women's teaching is, where it is connected with guiding or dictating the opposite sex, or taking the supremacy of the church, arrogating the leadership. And as to the "silence" imposed in 1 Cor. 14: 34 upon "women in the church," it must be obvious to all who will read its connection that it pertained to asking questions, disputing and debating. If it still be claimed that absolute silence is enjoined upon women in the church, then it would positively do away with their singing there, for this same Apostle recognizes singing in the church as speaking, teaching, and admonishing one another. "Hear him—"Speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord; teaching and admonishing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord."

All must concede that Inspiration imposes these two strictures relative to women's speaking and teaching in the church; but there is none relative to praying, as though it were always proper to pray. Yes, woman may hold audience with Deity in the church, as well as in the closet, without restriction. This golden avenue to glory is ever open to all, of both sexes. Says Inspiration—"I will therefore that men pray everywhere, lifting up holy hands, without wrath and doubting. In like manner also, that women" do the same.

Now that we have found the time and place where women should keep "silence" in the church, let us see if we can find where she is to speak in the church. The Apostle Paul had such special interest in the cause of Christ that he felt anxious every thing should be conducted with the utmost propriety, or, to use his own phraseology, "decently and in order." Hence he gives direction relative to the personal appearance of each sex while engaged in public labor in the churches.

In the eleventh chapter of this same epistle to the Corinthians, he thus directs—When men pray and prophesy in the church, they shall not have their heads covered. But when women pray and prophesy in the church, they shall have their heads covered. Now whatever praying and prophesying in the church meant with regard to men, it meant the same with regard to women. And here, perhaps, we had better read the Apostle's definition of prophecy which occurs in this same epistle—"He that prophesieth speaketh unto men to edification, and exhortation, and comfort."

Now it is evident that Christian women possessed this gift of edifying, comforting, and exhorting; and so far from Paul's forbidding the improvement of this gift, he labored with such personally, and directed relative to their personal appearance while thus engaged; and, as before stated, wrote to his special ministerial friend to help such. Now can any sane person believe that this inspired Apostle gave such directions, and then to the same church in the same epistle forbade their speaking at all? As though one of us should be particular to inform an individual how to perform a certain act, and at the same time charge him not to do it at all. Consistency is a jewel, especially in religious matters.

In the passage which forbids women asking questions in the public congregation, the Apostle refers them to the law; points there for a precedent; as much as to say, the regulation for women's labor in the churches remains unchanged. Thus, in accordance with this direction, we will turn to the dispensation under the Law, and gather up a few examples, which are to serve as precedents under the Gospel.

Under the law, many examples of excellent women are given occupying the vale of domestic life, as Rebekah and Rachel, Hannah and Abigail, who by heavenly wisdom and superior judgment did build the house of Israel. Although Infinite Wisdom highly honors these talents so well improved in the vale of domestic life, and recognizes these women as divine favorites, yet it by no means ignores the improvement of public talent in those who possess these gifts, as we shall see by considering examples of this kind. First, let us look at a woman possessing the rare gifts of music, poetry, and prophecy, one whom God called to assist in delivering a mighty people whose warriors numbered six hundred thousand, taking none into the number under twenty, and including none from one whole tribe, a twelfth of their company, beside a vast number denominated "a mixed multitude," to say nothing of their women.

They were a mighty people, and contending against a mighty foe. But this woman is summoned by God to assist in accomplishing this mighty work. As a nation we think we have recently had experience in the deep difficulties of emancipation; but to be a leader of those who were struggling to rid themselves of the galling yoke of a mighty foe, requires great wisdom and mighty tactics.

As this woman was called to this great work by One who understands every gift and characteristic of the human family, it must be conceded that she was equal to the task. Perhaps some may claim that she only led her own sex, because of the statement of her leading one part of the music in that wonderful anthem after their miraculous passage through the Red Sea. But more than this was assigned her, according to the express word of God by the prophet Micah. She was constituted joint leader of this nation with her two brothers. In recounting the many mercies he had dealt out to his people, God says—"I brought thee up out of the land of Egypt, and redeemed thee out of the house of servants; and I sent before thee Moses, Aaron, and Miriam."

But before passing to the consideration of others laboring in a public capacity, let us just glance at a celebrated woman in domestic life, who, like Sarah, maintained her individuality, and did not feel it obligatory upon her to restrict the expansive spirit of pure benevolence, because her husband may not have opened the gate before her. This illustrious woman, resident in the city of Shunem, moved first in the noble deed of giving entertainment to the man of God. Satisfying herself relative to the true prophetic character of Elisha, she begs her husband to add a room to their wall, for the better accommodation of one who was constantly traveling from place to place, with that anxious solicitude known only to a faithful servant of God, when he discovered the church in danger of sinking into idolatry. And He who declared that not even a cup of cold water shall go unrewarded when given in the name of a disciple, added a son to the great delight of that household. But the golden goblet was pressed to the lips only to be dashed aside. The beautiful boy dies. What now is to be done? Shall she wait only to follow the example of her husband? If so, her boy would have been consigned to the tomb.

Faith in the great Eternal, warmed by a mother's love, conceives a plan. She importunes her husband for a single beast, attended by one servant, to go with all haste to the prophet. Her husband gently remonstrates with her, for allowing her grief to shape so wild a purpose, when it was "neither new moon or the Sabbath." But the words of a deeply wounded soul are few. She only replies—"It shall be well," and vaulting into her saddle, she bade her attendant drive the animal to the top of his speed until they arrived at Carmel, the highest point on the coast of Palestine. The sequel is too well known to need repetition. Her darling lives again, all because of her pious energy. And think you not her husband rejoiced with and considered her a more emphatic "help meet," than if she had never moved herself? I have taken the liberty to call attention to this example to show that Inspiration under the law does not consider woman, even in private life, to be out of her proper sphere, because she may move first in the right direction, and that the slur of innovaters, meddlesome, too forward, is not to be cast upon her for being first in a good cause.

But time passed on, and Moses, Aaron and Miriam are dead. Joshua by divine appointment led them into the promised land. Says Inspiration—"They took strong cities, and a fat land, and possessed houses full of all goods, wells digged, vineyards, and oliveyards, and fruit trees in abundance; so they did eat, and were filled, and became fat, and delighted themselves in thy great goodness." Israel enjoyed a blessed repose for fourteen years. But again corrupted by ease and prosperity, they rebel, and cast God's law behind their back, and the Lord sells them into the hand of Jabin, king of Canaan, part of whose formidable host consisted of nine hundred chariots of iron, and who for "twenty years together, mightily oppressed the children of Israel."

At this critical juncture in the nation's horizon, the Lord called upon a woman to take the chair of state, and become Israel's chief magistrate. The record says—"And Deborah, a prophetess, the wife of Lapidoth, she judged Israel at that time, and she dwelt under the palm tree of Deborah between Ramah and Bethel in mount Ephraim; and the children of Israel came up to her for judgment." What simple dignity, all unadorned and unassuming, with a mind exalted above the pageantry and pride of external appearance, not seeking to derive consequence from the splendor of her attire, the charms of her person, or the number of her retinue; but the purity of her character, the sacredness of her office, the importance of her public services, were of far greater moment to her. The shade of the palm tree answered for her canopy of state; her rule of judgment, the law and testimony of the living God; her aim and end, the good of her people and the glory of God.

But the pious and ardent soul of this illustrious woman aspires at nothing short of a total emancipation of her bleeding country from these inglorious chains. Being a prophetess, she understood just the time to raise the siege for an effectual attack; and such was the confidence reposed in her, that Barak, that mighty man of valor, the Commander-in-Chief of Israel's army, manifested no hesitancy at her judgment relative to time and place of engagement, but most cheerfully accepted the commission, with the condition that she, Israel's chief magistrate and prophetess, should accompany him to direct in the unseen emergencies of battle.

Courage has been reckoned as an attribute peculiar to man; but multitudes of examples are on record, both in sacred and profane history, where this characteristic is beautifully exemplified in woman, as in the present case. With true patriotic intrepidity and ardor for the salvation of her people, she unhesitatingly says, "I will surely go with thee." When once at the place designated, there seems to be no delay. The prophetess' assurance to Barak that God would help, so stimulated his courage as to leave no doubt relative to a victorious achievement; and breathing this spirit into his army, he prepared them to enter vigorously into the combat, where they speedily gained a signal and perfect conquest. Says the record—"But Barak pursued after the chariots, and after the host, unto Harosheth of the Gentiles; and all the host of Sisera fell upon the edge of the sword; and there was not a man left." Immediately, on that very day, did this true prophetess with Barak lead all Israel to turn with holy triumph, and exultant joy, to praise Him who had gotten them the victory.

Without hearing the music set to it, the poetry itself is sufficiently grand to incline us to linger long in its contemplation, as well as many other graceful characteristics around which much moral beauty clusters. But the contemplation of all her virtues is not the point of the present discussion; rather, it is the position occupied by this woman in which we are now interested, from the fact that the God of the Bible placed her in this position.

Perhaps all are aware that the present finds a class who are seeking the true elevation of woman by the use of sound reason, always in harmony with the divine word: while there is still another class of would-be reformers, [illegible] the rights of woman, discarding the Scriptures entirely, and not only discard them, but use the most opprobrious epithets relative to them, because, as they claim, they degrade and enslave woman—their ire being particularly employed upon the Old Testament. Now how does this history of Miriam and Deborah comport with the idea that the Old Testament denies woman the improvement of those gifts and powers furnished her by nature and grace? Does this look as though the God of the Old Testament restricted woman's energies to domestic life, so that she may not venture out of that vale without incurring his wrath? Although the like statements have been made by those possessing intelligence in some directions, it must be apparent to the Bible student that such statements are entirely without foundation; indeed, they are a foul slander.

Thus far, we have seen nothing that savored of oppression under the Law, but, on the contrary, we have seen woman raised to the higher position of Church and State, receiving that power from the God of the Old Testament. After the wonderful victory achieved by Deborah, Israel enjoyed this timely deliverance, rendering emotions of gratitude to the Eternal.

FOREWARNINGS.

H. PRATT.

How mindful is our heavenly Father of the creatures he has made. Even the sparrows are not forgotten. "The stork . . . knoweth her appointed times, and the turtle, . . . crane, and the swallow, observe the time of their coming; but my people, [oh, how sad!] know not the judgment of the Lord." When the winter approacheth, how many fitful blasts announce its coming. Man alone permits himself to be snared. Yet the Lord is merciful, and often repeats his warning, though some will pass on and be punished. Seed time will come, and winter will not delay, whether men regard its premonitions or not. But how merciful is our heavenly Father to admonish us.

Just so with his judgments; terrible though they may be, they will come, and come at the time appointed. Fearful are those now pending, but the prophet meekly encourages hope by saying, "Seek meekness; it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger." Fearful desolations are predicted, and fearful are the omens that foretell them. When God declares that he will shake the heavens and the earth, the sea and dry land, to such an extent as to remove the present arrangement of earth and sea, and establish the eternal kingdom that cannot be moved, faith says it will be so, and watches for those harbingers that are to herald that event. Nor does she watch in vain. The terrible earthquake, the fearful typhoon, the fiery heavens, and the roaring sea, tell to this generation that the shaking is coming. Earth must be desolated. God has declared it.

How grateful should man be for such successive warnings. How sad the picture of Habakkuk—"The fig-tree shall not blossom [how gloomy such a spring!]; neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labor of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls." How terrible that day! He says, "When I heard, my belly trembled; . . . rottenness entered into my bones, and I trembled in myself, that I might rest in the day of trouble." When the winter is coming, then cold storms and wintry blasts are its harbingers; and when such desolations as the above are approaching, then events of the same nature will give their threatening warning. Jeremiah adds to this list of desolations by saying, I looked to "the heavens and they had no light," "and all the birds of the heavens were fled"; and to the earth, and "there was no man," and in view of which he experiences the same feelings as Habakkuk, and cries, "My bowels, my bowels; I am pained at my very heart."

The cattle disease,—how fearful its ravages have been for some years, and yet men cannot learn that it is but a harbinger of that time of trouble. The flocks are smitten; but who learns by this that it is but a signal of the time when they shall be utterly "cut off from the fold"? These are soon forgotten, still our heavenly Father does not leave us to ourselves. Flocks may fail, and but few realize it; the vines may be without fruit, but other countries suffer more than we; but when the horses are touched, then Americans suffer. They must be cut off from the stalls. How could the Lord have so effectually brought us to consider, as by this horse disease now raging in our midst? Freights upon railroads are piled up, and the decayable is spoiling; merchants are at their wits' end to devise ways of sending out and receiving goods; shipments are delayed; physicians walk to see their patients, or leave them to get well; grocers employ their clerks in wheelbarrows; livery men are moaning the great calamity and loss; builders have to stop right in the teeth of winter, when the moments are like gold cast away; the harness-makers look in vain for customers, and carriage depositories are desolate; the [illegible] is gone, our streets are deserted, and all here seem perplexed and distressed. And is this the fulfillment of prophecy? No, it is but the premonition of the desolations that are coming. The cause is said to be atmospheric. Why, then, does it not follow atmospheric currents like storms? Though the virus may be in the atmosphere, its progress is electrical, going with lightning speed against all and every current of atmosphere, accomplishing its work of warning; and, passing on, it reaches Boston at the east, and Buffalo and Rochester south and west, nearly at the same time. No horses now for the gay, the dashing, for pleasure, or even for funerals. Yet it is the harbinger of my coming Savior, and I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation.

DEFINITE TIME.

WM. PENN.

"The wise shall understand."—DAN. 12: 10.

The above declaration stands in the imperative mood, and will have a fulfilment. The thing to be settled is, what is embraced in the term "understand?" Definite time, say nearly all. Now if that is the correct answer, some one, or more, will be informed of the time of what? Why, the time of Christ's coming, say all again. But hold on. Now let us be very cool-headed while we survey this land-mark, and see if the definite time of Christ's coming is plainly foretold in this passage.

There are certain wonderful developments here spoken of, and certain periods mentioned, as the duration of something not positively specified. Here is a power that takes away the daily sacrifice (or something)—the angel does not call it a sacrifice, but the translators have; if the angel had named it, we would have known more about it, perhaps. There is placed the abomination that maketh desolate, somewhere; but the angel does not here tell Daniel where this abomination is set up. We are left to conjecture, and we conclude it is in the church of Christ; but the prophecy does not assert such a thing. In Matt. 24: 15, Jesus refers to Daniel the prophet, and says—"When ye, therefore, shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place [whoso readeth let him understand], then let them which be in Judea flee into the mountains." Notwithstanding my sympathies and prejudices would place this language in its fulfillment far this side of the destruction of Jerusalem, my convictions of truth demand me to believe it to have direct reference to the destruction of Jerusalem. The 21st of Luke seems to place the chronology of this beyond a mistake in the matter;—"And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh." What desolation are they to know is nigh? How are they to conclude that Jerusalem is to be desolated any more by an army surrounding it now, than heretofore? Because "these (are to) be the days of vengeance, that all things which are written may be fulfilled."

Did Daniel write any thing that was to be fulfilled in this? I am compelled, by placing all the matters recorded in Luke 21: 20—23, and Matt 24: 15—16 together, to see that the destruction of Jerusalem is the burden of the Savior's language and quotation from Daniel. The Savior begins his narrative (Matthew 24: 4), with a precautionary remark—"Take heed that no man deceive you." He then gives in detail the prominent developments among the nations; such as false Christs, wars, and rumors of wars, nation rising against nation, famines and pestilences, earthquakes in divers places; then should they deliver his followers up to be afflicted, and shall kill them, etc., referring doubtless to the Pagan persecutions; then they should be offended, and should betray one another, and should hate one another; and many false prophets should arise, and should deceive many; and because iniquity should abound, the love of many should wax cold; but he that should endure unto the end should be saved; and this gospel of the kingdom should be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then should the end come. We see from the 5th verse to the 14th, he brings to view, in general detail the world's developments, down to the close, even to the end itself. He then goes back to prophecies concerning Jerusalem, recorded by Daniel, and carries them down through to the end again, giving additional incidents, signs, and facts; more minutely describing the condition of the world in the last days. These facts seem to be very apparent to my mind, after a careful, prayerful, and impartial research for the truth in the matter. Hence, I am driven to the conclusion, that the desolation referred to by the Savior, in Matt. 24: 15, was the desolations of Jerusalem, and had no kind of reference to the Papal power.

I am aware that this idea will not meet with favor among many, but we shall be ruled by these facts finally; and we might as well be governed by them now. How perfectly futile the claims of immortal-soulism are to some, and, yet, with what confidence do the masses rest their hopes upon those claims. Why are they so easily persuaded? The reason is obvious; they love to have it so. How is it that each prophetic period, and each sign of Christ's coming, can be made to fit so easily into this date and that, and seem to the one exercised thereby the very rock of truth, and upon it he plants his faith, nothing doubting. Why is it? He loves to have it so, is the obvious reason.

No where in all the rounds of prophetic Scripture are we told that from a given date shall Christ come in glory. Yet, with what confidence many have placed all earthly interests upon a specific time for the dissolution of all things sublunary. No where, in all the gracious words of our dear Savior, can we find him saying, When ye see this or that, know that a specific number of years, or days, shall pass, and then shall the Son of man come. Had such been the case, we could have looked into his face and said, Lord, Jesus, I believe that, and on it I plant my faith. But no, we are thrust back by contrary teachings from him. In the foreground of his great prophecy, he places this warning: "Take heed that no man deceive you;" and he seals up his prophecy with the unwelcome decree, "But of that day and hour knoweth no man; no, not the angels of heaven, but my father only." The same ones who hear this declaration come to him after his resurrection, and just before his ascension, and with trembling voice ask, if he will "at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" He thrusts them back again by another positive declaration, saying—"It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power." Acts 1: 7. Or, as the Emphatic Diaglot renders it—"It is not for you to know the times or seasons, which the Father appointed by his own authority." Nevertheless they were to receive power, after that the Holy Ghost came upon them, and were to be his witnesses, etc. What did this power consist in? It did not consist in knowing something that was not for them to know, most certainly; but the Holy Ghost was to qualify them to prove to the world that Jesus was the Messiah; at least that was the burden of their witnessing; and not one of them ever intimated in their writings that they had obtained a knowledge of the time of Christ's coming, or the time of the establishment of the kingdom.

John, on the isle of Patmos, had portrayed before his vision a panoramic view of the world's history down to the end. There are several periods given to him, and they are applied to certain powers or symbols; but nowhere is a date given by which he could measure the time with accuracy. The panorama is opened with the declaration—"The time is at hand" (Rev. 13), and the scene is closed with saying—"Seal not the sayings of the prophecy of this book; for the time is at hand" (Chap. 22: 10); but no intimation when that time was to really come. If the Lord had designed to give the exact time to the church, would he have left it in a conjectural form; if it was of so much importance as many think it to be?

A matter that God really reveals, and wishes man to understand, is invariably set forth in unmistakable terms. For instance, Christ is a Savior. Now see with what positiveness this fact is declared—"Be it known unto you all, and to all the people of Israel, that by the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, whom ye crucified, whom God raised from the dead, even by him doth this man stand before you whole. This is the stone which was set at naught by you builders, which is become the head of the corner; neither is there salvation in any other; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved." Acts 4: 10–12. Could a sane mind mistake the meaning of the above language? This is some of the fruit of the Holy Ghost promised by Jesus before he ascended up into heaven. This is a manifestation of the power that they should receive after the Holy Ghost came upon them, and they began to witness. Such testimony as that can be understood. Show us one such declaration as that in all the book of God pertaining to the time of Christ's second coming, and it sufficeth us.

Again, the fact of his second coming is plainly set forth as the result of these witnesses testifying. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven, with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air." 1 Thess. 4: 16, 17. Could any one gather that some other than the Lord would come in his stead, from the above language? Again, "When ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." Luke 21: 31.

We see from the above examples that those essential facts are placed before the church in simple and positive terms, that do not admit of a mistake. Now is it reasonable to conclude that the time of Christ's second advent is given to the church, as a matter of importance, and is so secluded that no one has been able to decipher it? That such an event is to occur is plainly set forth; and that it was to be preceded by certain events and phenomena is also plainly set forth; and that when these events and signs had passed, it would be near, even at the doors; and here we are left, with the admonition to watch, in that we know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh.

THE RANSOM.

O. W. STETSON.

Light shining in a dark place.—2 PET. 1: 19.
The key to the position. The gates opened. REV. 21: 25.
Walk while you have the light. JNO. 12: 35.

After all the preaching, writing, printing and disputing, by clergymen, theologians, doctors of divinity, and the laity, saints, and sinners, in relation to the penalty for sin, as fixed by the divine Law-giver, and recorded in the Bible, the question is still open, and likely to remain so, unless we can obtain light more resplendent than that which emanates from philosophy, science, nature, or reason, to shine away the surrounding darkness. Fortunately for all who believe the record that God has given of his Son, the true light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world, shineth, and is to shine more and more unto the perfect day.

"The entrance of thy word giveth light; it giveth understanding to the simple." Ps. 119: 130. By this divine illumination, as a lamp to our feet, and a light to our path, let us endeavor to walk out of this thick darkness, into the brightness of that light of the knowledge of the glory of God, shining unto us from the face of Him who walketh in the midst of the seven golden lampstands, whose countenance is as the sun shining in its strength, full of grace and truth.

Theories are of no account here. Preconceived opinions must be given up. Prejudices must be kept out of the way. Creeds are for sects only. Theologies are for those who make them; superstitions for the ignorant and the bigot. The truth, and the truth only, can make us free, and if the Son make us free, we shall be free indeed. Error enslaves us. Facts are what we want, and alone can settle this penal question, and Bible facts at that; nothing else can. "The secret things belong to God, the things that are revealed belong to us and our children forever;" and the wrath of God is revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men, who hold the truth in unrighteousness.

The nature of man, the state of the dead, the penalty for sin, and the final doom of the impenitent ungodly, are all comprehended in and elucidated by the teachings of Jesus and his sufferings for the human race, through his work of redemption in their behalf, when "made a curse for us." Gal. 3: 13.

Redemption implies loss, or forfeit; also the payment or rendering of an equivalent, or ransom. A ransom is the price paid for a forfeited life, or for delivery, or release from capital punishment.—Webster. Whatever the penalty for sin may be (as denounced in God's law for punishment of offence, incurred by man through transgression), that penalty Christ must suffer, must pay, must expiate in his own person as a ransom price, demanded by the law, or there is no redemption.

In order to know what is to be redeemed we must know first what was lost, what was forfeit. This should be authoritative and final. We therefore appeal to Jesus himself. In Luke 19: 10 he says—"The Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." In 9: 56 he says—"The Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them." Save what? That which was lost. What was lost? That which Christ came to save. What was that? Jesus says men's lives. In what sense? In the very same sense in which James and John proposed to destroy the lives of the Samaritans; and by turning to 2 Kings 1: 10–14, we find it was in a literal sense; and by this we also find from Jesus himself that life in Scripture means life, and death means death. Having found what was lost we learn what was forfeit; and having learned this, we know what must be paid as a ransom price, in satisfaction to the demands of the transgressed law, in order to redeem or save.

Life was forfeit, and life only can pay the price of ransom in order to redeem from death; and this is in perfect harmony with God's law of atonement, as given in Lev. 17: 10, 11—"I will even set my face against that soul that eateth blood, ... for the life of the flesh is in the blood; and I have given it [the life], to you upon the altar, to make an atonement for the soul" (or life.) Ver. 14—"For it is the life of all flesh; the blood of it is for the life thereof." Again, in Ex. 21: 23, we read—"Thou shalt give life for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot, burning for burning, wound for wound, stripe for stripe." Such is the law of atonement, of redemption, and such is the price of ransom. Gen. 3: 17—"Because thou hast harkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree of which I commanded thee, saying, thou shalt not eat of it; cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life; . . . . in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

And such was the penalty for sin. Life was forfeit to the law. The body to the dust, the life to death, and the Spirit (or breath of life) to God who gave it. And this death, without redemption, would have been an eternal death. And this is just the penalty suffered, just the price demanded by the law, and just the sum paid by our blessed Lord, in order to redeem us from the penalty of the law.

Four fulfilled conditions are necessary to entitle to the right of redemption. 1. The birthright. 2. Nearness of kin. 3. The blessing. 4. Holding, or being in possession of, the ransom price.

All of these qualifications centered in Jesus of Nazareth.

1. "He was the only begotten of the Father." Jno. 1: 14, 18.

2. "The word was made flesh." Jno. 1: 14. "Made like unto his brethren." Heb. 2: 17. "In the likeness of sinful flesh." Rom. 8: 3. "For both he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one; for which he is not ashamed to call them brethren." Heb. 2: 11.

3. The blessing was eternal life—"For there the Lord [Jehovah], commanded [bestowed], the blessing, even life forevermore." Ps. 133: 3. He was—"The first-born from the dead." Col. 1: 18; Acts 26: 23. The first "made alive." 1 Cor. 15: 23. "Quickened by the Spirit." 2 Pet. 3: 18. "After [by] the power of an endless life." Heb. 7: 16. "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Rom. 6: 23. And this eternal life "is in his Son. 1 Jno. 5: 11. "And having received of the Father the promised Holy Spirit, he hath shed forth this. Acts 2: 33. "If we live in [by] the Spirit, let us also walk in [by] the Spirit." Gal. 5: 25. We cannot too highly prize this Holy Spirit; it is the power of eternal life, it is "the mighty power of God." Eph. 1: 13, 14, 18–21.

The thing forfeited was a blood life. The redeeming price is its equivalent. "This is he [Jesus] who came; . . . . not by water only, but by water and blood." 1 Jno. 5: 6. This blood life Jesus had, as the seed of Abraham; the son of David, the seed of the woman, the Son of man. The Adamic life was forfeited by sin (Rom. 5: 12), a life sold under sin; a life upon which the law had a claim, covering the entirety if its sum.

(To be concluded.)

A WISH is not enough to set the heart on fire in holy things; in carnal things it is enough; many such languid motions carnal men have; yea, many cold prayers that God would make them better; but "the soul of the sluggard desireth and hath nothing, for his hands refuse to labor." They do not set themselves in good earnest to get that grace they wish for.

NEW YEAR'S GIFTS.

It is the practice of people to make new year's presents to their friends. We have been thinking it would be an excellent plan, for those who love Jesus and his coming, to give the Crisis to some friend, relative, poor person, or minister, for the coming year. It might be the means of doing great good. Who will do this? We are anxious to make an extra effort to spread the truth the coming year, for all things show that our time of work is about to an end. Let us spare no effort to save the people.

Many are being reached by means of "our paper," and the members of other churches seem to be more anxious than ever to hear and read on the subjects examined in the Crisis. Will not every subscriber send it to some minister, friend, relative, or poor person, for the coming year? If not for a year, then for six or three months? All who will do this, may have the paper for this purpose for $1.80 a year, 90 cents for six months, and 45 cents for three months; or, we will give a bound volume of our discussion with Eld. Clayton on the life and death question, price 25 cts., to those who will send $2 for the paper to be given away for a year; "Spiritualism Unveiled" to those who send $1 for six months; and a copy of "What is Man?" to those who send for three months.

Will not every subscriber take hold of this work? Some may be able to give several copies. Look around, and see if there is not some poor person, who much desires the paper, but is not able to take it. Why not make such a heart glad every week in the year? A little self-denial will save enough to pay for the paper to be sent to such a one; or to some minister, or church member, and be the means of leading them to be ready for the coming of Christ.

DATE OF CHRIST'S BIRTH.

It is now admitted by all standard chronologers that the Christian era, our A. D., did not begin till some four or five years after the birth of Christ, or in other words, Christ was born between four and five years B. C., or before the commencement of the Christian era; so that 1872 A. D. is truly about 1877 years from the birth of Jesus. The following are some facts bearing on the subject.

Christ was born before the death of Herod.

PROOF:—"Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea in the days of Herod the king, behold, there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem, saying, Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him. Then Herod, when he had privily called the wise men, inquired of them diligently what time the star appeared. And when they were departed, behold, the angel of the Lord appeareth to Joseph in a dream, saying, Arise, and take the young child and his mother, and flee into Egypt, and be thou there until I bring thee word; for Herod will seek the young child to destroy him. When he arose, he took the young child and his mother by night, and departed into Egypt; and was there until the death of Herod; that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying, Out of Egypt have I called my Son. Then Herod, when he saw that he was mocked of the wise men, was exceeding wroth, and sent forth, and slew all the children that were in Bethlehem, and in all the coasts thereof, from two years old and under, according to the time which he had diligently inquired of the wise men. But when Herod was dead, behold, an angel of the Lord appeareth in a dream to Joseph in Egypt, saying, Arise, and take the young child and his mother, and go into the land of Israel; for they are dead which sought the young child's life." Matt. 2: 1, 2, 7, 13–16, 19, 20. Herod died as early as B. C. 4.

PROOF: There was an eclipse of the moon during Herod's sickness. See Josephus, b. 17, c. 6, s. 4. He died before the passover of B. C. 4. Fynes Clinton puts his death at this time. There was a total eclipse of the moon B. C. 5, Sept. 15th, 9 o'clock in the evening; and one B. C. 4, Mar. 13th, at 1 o'clock in the morning, of 4½ digits; and one total Mar. 23d, B. C. 5, two minutes after nine in the evening.

The length of Herod's reign confirms the position that his death was as early as B. C. 5. Josephus says Herod reigned thirty-four years after the death of Antigonus; and thirty-seven years after he was made king by the Romans. Josephus Ant., b. 17, c. 8, s. 1; Wars, b. 1, c. 33, s. 8. He also says Antigonus was slain "when Marcus Agrippa and Caninius Gallus were consuls at Rome on the one hundred and eighty-fifth Olympiad, the third month, on the solemnity of the fast." Jose. b. 14, c. 16, s. 4. They were made consuls U. C.* 717, which was B. C. 37. See Dr. Hale's Chronology. B. C. 37 is the third year of the one hundred and eighty-fifth Olympiad. The first Olympiad began July 19th, B. C. 776; Rome was founded April 21st, B. C. 753, or 4. In one hundred and eighty-four Olympiads there would be 786 years, to which add the third year of the one hundred and eighty-fifth Olympiad, and we have 789 years from the first Olympiad to the death of Antigonus. Take 739 from 776, the date B. C. of the first Olympiad, and we have remaining 37 B. C. for the date of Antigonus' death. Herod reigned thirty-four years after his death, which, taken from 37, leaves three full years, and part of the fourth.

Again, Herod received the kingdom from the Romans the fourth year of the 184th Olympiad. The fourth year of the 184th Olympiad equals 436 years; which, taken from the date of the first Olympiad, B. C. 776, leaves 40 B. C. for the date of the commencement of Herod's reign. As he reigned thirty-seven years in all, it would make his reign close three full years B. C., and part of another.

Again, Josephus says Herod received "the kingdom, having obtained it on the hundred and eighty-fourth Olympiad, when Caius Domitius Calvinus was consul the second time, and Caius Asinius Pollio [the first time]." Jose. b. 14, c. 14, s. 5. These were made consuls U. C. 714, which would be B. C. 40, from which take out his reign of thirty-seven years, and we have remaining three full years, and part of another. Therefore, Herod's death was not later than April, B. C. 4.

Christ was born before this. Dr. Lardner says: "The latter part of summer, or the autumn season, seems to be the most likely time of the year for the birth of Jesus." Cred., vol. 1, p. 369.

"Christ was born only some months before the death of Herod. . . . The birth of Christ could not have been later than about the close of the 4709th [B. C. 5] of the Julian period." Manual of Classical Literature, p. 64. Mr. Purver takes the same position.

Dr. Hales says Christ was born "about autumn, B. C. 5." The visit of the Maji to Christ took place about spring, B. C. 4. The passover was April 12th."

Furguson says: "The latest time in which we can fix the true æra of his birth is about the end of the 4709th year of the Julian period," B. C. 5. p. 387.

Dr. Hales says: "Christ was not born earlier than B. C. 6, nor later than B. C. 5.

* U. C. stands for Urbs Condita, year of Rome.

FARMINGTON.

Tuesday evening, Dec. 3d, we began meetings in the pleasant chapel in Farmington, N. H., and continued them every evening during the week and over the Sabbath. The results were blessed. A large number became deeply interested in the subject of entire consecration to the Lord, and decided to present their bodies to him "a living sacrifice." Rich blessings were received by many. Bro. J. G. Smith lives here, and united with us most heartily in the subject of christian perfection. His whole heart is in the work. Several came from New Durham Ridge and rejoiced with us in the service of the Lord. Every meeting grew more and more interesting to the close. The Spirit of the Lord rested upon the people, leading them to confess and forsake their sins, and giving them in return, joy and peace. Hearts that were cold were made warm with love for Jesus and his coming. The F. W. Baptist minister came in and expressed sympathy with the interests of the meeting. The truth is spreading, and strong men are rising up in its defense. The prospect is encouraging for growth in the right direction.

ST. PETER.

It is well known that it is claimed by the Catholic Church, that St. Peter was the leading apostle, the first Pope, and that he transmitted his infallible authority to the whole line of succeeding Popes. A goodly number of Catholics are beginning to get their eyes open on this subject, and are finding, from a careful examination of the Scriptures, that St. Peter had no supremacy above the other apostles. The following from "A Catholic," is to the point. Referring to an article on Acts 15th chap., from a writer, who advocated St. Peter's supremacy, he says:

"I will now try to enlighten him a little on the facts therein contained. In the 6th verse I read, 'and the apostles and ancients assembled to consider of this matter.' Now if it had been known to these early Christians that St. Peter was the infallible judge of controversies, why did they not ask him for his judgment, which would at once have settled the matter and saved them the trouble and expense of assembling to consider of it?

Verse 7. 'And when there had been much disputing, Peter rising up said to them,' etc. Therefore Peter did not speak first; because there had been much disputing before he spoke. Again, Peter gave no decision; his speech is simply argumentative; he appeals to facts known to his hearers, and says, 'Now, therefore, why tempt ye God,' etc., and concludes with these words, 'But by the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ we believe to be saved in like manner as they also—' verse 11.

Now in all this action, in this leading precedent for the management of things in ecclesiastical synods and consistories, where can the sharpest sight descry any mark of distinction or pre-eminence which St. Peter had in respect to the other Apostles? Did St. Peter there anywise behave himself like his pretended successors upon such occasions? What authority did he claim or use before that assembly, or in it, or after it? Did he summon or convocate it? No; they met upon common agreement. Did he preside there? No; but rather St. James, 'to whom (says St. Chrysostom) as Bishop of Jerusalem the government was committed." Did he form the definitions, or pronounce the decree? No; St. James rather did that; as Origen saith, 'Peter did make an oration, but St. James did enact the law.' Did he by any bull confirm the decrees? In short, doth anything corresponing to papal pretences appear assumed by Peter, or deferred to him?

After Peter had concluded, Barnabas and Paul speak to the same purpose—verse 12. Therefore it is not true that 'after the pronunciation by Peter all disputing was at an end.' Last of all James speaks, as one having authority, 'Men, brethren, hear me;' then, arguing the question and reviewing the subject generally he delivers judgment in the following words: 'For which cause I judge that they who from among the Gentiles are converted to God, are not to be disquieted. But that we write unto them'—etc., verse 20.

'This,' as St. Chrysostom says, 'is a more complete oration; it puts the completion to the matter.'

I have now given in the very words of Holy Scripture the judicial decision given by St. James. I have also shown that St. Peter neither opened the discussion nor closed it; that he neither presided, nor decided the question. I have, therefore, proved, as I affirmed in my letter of Sept. 26th, that the preacher at the Jesuit Church made 'an assertion which is diametrically opposed to the facts as stated in the 15th chap. of Acts, when he said that St. Peter decided the question and St. James merely endorsed it.

In conclusion, I demand of the writer in the True Witness, 1st, to produce both the form and the substance of St. Peter's decision, if he can; and 2ndly, to prove that the quotations I gave from St. Chrysostom are not to be found in the 33rd Homily. If he cannot do this I should advise him in future to write only upon subjects of which he has 'a personal knowledge of the facts." A CATHOLIC.

"A GRAVE DILEMMA."

In the Boston Pilot (Dec. 7th), a prominent Catholic paper, is an interesting article, headed, "After Two Years," "translated from the Italian expressly for the Pilot." The article admits the fall of the temporal power of the Pope, Sept. 20th, 1870, when the Italians entered Rome in triumph. The writer says: "Is the Pope to be subject or Sovereign?" Again he says: "Either the Pope yields, or he will be destroyed." He then says: "The Pope has replied that he will not yield." He says, "The Roman question today is where it was up to the 19th of Sept. 1870;" that is, the Pope has not yet submitted to his condition, and is determined to continue his resistance against those who have taken away his temporal power. This, of course, will exasperate the Italians to a greater degree of hatred. Stirring times in Papal matters seem to be near at hand.

In the article to which we have referred, we find the following:—

A GRAVE DILEMMA.

"Thus the question is not solved, but is cut as was the celebrated Gordian knot. Thus, then, it is necessary that the Italians, in order to leave the Pontiff independent in fact and in appearance, should withdraw from Rome, or it is an unavoidable necessity that the Papacy submit to common law and that the Church of Christ—regarding it as a peculiar association—be subject, as scientific, industrial, and commercial associations are subject. In the first case the state of affairs would be the same as before the celebrated Roman question was raised. In the second case there would be a direct persecution against the Church which is exactly the result that is sought to be avoided by settling the question.

WAR TO THE END.

And, in fact, the wisest, not desiring to embrace the first party, have rushed into the second, who although impious and foolish, is logical, nevertheless. They have said: If the Papacy exist, it should be independent; and it is not so, nor does it appear so, if there is another Sovereign in Rome. Then to rid ourselves of such independence let us throw down the Papacy. This is the last phase of the Roman question. The demagogues of Italy who have become bold and audacious through the weakness, the bad example, and through the connivance of the Government—not to speak of the other examples and encouragement which the rest of Europe gave to them, especially Germany—have created the dilemma. Either the Pope yields or he will be destroyed; in any case Rome will be the capital of Italy. And the Pope has replied that he will destroy the Papacy. This challenge has been accepted by these madmen who never open history—purblind wretches for whom, as De Maistre says: "History is not written," and trusting in a design, which is contrary to philosophy, opposed to common sense, and the general manners of nations, they attempt to strike the last blow to the Papacy to assure their dwelling in Rome.

FATALITY OF ROME.

But Rome is fatal! The deputy Bonghi, discussing the law of the Guarantees, said: "It is necessary to keep our mind's eye far forward, since the future, if it is not fearful is uncertain; and we have not yet suffered the great, the sole proof to which new machines should be subject before being secure of their work—contrast and shock." And Bonghi said well, seeing that he did not say all. The contrast and the shock which united Italy with Rome, as capital funds in the Papacy, will be fatal to the revolution, because the interests of the Papacy are the interests of the world. And how will the matter finish? What Ponza di San Martino, who fulfilled the sad mission towards Pius IX.* before the breach of Porta Pia, said in the Senate, on the 24th of August, 1870: "The day will come when Italy will absorb Rome, or will be annihilated." The day of the absorption of Rome has come; but after two years this absorption has not solved the vital question of Italy, but rather rendered it more complicated. Will Italy, then, be annihilated by Rome? We will wait Ponza di San Martino's answer to this. CONNELLAN.

* Ponza di San Martino was the bearer of Victor Emmanuel's letter to the Pope, notifying the approaching invasion of Rome in September, 1870.

FRENCH SITUATION.—The French situation has become quite critical, and there is a strong expectation that another revolution is not far in the future. The friends of empire are steadily gaining ground, until it appears that they have the ascendancy in the Assembly. It is said the German Emperor and Bismark are in favor of the return of Napoleon III., and that they will assist him in case of any armed opposition in France. His chances for return are gradually improving, and he feels strong confidence of ultimate success.

QUITE SENSIBLE.—In one of our exchanges we find an article complaining about wordy reports, giving particulars, where nothing special occurred. The writer says:—

"The brethren . . . would not give a three-cent postage stamp to read reports from Wisconsin, Michigan, or any other of the States, from young men who have held a license merely, only a few months, giving the particulars of where they went, when they started, how they felt by the way, when they reached the place, how many times they spoke, what they hoped as the result, when they left that place, and when they reached home—especially, if they have no real good and cheering result to report."

We believe the foregoing expresses the feelings of about every reader of "our paper;" while at the same time, all are pleased to read reports of meetings, or conferences, where any good was accomplished. If any are converted, or any new interest awakened, or anything worth relating, that can be told to the glory of God, send it along. It is just what is needed to stimulate others to labor more earnestly. The effect is good. We cannot promise to publish all that is sent, for such reports be condensed, as much as possible. Let every word be necessary. The more thoughts we can get into a column, provided they are clearly expressed, the better. Let us have all the good news.

WANTED,—Three copies of the Crisis, dated July 17th, 1872. If any can spare this back number, they would confer a favor by sending it to Crisis office.

IS JESUS COMING BACK?

While we ask this question, we have the reply from Jesus' own lips—"I will come again." We believe him, though popular scoffers may say, "Where is the promise of his coming?" He is coming to chase death into oblivion, and gather his sleeping saints. He is coming to make an end of evil, and cause paradise to bloom on earth once more, never to be blighted by sin. He is coming as the King of glory to reign forever, where death has reigned for nearly 6000 years. Then the prophet Isaiah's statement will be gloriously verified—"He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of his people shall he take away from off all the earth; for the Lord hath spoken it." Isa. 25: 8.

When Jesus comes, the resurrection comes; and when the resurrection comes, earth entire will be freed from the rebuke or reproach which God's people have so long shared. Tears will cease to flow, and felicity take the place of sorrow. What saint can object to having Jesus come soon, when one glimpse of the glory then to be shared shines into a heart filled with ardent love for the Savior? That the prophetic numbers indicate the immediate introduction of a new era, is abundantly evident; nor is the claim that they point to next year to be rashly treated Though dogmatism should be guarded against on one hand, apathy should not be tolerated on the other hand. Let us live where we can heartily feel that we would love to have it true, even though we do not deem the proof absolute. Let every heart breathe the prayer, "Come, Lord Jesus." W. S.

A. D. 1873.

The year 1873 is upon us. Will it bring the Lord from heaven before its close? Who can say, No? What saint would desire to say No? Have we not seem enough of sin and sorrow? When we grasp the exhilirating thought that Jesus will bring immortality to all his saints when he comes, who can wish a postponement of his advent? Not only is it possible that 1873 may bring the Lord, but to say the least that can be justly said, there is a plausibility to the argument which points to 1873 as the time of the resurrection, so far as the 1335 days are used in the computation. A. D. 538 to 1798 seems to be the period of Papal supremacy—a space of 1260 years—during which time its laws were executed against the church, directly or indirectly.

If this is the "abomination that maketh desolate," spoken of by Daniel, and if 538 is really the time when it was "set up," the 1335 must end in 1873. While we do not regard this an infallible arrangement, we do think there is too much plausibility, so nearly approximating a probability of correctness, to be rashly set aside without thought. If some anxious ones should rush to the dogmatical extreme on this topic, we should not seek to remedy the fault by blindly rushing to the opposite extreme. To keep from being scorched by the fire, it is not necessary to be drowned by the water. We can keep out of the fire and the water too. By all means, if you are not impressed even with the plausibility of the claim for '73, do not join hands with those who cry—"My Lord delayeth his coming." W. S.

"AS IT WAS IN THE DAYS OF NOAH."

The days in which Noah lived were days of sin in an excessive degree, when "the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." Gen. 6: 5. God resolved to exterminate the wicked race, and wash the polluted globe with oceans of water, saving alive a few righteous ones only. With these he commenced the world anew; but though this act diminished wickedness, it did not totally obliterated it. It soon began to exhibit itself to a limited extent, and has since been augmented in its various forms and phases, till it has nearly reached the high-water mark of evil, attained in Noah's day.

At such a time in this world's history Jesus was to come. Surely the world is already about ripe in wickedness, and the coming of Christ cannot much longer be deferred. "Wickedness is great." The storm of divine wrath is near. Omens are now thickening. We are in the ripening time. The saints are ripening for glory, or making themselves ready for "the marriage of the Lamb"; while sinners are ripening for perdition, or fitting themselves for the fires of the last day. The harvest will soon be here, and the angelic reapers will separate the wheat from the tares, and consign the tares to the fire that will exterminate them; but "he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." As the days of Noah are duplicated before us, let us watch and be ready. W. S.

SHORT ARGUMENTS.

Sometimes short arguments are more effective than longer ones, as in the case of the Quaker's attack on Universalism. After a Universalist clergyman had preached a sermon in a new place, and desired to know whether they wished him to come again, a Quaker replied—"Friend, if thou hast told us the truth, we do not need to hear thee again. If thou has told us a lie, we do not want to hear thee again." The same argument holds good against the claim of unconditional election. (1) If all men are sure to be saved, preaching cannot make it any more sure. (2) If a limited class are elected to be saved, preaching cannot alter that limitation. The old negro preacher's soliloquy is applicable on this point—"I do not know which is the biggest fool, the preacher or the devil; the preacher spends all his time in trying to get the devil's part away from him, and cannot do it; and the devil spends all his time in trying to get the Lord's part away from him, but cannot do it." Really, this theory rightly viewed, makes the ministers' services about as needless as the devil's; and makes the devil's efforts about as harmless as the ministers.

The claim so often made that it is impossible to repent till God sends his Spirit, and impossible not to repent when he does send it, leads to the question, Who, then, is to blame for our damnation? Not the devil, as he has not the power to either help or hinder our repentance, if this claim is true. Nor can we be to blame, if we cannot repent till God gets ready to let us. Is God to blame for our remaining in sin for long years? And will he finally damn us for remaining in a dilemma that he would not help us out of? Which is wrong, the premise or conclusion? God, or theory? W. S.

MENDORA, (WIS.) DEDICATION.—By request of Eld. P. W. Hough, I was present to preach the dedication sermon. This chapel, situated in a pleasant country place, is a plain and comfortable place of worship. It cost less than 1200 dollars, yet it is just what is needed in this locality. No useless display, no catering to pride. Honor is due to Bro. Hough in carrying the enterprise through successfully. We need a score of such chapels in Wisconsin, and might have them without delay if the example of Mendora were followed.

On my way to this dedication, I called at West Salem, where Eld. Foster was pastor of the Methodist church till recently. He is now with us, and pastor of the Sparta church. The epizootic among the horses keeps many from attending the dedication who otherwise would have come. It is said to attack even the deer in the forest. The other day a hunter came across two deer which were so affected that they hardly tried to get out of his way. Every branch of business is more or less interfered with by it. W. S.

THE PROSPECT.

[From the Rev. Nathan Lord, D. D., President of Dartmouth College, N. H.]

There is nothing in the disordered nature and constitution of man; nothing in the organizations of social life, which are but the aggregation and embodiment of depraved individuals; nothing in the law of life and continnance impressed by the Creator equally upon individuals and collective bodies; nothing in the prophecies of Scripture which has been fulfilled in the past history of the nations; nothing in the present state of the world, Pagan, Jewish, or Christian; nothing in unfulfilled prophecy if interpreted in consistency and harmony with the past; nothing in the doctrinal theology of the Bible, or any ethical science built upon it; there is nothing in all or any of these which justifies the belief of a self-restoring power of man, or the progressive development of society into a perfect state, or any purpose of God to produce, by his word and Spirit, in connection with natural civilization, a universal perfect state before the dissolution of the present order of things, and the second coming of Christ.

But, contrarily, it is evident, that the universal perfect state which is promised in the Holy Scriptures, in which righteous people shall possess the earth, God has provided for by a particular and express supernatural covenant, which is independent and exclusive of all natural civilizations, and has its successive fulfillments in all ages, only as they are successively overthrown. It cannot fail to impress the diligent student of the Bible, that the inheritance of the earth is not promised to mankind in general, descended by ordinary generation from Adam, who is of the earth, and earthly; but only to the ecclesia, who, by a supernatural generation, are descended from the second Adam, the Lord from heaven.

To Adam no promise was made, but remotely and obscurely, that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head. To Noah none was made, but in respect to earthly and natural society. But to Abraham and his seed were the promises made; and to them only with express and specific limitations. "He saith not, And to seeds, as of many; but as of one; and to thy seed, which is Christ." Only in this distinct and independent supernatural line do we obtain the promised inheritance. "If ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." The inheritance is equally specific; namely, the regenerated earth, or paradise restored to its former position—"For, in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed."

Till that predicted time of restitution, when the Redeemer, King, Creator, Christ, who is our life, returns to reign, the earth is alien, wicked, and abominable. It is vexed by fallen spirits, by the passions of evil man, and all the related ills of a fallen state. It is plagued by unchristian and anitchristian powers, that fill it with confusions, violence, and all sorts of crime. These allied powers of evil are emphatically symbolized in Scripture as furious wild beasts, and their course is described equally by letter and by symbol, till it is terminated by the judgment of God, which is spoken of by the prophet Daniel in the seventh chapter.—Forwarded by F. A. Rounds, Portland, Me.

CHALDEAN ACCOUNT OF THE DELUGE.—The London Telegraph has received from the accomplished discoverer—Mr. George Smith, of the British Museum—the subjoined most interesting account of the record of the deluge which he has lately deciphered from the Assyrian monuments: "The cuneiform inscription which I have recently found and translated gives a long and full account of the deluge. It contains the version or tradition of this event which existed in the early Chaldean period at Erech (and of the cities of Nimrod,) now represented by the ruins of Warka. In this newly-discovered inscription the account of the deluge is put as a narative into the mouth of Xisuthrus or Noah. He relates the wickedness of the world, the command to build the ark, its building, the filling of it, the deluge, the resting of the ark on a mountain, the sending out of the birds, and other matters. The narrative has a closer resemblance to the account transmitted by the Greeks from Berosus, the Chaldean historian, than to the Biblical history, but it does not differ materially from either; the principal differences are as to the duration of the deluge, the name of the mountain on which the ark rested, the sending out of the birds, etc. The cuneiform account is much longer and fuller than that of Berosus, and has several details omitted both by the Bible and the Chaldean historian. This inscription opens up many questions of which we know nothing previously, and it is connected with a number of other details of Chaldean history which will be both interesting and important. This is the first time any inscription has been found with an account of an event mentioned in Genesis."

QRESTIONS FOR THINKERS.

DR. JOHN BRAY.

How many souls have men? Which is the immortal soul? Is it the man's breath, or the man himself? or is it both? Commonly received theology teaches that the expression "living soul" means immortal soul. Let us therefore inquire after the truth of it. In Genesis, we are told that the Lord God made man of the dust of the earth, and that then, after the man was made, the Creator "breathed into" the man's "nostrils the breath of life [of all lives], and man [the man made of dust] became a LIVING SOUL." Thus the Bible teaches plainly enough that the man of dust without "the breath of life" is a DEAD SOUL, but with it "a LIVING soul." With this definition of man in these two estates, the whole Bible agrees; as, Ps. 104: 29—"Thou takest away their BREATH." What then? "They DIE." Again, Ps. 103: 14—"He knoweth our frame, he remembereth that we are DUST." If, then, this man of "dust," animated by "breath," is the whole of man and if "living soul" means immortal soul, it follows inevitably that an immortal soul is simply a "LIVING MAN," and vice versa, a living man is an "immortal soul." If the premises are correct, there is no evading this conclusion. Let us inquire, then—

1st. Did the "breath of life" really constitute an immortal soul, either as an entity, or personally, as a man? This question proposes another: How many souls have we? have we one or two? Inasmuch as all popular teaching stakes the immortal soul on the giving of the breath of life, it is evident that the same teaching admits that before this breath of life was given, the man had no soul at all, because no life. But did this breath of life, therefore, make the man immortal? or, did this breath of life give, or add, to the man of dust something more than himself, and to be called an "immortal soul"? How was it? On the true answer to these questions, the theology of the world, Roman Catholic, Pagan, and Protestant Christian, stands, or it falls.

But the above theology is satisfied that the "breath of life," which was breathed into the nostrils of the man of dust, was an added entity, constituting a man within a man, i. e., "an immortal soul inside the mortal man." This definition reminds the writer of a boy, to whom the question was asked in S. S., "What is a living soul?" Reply: "I don't know, sir, but I suppose it is not a DEAD SOUL." Now this, though intended as a witty get-out, is just about the truth, and as good a reply as any Rev. D. D. could have given. A living soul is a soul that lives, as opposed to a soul that is dead, such as the man whom the Lord made of dust was before the breath of life was breathed into his nostrils; but, if "living soul" means immortal soul, then the creation of Gen. 2: 7, of dust and breath, must be "an immortal soul." There is no force of logic that can avoid this result; and therefore popular theology contradicts itself in asserting that the phrase "living soul" is the same as "immortal soul." Yet, basing that immortality merely on the "breath" which was bestowed on the dust to animate it and make of it "a living man," organism, however complete and perfect in its parts and finish, could never give itself life, but "the breath" did. To see the absurdity of common belief yet further, we may notice—

1. That man's immortal soul is "breath."
2. Man's immortal soul resides in "nostrils" made of "dust"; and
3. This immortal soul is, after all, no part of the man himself, but only "breath in his nostrils," because God "made the MAN" of dust, all complete and perfect as a man, before any breath, or life, was given to it. Though dead, there was "the man." Though yet without life, there was "the soul." The breath was given to the man, and for his use as a man, but not to make a man of him. If this breath is really the soul, then while the man was yet without it, and dead, he must have had NO soul, either mortal or immortal. If, then, without an immortal soul once, and that once before life, then what when dead again and after life? No "breath of life," no immortal soul; universal theology being witness. Shall we yet further show up this absurdity? Has man one soul, or TWO?

1st. The Bible teaches that the organized "dust" is one soul, though yet a "dead soul."

2nd. Theology teaches that "the breath of life" is an "immortal soul"; ergo, every dead man has one soul, because he has himself; and every live man has two souls, because he has both himself and some other,—himself a mortal soul; the other, which is not himself, an immortal soul. The former is the true Bible soul, of which it is written, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." The other, or immortal soul, although not of Bible origin, is, nevertheless, of Bible history: "Thou shalt not surely die."

Finally. One more inquiry, and we have done. Which of these two souls is it that does the sinning? Is it the one without divisibility, base, boundary, surface; whom no man hath seen, or can see? Or is it the soul that sometimes men make a target of and shoot bullets into? Which soul is it? It is vastly important that we should know this, because, as quoted above, the soul that does the sinning must also do the suffering. "It shall" what? It shall live forever; who says so? Answer in Gen. 3: 4. Person, SATAN, the "liar from the beginning." We think now that it is perfectly clear why immortal-soul teachers never attempt to give Scripture as proof of what they teach; but only seek to reason it out by analogies and metaphors, and then, after quoting as a final appeal Socrates, Plato, Aristotle, Pope, Dante, and others, conclude by saying, "As Cato said, IT MUST BE SO." Convincing!

THE TEN VIRGINS.

L. BOUTELL.

This portion of Scripture has had various expositions within the last thirty years by us as a people. Some give one exposition, and some another, widely differing; so all cannot be true. But notwithstanding this, I will venture a few thoughts relative to the parable. The simple exposition of the word of God is generally the nearest the truth. I shall not try to explain in this but a few features of the parable.

In the first place, where and when does the term "then" apply? "Then shall the kingdem of heaven be likened unto ten virgins." "Then" is an adverb of time, and it has its chronological application. Matt. 24 gives the signs of the Lord's second coming, and the twenty-fifth is a continuation of the same, or the winding up of the subject.

The term "then" some would have cover the whole Gospel dispensation, but I think it does not. "Then" in this text reaches back to where this gospel of the kingdom begins to be preached, and no further. "Then shall the kingdom of heaven." Then shall the subjects of or for the future kingdom be likened unto ten virgins, that took their lamps and went forth to meet the Bridegroom. Hearing the cry of the angel, "Behold he cometh," and seeing the signs fulfilling before their eyes, they start for their Bibles to see if these things are really so. This begins the going forth in the parable. This is the likeness. So wherever you commence this gospel of the kingdom as a witness to all nations, there is the place for the "then."

When the sound—"Behold He cometh!" is heard, then the virgins commence going forth to the Bride's house to wait for the Bridegroom. They take their Bibles, and by the help of the Spirit to instruct, they see the Lord's coming. Thus they commenced their going forth by hearing the tocsin of alarm sounded, and many were sadly disappointed. This brought them into a tarrying time. But did it stop the going forth? The Lord had not come, and the signs increased. Others searched for the signs, and heard the blessed sound—He is coming! and they went forth expecting, and were disappointed; they come into a tarrying time. But the watchmen continue to cry—"Behold He cometh!" Others still hear the sound, trim their lamps, and go forth to the Bride's house, and here wait for the Bridegroom.

The sleeping occurs at the Bride's house, waiting and watching for the Bridegroom. So it has been and still is to this present hour. Some within the last week have become interested in the Lord's coming, have been converted into it, and gone forth; and we all rejoice.

But has the "midnight cry" been heard? Has it been made? Surely not. "At midnight there was a cry made—"Behold, the Bridegroom cometh! go ye out to meet him. Then all those virgins arose and trimmed their lamps." Has there been anything like this in the past? Some will say, Yes. But I ask, Where? All the virgins to-day that have been disappointed are in a tarrying time. The midnight cry brings all the virgins out of a tarrying time.

Again, there is no going forth after the midnight cry in the parable. Then at the midnight cry "all those virgins arose and trimmed their lamps." At this time they find who are wise and who foolish, and they are developed by inquiring for oil. Then it is certain the midnight is still future, from four considerations—First, the virgins are still going forth. Second, the virgins are still in a tarrying, watching, and waiting time. Third, all the virgins have never at a given time arisen and trimmed their lamps. Fourth, the foolish have never been to the wise and said, "Give us of your oil, for our lamps are gone out."

The Bible midnight cry, then, is still future, and the sound comes—"Go ye out to meet Him." All the virgins, both wise and foolish, will recognize it, and all will stir; but it will be too late to get oil. The foolish will cry bitterly for oil and run to the wise, who have none to spare. They are directed to those that sell. "But while they went to buy, the Bridegroom came, and they that were ready went in with him to the marriage, and the door was shut."

Here is the winding up drama of this world's history. Then came the other virgins and said, "Lord, Lord, open to us"; but he said, "I know you not"; and they are shut out, left, and lost.

There is no intimation in the Bible that this true midnight cry can be a gradual cry; one has it this year, others next year, more the next, and so on. The Bible would utterly forbid it. It must be filled abruptly, and I think it may be synonymous with the appearing of the "sign of the Son of man in heaven," when all the tribes of the earth shall mourn," and they shall see the "Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven."

BRO. GEORGE A. BROWN.

New Bedford, Oct. 17th, 1872.

BRO. GRANT:—We are glad to be able to communicate to the brethren the good news we have received concerning our dear Bro., and former pastor, George A. Brown. He commenced his labors among us Jan., 1871, and remained here up to the time when his serious illness compelled an entire rest from all labor and care. As a last resort, his physician advised a sea voyage and a return to his native climate. Accompanied by Bro. Phineas White, Jr., he started Aug. 17th, and arrived at the home of his father, Thomas Brown, Esq., in Bradford, England, August 31st, somewhat improved by the voyage. Bro. White tarried with him a month, and brings back the grateful intelligence that he is rapidly improving under the tender care of loving friends, and the genial influences of his native air, and that he hopes in the course of a year to be able to return to America.

During his brief pastorate with us, he greatly endeared himself, not only to his church and congregation, but also to christians of every name and order. While he always bore an open and manly testimony to the truths which distinguish us as a people, he was gentlemanly and tolerant towards all. Though young in years, his earnest zeal for the truth, and his patient and careful study of the Bible, rendered him an able expounder of the "word of God"; and his christian sympathy and constant devotion to the interests of the church made him an efficient pastor.

Perhaps no affliction has ever been felt more severely by the church than the loss of his faithful and untiring labors among them. The following is a copy of the letter presented to him on leaving, which you will please publish as a token of our affectionate regard for him:—

New Bedford, Aug. 8th, 1872.

DEAR BROTHER:—On the occasion of the dissolving of the pastoral link between you and us, as a people, we desire to testify, as far as we may to the appreciation in which we hold your past services. For the faithful labor, and the untiring zeal, which you have given to this church, we are truly thankful. We deeply regret that we must yield to the separation of our pleasant christian connection. We hope sincerely that this step, so painful to us, will be of great and permanent benefit to your health, and for this we shall hope and pray. We desire through these few lines to place your hands in the cordial grasp and fellowship of the people of Christ's church wherever you may go. You can take from us the best recommendation that words can give. You leave another in our hearts, which can only be expressed in our prayers for you at the throne of grace, that you may be blessed in spirit, restored to health in body, and finally through the abounding grace of Christ, appear with your sheaves in the day of his coming; and we do hope that of all this church and people kept by the mighty hand of God unto that day, you may be able to say of many, into whose hearts the seed of the gospel from your ministration has fallen, "Here am I, and those thou hast given me."

JAMES G. HARDING, Clerk, in behalf of the church.

Correspondence.

From Bro. H. B. Sevey.

BRO. GRANT:—Since I last wrote for the Crisis, the Lord has been blessing us with the outpouring of the Spirit. Since our conference in Vienna, several have found peace in Jesus, also wanderers have returned to their first love. Three have put on Christ by baptism by the hands of Bro. Doughty, others will go forward soon. In Belgrade, many are engaged in religion. After our quarterly conference last Sept., the Methodists commenced a protracted meeting with good results. Quite a number were hopefully converted. I was called on to return to Belgrade, as some wished to be baptized. In company with Bro. Doughty I went, while the other meeting was going on. As some thought it best to hold the meetings together, in the union house, I with Bro. Golder visited the preacher. He objected, for the reason we were preaching the immediate coming of Jesus. I was much surprised to see the blindness of one who professed to be a teacher. He stated several times that Matt. 24 did not have any reference to the coming of Christ, contending that all of those signs were fulfilled at the destruction of Jerusalem. I told him plainly he was in the dark, and was seventeen hundred years behind God's light, as brought to view under the sixth seal of Revelation.

As we were deprived of worshiping with them, we went to the school-house; although it seemed hard for Bro. Golder to be deprived of the church, having paid one hundred dollars towards building it, and his wife was going forward in baptism; yet the Lord met with us in Spirit and power to bless our efforts. Sunday the 17th, four followed Jesus by baptism. We continued our meeting evenings through the week following. Some came out on the Lord's side. Strong men gave the best evidence of their acceptance with God; backsliders were reclaimed, and six followed the example of Jesus by baptism Sunday the 24th. The work still goes on. Some have gone east, others west. May they let their light shine.

I have to say, to the praise of God, the last few months are among the best of my life. I have felt free in the Lord, and fulness of joy. Praise his dear name. A number received the baptism of the Holy Spirit in our meetings. Dear Brn. and Srs., rest not until you have the evidence that Jesus saves now with fulness of peace and joy. Jesus will soon come. He will find a people that have made themselves ready to enter the kingdom, without spot or wrinkle. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Amen.

Mt. Vernon, Me. H. B. SEVEY.

P. S.—Brethren and sisters, I will fill my engagements as soon as possible. Pray for me. H. B. S.

From Bro. C. H. Sweet.

BRO. GRANT:—You no doubt will be pleased to learn that we are having a blessed work of grace at Steep Falls, Me. Thirteen, who never before made a profession of religion, have sought the Lord, and a number of backsliders have been reclaimed. Others are powerfully convicted, and we expect to see some of them yield soon. It is the work of God himself, and to him we ascribe all the praise. God is greatly blessing in other localities. Hopeful conversions are witnessed every week. Remember us in your prayers. Yours in haste, C. H. SWEET.

Bonny Eagle, Me., Dec. 13th, 1872.

BRO. A. J. YOUNG writes from Vallejo, Cal., Nov. 27th, 1872:—"We are all prospering as well as when I last wrote. We are having good and interesting meetings. Since I last wrote, there have been seven baptized; some of them were recently converted, and some reclaimed. Bro. Reed is in Suisun Valley, holding meetings. The ordinance of baptism was administered and a church organized last Lord's day. Bro. Fassett was up a few days, and will return soon. The paper to-day states that they are holding forth to crowded houses."

CHURCH AND STATE.—A cable despatch from Berlin, bearing date of Monday, brings intelligence that the war between Church and State in Germany, which has been so long pending, has opened at last in good earnest, the former offering the first provocation, and the latter striking the first blow. On Sunday, the Catholic church edifices belonging to the government, in the city and province of Posen, were closed, and services therein forbidden, on account of a willful infringement of the edict lately issued by the government relative to church matters. It appears that the archbishop of Posen lately issued an inflammatory pastoral, which was read from the Catholic pulpits, and by teachers in Catholic schools. It was followed by a special service in the different churches of the diocese, which had the effect of arousing a strong feeling of opposition to the government among the attendants, and bade fair to produce serious mischief. Hence the step taken by the government, which has, beside shutting the churches, summoned all the priests and teachers implicated to appear before the local magistrate for examination on the rather serious charge of exciting treason.—Boston Globe.

DISSOLUTION OF THE ASSEMBLY AGAIN ASKED FOR.

LONDON, Dec. 1. Members of the French Left have issued a manifesto urging the people to petition for a dissolution of the Assembly. The agitation for its dissolution is increasing in political circles generally. The prefects of several departments where the movement has assumed formidable proportions have been summoned to Versailles. The members of the moderate Left are in favor of the dissolution of the Assembly. The Duke de Broglio, a monarchist, has been elected a member of the committee of thirty, in place of M. Fourton, who has just been appointed Minister of Public Works.

There was a terrible gale at Paris yesterday. Several buildings were demolished, and others were damaged.

GERMANY.

The Catholic church edifices in the city and the province of Posen which belong to the government have been closed, because the special service was celebrated therein, placing the church of Posen in her present trials under the especial protection of the most sacred heart of Jesus. The pastors of the churches and the teachers in the Catholic schools have been summoned before the magistrates for examination on the charge of publicly reading an exciting pastorate letter issued by the archbishop of Posen.

GREAT BRITAIN.

LONDON, Dec. 9. A western gale, causing considerable damage to property, prevailed yesterday throughout England. Many buildings were demolished and others were damaged. In this city a large number of pedestrians were dashed to the ground by the hurricane. Street lamps and advertising boards were blown down. Many persons were injured by the flying debris. Eight ships were blown ashore at Plymouth. The flagship Narcissus parted her moorings at Devonport, but the crew succeeded in anchoring her before being damaged. The gunnery ship Cambridge and three small merchantmen, also parted anchors at Devonport, and were blown ashore. The crews were rescued. The telegraph wires in the north of England, which were deranged by the storm of yesterday, are not yet working. Despatches from all other sections of the country bring intelligence of great destruction of property. The gale was as severe in Wales and Ireland as in England, and was accompanied by lightning and rain. Many towns were flooded. Several vessels are ashore in Cork harbor. The damage to property in that city is very great. Many buildings were unroofed, and trees blown down. Three pinnacles of the tower of St. Thomas Church in Exeter, Devonshire, were blown down while the congregation were at worship, and falling on the roof crushed through into the body of the church. The congregation was seized with a panic at the first intimation of the danger, and rushed from the building. None were killed, and their escape is regarded as miraculous. The Lebonna, from Sunderland for New York, went ashore and was wrecked off Lowestoft. The crew barely escaped with their lives. Many of the huts used by the troops at Aldershot were destroyed. At Oxford the chapel of Oriel College, Oxford University, was badly damaged, and the freight depot of the Great Western railway was entirely demolished.

SPAIN.

LONDON, Dec. 12. Despatches from Madrid state that a Carlist emeute of rather threatening proportions occurred last night, the object of the rioters being to embarass the government and prevent the raising of the new loan. The disturbance created great excitement among the citizens, many of the streets were filled with excited crowds. The demonstration against the government continued during the night, and a collision between the troops and the rioters was several times imminent. Owing, however, to the promptitude of the authorities in suppressing the demonstration, bloodshed was prevented, and an aggravated outbreak averted. The effort of the Carlist leaders to involve the government in difficulties signally failed, and early this morning peace was completely restored. A number of those prominently engaged in the disturbance have been arrested. Notwithstanding the harmless condition of the emeute, the capital is still greatly excited.

ITALY.

AN ECCLESIASTICAL MATTER.

A despatch from Rome says that the committee of the chamber of deputies who have under consideration the religious corporation bill, at their sitting (Dec. 15th), adopted a resolution declaring the suppression of the Society of Jesus, including the chief establishment of the Order in Rome, is imperatively demanded by the interests of the nation. The announcement of this action was received by the Liberal deputies with e[illegible]tastic applause.

THE relations between the French Government and the Vatican have become rather critical, in consequence of the attitude of provocation assumed by some of the more eminent in rank among the French clergy, who appear to be prompted by the Roman Curia.

DOMESTIC.

Burning of the Fifth Avenue Hotel.—Awful Record of Death.

New York, Dec. 11. At half-past eleven last night, fire broke out in the upper story of the Fifth Avenue Hotel, on the Twenty-third street side. The fire department were quickly on the spot, and were pouring streams of water on the flames, which, by twelve o'clock, enveloped the whole of the Twenty-third street side. The hose was attached to various pipes inside the hotel, thus assisting those on the outside. Many of the guests had retired to rest, or were about retiring, when the fire alarm sounded; but it was not until the firemen brought the hose into the hotel that any alarm was created. Then ensued a panic among the guests, who rushed for trunks and valuables, and made for the doors. The female domestics were considerably alarmed. The fire was first discovered by Samuel Ten Eyck, an occupant of room 23, who, on entering the hall-way, observed the smoke issuing from the crevices of the door leading to a small room near his own. He opened the door and an immense mass of smoke and flame met him. He cried "Fire," and the halls were instantly filled with men. The scene was now one of the greatest excitement. The employes of the hotel procured buckets of water and threw them into the fire. The firemen soon got properly to work, but not before the fire had ascended to the next floor and was spreading along the roof. After working manfully for some time the flames were ultimately confined to the wing in which the fire originated. At midnight it seemed as if the entire west wing would go.

On the fourth, fifth, and sixth floors, a large number of rooms were badly damaged. The dining rooms were badly damaged. The loss cannot be estimated at present, but it is believed that it is about one hundred thousand dollars. The loss on the building is probably from $12,000 to $15,000. The loss is entirely covered by insurance in the city and out of town insurance companies. Among the prominent guests were General Burnside, Gen. Porter, Mr. Pullman and others. During the confusion attending the fire many women fainted. The hall was filled with screaming guests. Many ladies were taken to the Albemarle, St. James, Glenham and Hoffman houses, and other hotels in the vicinity. As soon as the fire was extinguished the firemen commenced an examination of the top floor, and made the horrible discovery that in one of the servants' rooms, sixteen servants, men and women, had been burned to death. The bodies were all horribly charred and disfigured, and the positions in which they were found indicated that they had been overcome by the intense smoke and heat while endeavoring to escape. Six other charred corpses were found in another room adjoining. These are probably all the victims. At half-past two the fire was finally subdued. The dead bodies were taken to the morgue.

THANKSGIVING.

Oh! God, I fain would render praise
To thee, the source of life;
Would trace thy hand in all my ways,
Through this vain world of strife.

I thank thee for thy matchless grace
In giving Christ to bleed;
For calling a sin-ruined race
To realize their need.

I thank thee for the wondrous plan
Thou didst in him devise,
To restitute the earth and man
Through his great sacrifice.

I thank thee for thy Spirit's light,
Convincing men of sin;
For showing them the way of right,
With help to walk therein.

I thank thee for thy holy word,
With promises so rare;
Its lines the strongest strength afford,
And show a Father's care.

I thank thee, too, for Christian love,
The fellowship of saints;
Its pleasures are like those above,
And tender its restraints.

I thank thee for the prospect, Lord,
Of seeing thee in light,
To join that host, with sweet accord,
Who walk with thee in white.

NEWS FROM ENGLAND.

(From our English Correspondent.)

I know you love to read the letters of God's dear children, and will bear to hear a short epistle written to me by a beloved son of the Most High. Although it is an individual matter, yet it is also a family affair, and one of interest to all the household of faith. The following is from a boy-brother, or rather a very young man.

A LETTER.

"Dearest brother in Jesus,—I was very pleased to receive your very kind letter, although done by proxy, and hope soon to receive another in your own handwriting.

I have just distributed the hundred 'Immortalities,' which you so kindly sent me, and should feel obliged if you would send me shortly a fresh batch of living—not half-dead—tracts, which ring out in clarion notes the coming of the Lord Jesus, and the awful doom that awaits those who tread the Son of God under foot, and count the blood of the covenant an accursed thing.

I am truly glad to hear that you, with Bro. Brown, are doing what you can to hasten the coming of the Son of God. Pray for me, that strength may be given me (for I need your prayers) that I may endure all things, and reckon it a joy to be counted worthy to suffer for his name's sake. It is very hard though, sometimes, to rejoice and be exceeding glad when we are made the 'offscouring' of the earth. This, however, makes me long for the time when Jesus will fetch us his beggar friends to reign in life with him. The following words beautifully express the feelings of myself, and doubtless all who are fellow soldiers of Jesus Christ—

'I am far frae my hame, and I'm weary often-whiles,
For the langed-for hame-bringing, an' my Father's welcomed smiles;
I'll ne'er be fu' content until my e'en do see [Jesus coming to fetch me to] my ain countree.

My sins hae been mony, an my sorrows hae been sair,
But there they'll never vex me, nor be remember'd mair;
His bluid hath made me white, his hand shall dry mine ee,
When He brings me hame at last to my ain countree.

He's faithfu' that hath promised, he'll surely come agen,
He'll keep his tryst wi' me, at what hour I dinna ken;
But He bids me still to watch, an' ready aye to be
To gang at ony moment to my ain countree."

When you write, please say how you think I could do most good, whether in tract distributing, or in something else. Please excuse brevity, as the clock warns me that it is time to stop. Wishing you many seals to your ministry, and fond love to yourself, and all those who love Jesus, 'Fare thee well!' Your brother, C. F."

HYMNOLOGY.

In one of our leading religious weeklies, a series of articles is appearing on our Hymnology, and some of them are very instructive in their way. The popular hymn—

"Nearer, my God, to thee;

is traced back to its author, the circumstances under which it was composed are given, strictures are made on the composition itself, and we learn something about its use. The author of this popular hymn is Miss Sarah Fuller Flowers, afterwards Mrs. Adams. She was a Unitarian of the most advanced school, and attended the ministry of Mr. J. W. Fox, of Finsbury Chapel, London. This man became so radical, and departed so far from the faith, that even the Unitarian society disfellowshiped him. He retrograded from preaching the vital truths of the gospel into morality, and in time even this was laid aside for public harangues on such subjects as the public press, the corn laws, the aristocracy, and other equally and purely secular themes. Miss Flowers attended this preaching, and she it was who wrote the hymn, "Nearer, my God, to thee." Strictures are made on the composition to the effect that it fails even to mention the name of our Lord Jesus, without whom there is no approach to the Father. The sinner cannot come and meet Divine Righteousness, except by Him who says, "I am the Way"; he cannot be received or accepted except through the Sacrifice for sin. No man cometh unto the Father, but by Me." "By whom we have access unto the Father."

Apart from Christ, God is holiness and justice, and as such he is to the sinner "a consuming fire." But in Jesus he is the merciful God, who sends a sense of justification into the hearts of those who cry, "God be merciful to me a sinner." This ignoring of Christ is a positive and damning indictment against the hymn in question. A deist might sing such sentiments as it expresses, without jarring in the least his Christ-rejecting spirit. And a correspondent actually writes of hearing this hymn sung in America, after an address or addresses by the famous Theodore Parker. Read this extract from his letter:—

"Twenty years ago, the chief opponent of Christianity in the United States was Theodore Parker. He was the Colenso or the Voysey of America; but his talent and energy made him equal to a dozen Colensos, and a score or two of Voyseys. When neither Methodists nor Presbyterians nor Independents would have anything to say to him, and when even the Unitarians had cast him off, he took the large Music Hall in Boston, and there he delivered sermons or speeches, Sunday by Sunday. His eloquence and mental power soon gathered crowds, and hundreds of men might be seen, every Sunday morning, reading their newspapers while waiting for the "service" to begin.

I read some of these speeches or sermons in Parker's works some years ago, and I observed that after an address, or tirade, in which he would deny the existence of 'sin,' would ridicule the idea of 'salvation,' and would represent God as a Being who loved a Wilberforce or a Howard or a king of Dahomey with an equal love,—he would end by saying, 'Now let us sing that beautiful hymn, 'Nearer, my God, to thee.'

The effect upon my mind was such, that I have never since been able to join in that hymn. I feel inclined, when I hear it given out, to sit down,—only that I dislike to disturb or annoy a congregation. For, I perceive that the hymn was not written for Christians, nor was it addressed to the God of the Bible."

The writer of the above anticipates an objection, and answers it as follows:—

"But it will still be asked by some, 'What harm is there in the hymn? Can you point out a single false doctrine advocated in it?'

I think that the answer to this is found in 1 Cor. 10: 27, 28—'If any . . that believe not bid you to a feast, and ye be disposed to go; whatsoever is set before you, eat, asking no questions for conscience' sake. But if any man say unto you, This is offered in sacrifice to idols, eat not, for his sake that showed it, and for conscience' sake.'

The piece of meat is good, and you are hungry. A minute ago you might have eaten it, but now you must not. The thing is not changed, but its character and aspect are. You must have no communion with idols. If the hymn was fit for Theodore Parker, an idol worshiper, it cannot be fit for you."

The editor of the Christian Standard, therefore, concludes that considering its origin, its omission of reference to Jesus, its use by deists, etc., it cannot be considered a proper hymn for Christian worship. Many hymnologists have left it out of "collections," while some have unfortunately retained it. I see we have it. He advises, where it is so retained, that it remain a dead letter, be not given out, or sung, and when a revision takes place, it be expunged from the hymnal. Two other correspondents have sent letters on the subject, one of whom suggests that it may be sung in the evangelical spirit, and the other that a stanza be added as a supplement introducing the Lord Jesus as the "new and living way" to God; but these are satisfactorily answered and ruled out.

THE CREATION.

Infidels and deists are receiving a share of Christian attention in a contemporary. The following is the first of a number of questions asked for their special benefit:—"What do the very oldest heathen authors say about the beginning of the world?"

The answer is as follows:—Hesiod makes chaos first in existence, and night or darkness prior to the light of day. Aristophanes makes "chaos first, and night and gloomy Erebus," as cited by Lucian. Orpheus says in the beginning the heavens were made by God, and in the heavens there was a chaos, and terrible darkness was on all the parts of this chaos, and covered all things under the heaven. Anaxagoras says all things were at first in one mass, but an intelligent agent or mind came and put them in order. Aristotle's opinion was "all things lay in one mass for a vast space of time, but an intelligent agent came and put them in motion, and so separated them from one another."

What saith the Scriptures? "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. And the earth was without form and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters."

Surely even the infidel cannot now dispute the truth of the Bible account of the beginning, sustained as it is by heathen who are more readily trusted by him than the inspired penman.

MR. CHARLES VOYSEY,

The English heretic—rationalist, unitarian, or infidel, it is too early to say which—has lately been astonishing the Christian public of Leicester by giving out as a text a discourse delivered by him in the Free Church, a passage from what he called "The New Koran." One of his sentences, as reported in a local paper, is as follows:—"The following of Christ does not differ one iota from the following of Moses or of Buddha." Another reads thus:—"To be real followers of the goodness of Christ, without sharing any of his errors or mistakes, is our present desire." What blasphemy!

AN ANGLICAN,

That is, a high churchmen, was recently admitted into the Roman Catholic church, on the understanding that he would not be required to believe in the infallibility of the Pope. He was told it was a matter not of defined faith but pious opinion, and it could never be transmuted into a dogma of the church. He has found out since then that by rejecting that monstrosity he has come under the ban of the church, and been expelled from "holy (!) communion."

His experience and quotations, as published in the Church Times of Nov. 16th, 1872, will let us into the secrecy of the life of a certain class of individuals, and furnish us with further proof of the inharmoniousness of the Catholic faith, and will burst that mere bauble boast of the Papist, blown out so often before the eyes of the ignorant Protestant—Catholic unity.

His experience reads as below:—

"Several years ago, feeling dissatisfied at the uncertainty which prevailed in the Church of England on many important points, I submitted to the Roman Catholic Church, believing I should there find that rest and certainty which I desired; in a word, I expected to find in the Roman Church, 'the pillar and ground of the truth.' I am bitterly disappointed to find that in this expectation I have been deceived; that I find myself to-day in a worse position than ever I did in the Church of England. I am actually excommunicated for simply adhering to the doctrine I was taught when I was received into the Roman Catholic Church. It so happened that the Infallibility of the Pope was one of the points which occasioned me to hesitate, and it was only on my being assured that it was not a doctrine of the Roman Catholic Church, but only an opinion tolerated within it, and, therefore, incapable of being transformed into a doctrine, that I decided to submit. Imagine my surprise, then, to find this very opinion imposed upon me, under pain of damnation, by the Vatican Council, as a revealed doctrine of faith."

The writer then adduces the teaching of the Church on Papal infallibility, showing that it taught it to be only a question of pious and private opinion. The following are his authorities, and what they say touching the point at issue:—

"Bishop Hay, in his Sincere Christian, taught me as follows:—

Question. 'When the head of the Church publishes any decree concerning faith or morals, to which he requires submission to all the faithful, is he himself infallible in what he then teaches?'

Answer. 'This is not proposed as an article of Divine faith, nor has the Church ever made any decision concerning it. Great numbers of the most learned divines are of opinion that in such a case the head of the Church is infallible in what he teaches; but there are others of a contrary opinion.'

The Rev. Robert Manning, in a work called 'The Shortest Way to End Disputes,' says—'I am sorry he (Leslie) understands the doctrine of our Church no better, which he ought to have done, before he wrote against it. For, as a controvertist, he ought only to dispute against private opinions. Now, the Infallibility of the pope is one of these.'

Archbishop Hughes, in his controversy with Breckenridge, says—'A man may be a very good Catholic without inquiring whether the pope is officially infallible or not. He may even hold it as an opinion that he is not infallible, and neither priest, nor bishop, nor pope will frown upon him for his opinion.'

Cardinal Wiseman, in the second volume of his Essays, p. 122, says—'The Catholic Church holds a dogma often proclaimed, that in defining matters of faith she is infallible. . . . At the same time, while all agree that this infallibility resides in the unanimous suffrage of the Church, whether united in Council or dispensed over the world, the Italian doctrine extends it to the plenitude of authority, residing in its head, and makes his dogmatical decrees of force antecedently to the expressed consent, or implied acquiescence, of the other pastors. The Gallican denies this, and maintains that time must be given for the Church to assent or dissent; and only in the case of assent considers the degree binding. Practically, as experience has proved, either opinion leads to the same results.'

Here then we have four eminent approved divines of the Roman Catholic Church, a priest, a Bishop, an Archbishop, and a Cardinal Archbishop, all teaching that, as a fact, the theory that the pope is infallible, apart from the Church, is simply an opinion, which may be held or denied at pleasure. Let us now proceed a little further, and see whether an opinion is capable of being transformed into a doctrine or article of faith."

He then shows, by the works of the Church, that pious opinion cannot be changed into articles of the faith. His extracts are these following:—

"Cardinal Wiseman says, immediately following the quotation given above, 'but manifestly the assertors of neither (opinion) can demand that their peculiar theory be received by others, as the defined or acknowledged principle of the Church.' And in his third lecture on the Church he says—'But it must not be thought that Catholics conceive there is a certain mass of vague and floating opinions, which may, at the option of the pope, or of a General Council, or of the whole Church, be turned into articles of faith.'

To this agrees Archbishop Hughes, who says, 'The doctrines of the Catholic Church are fixed stars in the firmament of belief, and the transmutation of an opinion into a doctrine would be the raising a 'new light;' a species of religious reformation which Protestants have taken into their own hands and for which Catholics have neither the talent, inclination, nor authority.'

Bossuet says, in his Variations, thereby it appears, that doctrines (p. 91, Rom. ed.,) not supported by a certain and perpetual tradition, cannot strike root in the Church, since they make not a part of her confession of faith; and that even those who teach them teach them as their particular doctrine, and not as the doctrine of the Catholic Church." Book 15.

The letter-writer concludes with the following sensible remarks:—

"It is clear from the above that these divines held that the Church has not the power or authority to transmute an opinion into a doctrine. This, then, is my position. I have been taught, and I have accepted that teaching as the voice of the infallible Church of Christ, that the theory of the Pope's Infallibility was a mere opinion, and that such an opinion could not be made into an article of faith. Now, I am suddenly called upon to believe that this doctrine never was a mere opinion, but a 'tradition derived from the commencement of the Christian faith;' or else, that an opinion can be transmuted into a doctrine. The consequence is, I begin to doubt whether the Roman Catholic Church can be the infallible Church she claims to be. For, as the Douay Catechism taught me that, 'two churches, teaching contradictory doctrines of faith, cannot both teach that faith which was revealed by God; so, by parity of reasoning, I conclude, that the same Church teaching, at different times, 'contradictory doctrines of faith,' cannot on both occasions 'teach that faith which was revealed by God.'"

HAPPINESS.

GEO. M. LEE.

True happiness in connection with our life has been found to consist not in the abundance of things we may possess, but in the quality. We may abound in worldly possessions and yet not be rich, for these are all perishable; but if we have a living, active faith, that enables us to take God at his word, and that makes us heirs to an inheritance that is incorruptible, it may well be said of us we are rich. And this quality of riches constitutes its possessor a happy individual. It gives solid peace and joy. There is no excuse for a child of God being downcast and discouraged, for with such riches as these, he can even "rejoice in tribulation." Why not rejoice when we can feel the strong arm of the Lord supporting us at every step, as he surely will when our determination is to go forward in the path of duty? What can give greater joy than to feel in our hearts the language of David—"The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want?" He has promised all needful things for our comfort or best good, if we but "seek first the kingdom of God." And he exhorts all who would be sure of an enduring substance to lay up their treasure—not on the earth, but in heaven. There no fires shall burn, but it shall abide forever.

Harmony with God produces happiness, because it makes us in harmony with our fellow-beings. And when we are in harmony with both God and man, we shall do good rather than evil; and the assurance that we are doing good brings true happiness, for then we can feel the divine approval. This our Savior well knew when he gave the command—"Love your enemies." He knew that we could not be truly happy with any feeling of malice or revenge in our hearts. Hence the apostle's injunction—"Follow peace with all men." Here we must observe that "all men" includes not only those who appear to be our best friends, that think and act just to our liking; but even our enemies, and every one with whom we may come in contact. The religion of Jesus Christ shows no partiality; for everlasting life is to be given to every one that denieth himself, takes up his cross, and endures unto the end. And here it might well be stated that what is a cross for me is not always for another. For if we were to judge of the depth of a Savior's love, by the frequency of an individual's speaking in meeting, or shouting "glory to God," we might many times be mistaken as to their joy, or sincerity.

Happiness comes from bearing the cross, whatever its nature may be. And the one bearing that cross knows whether he is in a saved condition or not, without man's judgment; for the Lord is our law-giver and judge, and will surely judge righteously.

Another source of true happiness is a sincere faith in the speedy return of our Lord from heaven. He who is expecting in a short time to meet his best friend cannot be otherwise than joyous. The thoughts of a new earth, with immortality, never-fading flowers, no sickness, pain, sorrow, nor death, these all tend to inspire the weary and oppressed with fresh courage. And although some have been sadly disappointed in not realizing the consummation of their hopes of the expected time, yet they have learned that "no affliction at present seemeth joyous, but grievous," and still hope for the best, knowing that afterward it "yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness."

It is said there is "joy among the angels" when a sinner is converted, and there certainly is among God's people. They delight to meet often and exhort one another as they "see the day approaching," and welcome all who will come and go with them. The fearful sights and calamities that are constantly taking place in the world, instead of producing fear in their hearts, cause them to look up and rejoice, as they behold their redemption draweth nigh.

The truly happy will not allow their peace to be spoiled by combating with those who hold views peculiar to their own. They will be gentle, and Christ-like, and show to the world by word and deed, that their hope gives joy and peace, such as it is impossible for the natural heart to conceive. If one has the gift of speech, and another the gift of pen, or of song, no envy will arise in the heart if it is full of the Spirit of Christ. The design of our heavenly Father is, that his children should be of service to one another, and not manifest the selfish disposition of the world.

It sometimes occurs that censure is applied to those who give expression to their joy by singing the soul-inspiring songs that are acknowledged to be the "life of a meeting;" and a prejudice exists to a certain extent in regard to using musical instruments in connection with singing God's praise. But these did not interfere in the least with David's rejoicing, or even talking of righteousness; for he says—"I will also praise thee with the psaltery, even thy truth, O my God; unto thee will I sing with the harp, O thou Holy One of Israel. My lips shall greatly rejoice when I sing unto thee; and my soul, which thou hast redeemed. My tongue also shall talk of thy righteousness all the day long; for they are brought unto shame, that seek my hurt." Ps. 71: 22-24.

Let us, then, with David, be happy, and "rejoice greatly," whether it be by talking of God's goodness, praying, singing, or shouting. We all have great reason to rejoice, and be exceeding glad. First, because Christ died to redeem us, and second, because he is soon coming to earth to complete his plan, by giving his people deliverance from a world of sorrow into a world of joy.

Springfield, Mass.

WILL ADAM LIVE AGAIN?

I. C. WELLCOME.

The above question has been asked us by several brethren. We reply, yes, he must be raised from death, or the Scriptures be broken. "But," it is suggested, "did not Adam die under the penalty of the law he violated? die for the sin he committed?" He certainly did. "Why, then, should he be raised up?" Because Adam was put on probation a second time, under new law. He had failed under the law of works, do and live, and fallen under sentence, with Eve, of death. In this condition, God gave the promise of "a ransom" in the declaration to the serpent, that the seed of the woman "shall bruise [crush] thy head." Gen. 3: 15. This was a prophecy, and in it was the germ of the "new covenant"—"the law of faith." Under it Adam and Eve could not find forgiveness for their first crime; they had violated a law which knew no mercy—they must die. But they could believe the promise of God to redeem them by the seed of the woman; and laying hold of that, they could be kept from sinning more, and obtain pardon if they did, and obtain divine help to walk with God, as well as did Enoch.

That the law of faith in a coming Redeemer was instituted immediately after Adam sinned, and typical sacrifices offered, is shown in the fact that God clothed them with skins of animals (Gen. 3: 21), representing the clothing with righteousness of those that believe. Those animals, doubtless, were offered in sacrifice to God, and constituted the first sacrifice ever offered. Abel had evidently been instructed in this law, and seen sacrifices offered by faith, typifying the coming savior. So Abel offered his sacrifice. Gen. 4: 4. There was the same probation for his father and mother as for Abel, or as for any of us. As therefore they enjoyed probation under the provisions of the new law, they must of necessity be raised to receive judgment—reward according to that law. Paul says Christ "gave himself a ransom for all," (1 Tim. 2: 6.); that "he died for every man. Heb. 2: 9. Christ said, "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me." John 12: 32. Adam is one of the "all men," and of the "every knee" that "shall bow," and "tongue" that "shall confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." Phil. 2: 10, 11; Rom. 14: 10, 11. Let God be true.

FIVE TITLES OF JEHOVAH.

C. McKINSTRY.

Jehovah-Jireh—"The Lord shall see."*
He watches us all with sleepless eye;
Though weak and trembling we may be,
He is ready to help us when we cry;
Jehovah-Jireh may I be,
Ever impressed that thou seest me.

Jehovah-Nissi—"The Lord is my banner,"
And under its folds I will, fighting, stand;
In the conflict fierce I will shout "Hosannah,"
Knowing that victory is at hand;
Jehovah-Nissi, I'll never flee,
From thy "banner of love" which shelters me.

Jehovah-Shalom—"The Lord is peace,"
Like a crystal river deep and wide,
And he fills his saints with its increase,
And they love its ever refreshing tide:
Jehovah-Shalom, oh! let me
Feel thy sweet peace eternally.

Jehovah-Tsidkenu—"Our righteousness";
When all our own is in sorry plight,
He covers us over with beautiful dress,
A shining garment, all spotless, white.
Jehovah-Tsidkenu, oh! clothe me
With that dress, that I thy face may see.

Jehovah-Shammah—"The Lord is there,"
On his throne in heaven, the mighty One,
And he hears on high the humblest prayer,
That prays—"Oh! Lord, let thy will be done."
Jehovah-Shammah, oh! to me
Give answer to prayer and victory.

A SAVOR OF LIFE—A SAVOR OF DEATH.

Reading Rooms, Public and Sunday School Libraries.

D. T. NEWTON.

"Good books and papers live while we are dead,
Light on the darkened mind they shed;
Good seed they sow from age to age,
Through all this mortal pilgrimage;
They nurse the germs of holy trust,
They wake untired when we are dust."

Good books and papers preach; bad books and papers preach. One is a savor of life to life, the other of death to death. One preaches salvation, the other damnation.

Look at this subject, friends; turn it over, view it on every side; peep into Sunday school libraries, public reading-rooms—what do you see? Scorpions, adders that sting, serpents that bite, Satanic transformations, the old serpent the devil, with cloven-foot concealed.

Do you ask what harm books and papers will do tinctured with romance and folly? The same harm that personal intercourse would with the bad men who wrote them. "That a man is known by the company he keeps," is an old proverb; but it is no more true than that a man's character may be determined by knowing the books he reads. If a good book cannot be read without making one better, a bad book cannot be read without making one worse. A person may be ruined by reading a single volume. Bad books are like ardent spirits, they furnish neither aliment nor "medicine," they are "poison." Both intoxicate—one the mind, the other the body. The thirst for each increases by being fed, and is never satisfied; both ruin—one the intellect, the other the health, and together the soul. The makers and venders of each are equally guilty, and equally corrupters of the community; and the safeguard against each is the same total abstinence from all that intoxicates mind or body.

The love of fiction is a growing appetite, and one which generally wastes more time than any other. It produces a distaste for healthful mental food, and a dislike to strengthening mental exercise. However good the tone of fiction may be, or its moral, the habit of craving fiction, once formed, cannot be prevented from gratifying itself with those novels and romances of the day, which may well be described as "Satanic literature." The person who enters upon a course of novel-reading may be said to be rapidly unfitting himself for a novel and useful life. Then, all this reading is positively worse than useless. We have no faith in the effect of teaching moral truth by fiction. No real knowledge is stored by it. After reading a thousand novels, the youth may be still unfurnished with the most necessary information.

Nothing should find lodgment for a moment in our families, Sabbath-school libraries, reading-rooms, or on our centre-tables, but the salt of the earth, light, heavenly, intellectual and spiritual, life-giving, soul-kindling; such reading as elevates, purifies, and sanctifies. Family books and papers should be of the purest kind; nothing should be introduced that tends in the least to pervert or corrupt the rising generation. It is truly painful to see in some reading-rooms popular works of fiction, novels, romances, and positively infidel in their tendency.

Such libraries and reading-rooms are a curse instead of a blessing to the community. Many a young man has been ruined for time and eternity by this corrupting literature.

No book or periodical, whatever its merits in other respects, which takes the name of God in vain, uses it profanely or irreverently, which contains a profane oath, an impure or libidinous thought, or speaks lightly of the word of God, should ever be allowed in a family or reading-room. A parent ought never to allow a fascinating writer to say that, behind the screen to the eye of a child, which he would not permit any one to breathe into the ear.

Byron, Scott, Shakespeare, Dickens, and Beecher, are, more or less, defiled by profane and impure allusions, dashes or exclamations, that offend the ear of modesty and virtue. What christian father or mother would allow Shakspeare, if he were now alive, to associate with a blooming circle of sons and daughters, or read his plays, just as they now stand in the best editions? Is it possible for them to pass through the youthful mind and not leave a foul stain behind? Read the "Personal Recollections of Charlotte Elizabeth," and see how narrowly she escaped the loss of both body and soul by poring over Shakspeare's corrupting fascinations.

Are not editors and publishers rolling up a fearful account for facilitating the circulation of these reptiles, now flooding and cursing the land? Unless some means can be devised to arrest this rapidly augmenting currency of licentious and semi-infidel literature, its demoralizing effects everywhere manifest, we are lost! lost! "Cease?" When will this curse of all curses cease, that poisons the fountains of mercy, eats out the life-blood of spiritual life and salvation, ushering millions into the gulf bottomless? When will this death of deaths cease? Never, till God in mercy opens the eyes of religious editors to see the enormity of their guilt in offering polluted bread upon his altar.

"And if ye offer the blind for sacrifice, is it not evil? and if ye offer the lame and the sick, is it not evil? Offer it now unto thy governor; will he be pleased with thee, or accept thy person? saith the Lord of hosts." —Mal. 1: 7-8. "O ye priests, this commandment is for you. If ye will not lay it to heart, to give glory unto my name, saith the Lord of hosts, I will even send a curse upon you, and I will curse your blessings; yea, I have cursed them already, because ye do not lay it to heart."—Mal. 2: 1-2. "I hate the work of them that turn aside. He that worketh deceit shall not dwell in my house; he that telleth lies shall not tarry in my sight."—Ps. 101: 6.

Cast your eye, if you can, beloved brother and sister, into the reading-room at the Cooper Institute, the "Young Men's Christian Association," in New York, and into libraries of a similar character in every city, what do you see? Some twenty, thirty, fifty, or more young men and women poring over what? The good, the solid, the virtuous, the pure, the elevating in these libraries, or the froth and scum of the pit?—the veriest trash Satan could concoct. The truth is, the taste of very many of the rising age is already formed for the devilish, and after the devilish they will go.

Bonfire, burn up one half of the books and periodicals in these public libraries and reading-rooms—more yet, two-thirds at least. God of mercy, truth and love, speed the day, hasten the burning, scorching, consuming flames.

It is the duty of every man and woman who loves his country, and its better and nobler social life, to exert a positive influence against this entire class of perdition literature. It is poisoning and corrupting the hearts of hundreds of thousands insensibly but surely into the maelstrom where they will be swallowed up forever.

CHRONOLOGICAL INQUIRIES.

BRO. GRANT:—After carefully examining Bro. Barbour on Bible Chronology, in Crisis Nov. 13th, 1872, I am led to make some inquiry through your columns, if you will permit. First, where is the positive timber for bridging over the gap reaching from the division of the land to the king of Mesopotamia? Is there not some guess-work in calling it twenty years? Again, why reckon to Sampson twenty years, if that twenty is a lap on to, or in the forty years of the Philistines? Why not say that the first of the nineteen periods is from division of land to king of Mesopotamia twenty years; and so leave out Sampson, if there is no positive proof if it?

Again, Paul says from the time the land was divided to them by lot, to Samuel the prophet, was about 450 years. Now if Paul says about, because the first eight years of that time, or period of 450 years, was under the king of Mesopotamia, why say there was twenty years previous to this eight, that should be reckoned as the beginning of the four hundred fifty years, if the eight years under the king was the beginning of the four hundred and fifty years? And yet he does not count it so, but puts it down Philistines forty years, and Sampson twenty years. He says if we dare straighten out the lap and the gap from the division of the land to the king of Mesopotamia, and it should prove to be just twenty years long, it would make a nice drawbridge to cover it. That is true, but is it not assuming too much to use it, with no more positive proof than has been shown? Yours truly, waiting for more light on this point.

"This is for your Health."—Paul.

FOUL AIR.

But few are aware of the importance of pure air in their rooms. No one could enjoy perfect health if they lived in the rooms occupied by many sick persons. Pure air is all-important for the purpose of cleansing the blood as it passes through the lungs, after it has been returned to the heart from its circuit through the arteries. If we breathe foul air, the blood becomes impure, and the whole system suffers. There is no danger of being too particular about having a constant supply of fresh air in all places, where human beings live. The following remarks on this subject are from Dr. Black, in the London Lancet:

"To keep the body in perfect health it must be duly oxygenated. There must be free and ample interchange between the blood in the lungs and the air entering the pulmonary cells. The life-stream must be purified by its elimination of carbonic acid; it must be vivified by the absorption of oxygen. The fulfillment of these conditions demands a full, free, and constant admission of pure air into the lungs. This full, free, and constant admission of pure air cannot be obtained in badly-ventilated houses, crowded buildings, schools as at present constructed, theatres, manufactories, pits, underground railways, and the like.

When the body has reached that age at which natural decay or degeneration has begun, the absence of pure air hastens and increases the degenerative tendency. Where the heart is more prone than other organs to disease, the want of pure air falls with powerful effect upon the tissues of the right heart. Their nutrition is defective by reason of the impurity of the blood with which they are fed, their vital force is lowered, their muscular fibre loses its tonicity, degeneration and debility take the place of active nutrition and power. If in this condition any stress is thrown upon the heart by hurried walking, by lifting, climbing, violent declamation, passional expression, singing, laughing, or by any unusual exercise of the voice, the tricuspid valve gives way, it henceforth fails to close its aperture, and the results of back-flooding of blood upon the venous system of the body begin to follow.

If none of these exciting causes occur, the continued breathing of impure air is followed by constantly progressing degeneration of the tissues of the valves and muscular structure of the right heart; they become soft and feeble, their atoms shrink; the segments of the tricuspid are at length unable to meet in their attempt to close their aperture; a small chink or slit is left between them; through this the blood finds its way into the auricle above at every contraction of the heart; and soon regurgitation is followed by the secondary consequences produced in the general system—congestion of the liver, stomach, spleen, kidneys, bowels—by hæmorrhoids, general dropsy and occasionally by cerebral mischief.

I hold that the breathing of impure air is a fruitful source of disease of the right heart occurring after middle age. How many people ignorantly favor its occurrence by confining themselves to closely-shut, non-ventilated, hot, stifling rooms, in which the carbonic acid has accumulated to two or three per cent. of the air they respire! How many are thus destroyed by being compelled, through the exigencies of life, to pass the greater part of their time in pits and manufactories where ventilation is defective, or in which the air respired is poisoned by noxious fumes and offensive emanations from the materials undergoing the process of manufacture! How many are falling victims to the poisonous influence upon the heart of the atmosphere of an underground railway.

What do these facts suggest? How are these evil results to be prevented? The simple answer is—Let the rooms in which you live be effectually ventilated by an incoming current of air filtered from all adventitious impurities, and so divided that no draught shall be felt; and by an outgoing current which shall remove from the apartments the carbonic acid, carbonic oxide, sulphurous acid gas, sulphurated hydrogen, and other noxious compounds, as rapidly as they are generated. Apply the same principle to public buildings, theatres, schools, manufactories, pits, and to all places in which people are accustomed to congregate.

PITTING IN SMALL-POX.—To prevent those pits which sometimes disfigure the faces of persons who have suffered from small-pox, is a matter of no small interest, and I give the following as the result of my own observation. There are, at least, three things necessary to accomplish the desired end. First, prevent suppuration as far as possible; second, allay irritation; and third, keep the scabs soft. To accomplish the first and second rupture the pocks thoroughly while in the vesicular stage, and apply carbolic acid and gum acacia, mixing one part of the former to eight of the latter, and apply freely with a hair pencil. To keep the scabs soft, use olive or sweet oil freely. Continue the mucilage and acid as long as the irritation lasts, and there need be no fears of the oil interfering in any way, provided the mucilage is made quite thin.—W. C. Coleman.

WHY IS IT?—From forty years of age to sixty, I have been a healthier man than I was from twenty to forty. And why is it? I leave the reader to judge after hearing my very short story: When I was about forty I left off the use of tobacco, tea, coffee, pepper, ginger, spice, and swine's flesh.

Reader, "go thou and do likewise," if need be, and reap the same rewards. But let me give you a hint: If you find the task a hard one, consider that he who loves us, and gave himself for us, dwells within us, and gives us strength,—amounting even to omnipotence, so far as duty is concerned.—J. R. HAGGARD, in Laws of Life.

DON'T READ WITH TIRED EYES.—The moment the eyes feel tired, the very moment you are conscious of an effort to read or sew, lay aside the book or needle, and take a walk for an hour, or employ your self in some active exercise not requiring the close use of the eyes. To prevent fatiguing them, rest them frequently for half a minute or so, while reading or sewing, or looking at things at a distance or up to the sky.

WHICH?

"Yes, mother, I know; but then, you see, my good feelings only last half a jiffy."

So said my boy to me last evening, in answer to my appeal.

"I know it, Henry," said I; "but how long does it take to switch off a locomotive on to the wrong track? Once started on the wrong track, no matter how smoothly and swiftly it may run, it is running to destruction. On the other hand, a moment only, and the switch-tender will have put the locomotive on the right track, and the cars will go on safely."

"So with the heart. It takes only a moment to pray sincerely, 'Lord, save me.' It takes only a moment to say, 'Keep me from sin, O Lord.' It takes only a moment to say from the heart, 'Lord, give me the Holy Spirit; make me thy child; do not leave me; let me not leave thee.'

"On the other hand, it takes but a moment to say, 'Pshaw! what's the use? I don't care.' It takes but a moment to say, 'I'm not going to be laughed at for being a christian, I know.' It takes but a moment to drive the Spirit of God away, by simply diverting the mind, which may be done in many ways."

"And so the soul may be switched on to the right track in a moment of time, and either run safely to the end of life, by God's grace, or run swiftly and surely to destruction."

A CHILD'S PRAYER.

Jesus, thou the friend of children,
Hear a little infant pray;
Keep me, guide me, make me holy,
Gently lead me day by day.
Turn my little feet from evil,
Teach my infant lips thy praise;
Fill my heart with holy longings—
Longings for thy heavenly grace.
Make me pure in heart and conduct,
Let me grow in love with thee;
Make me, when my life is ended,
Happy through eternity.

A HAPPY HEART.

My little boy came to me this morning with a broken toy, and begged I would mend it for him. It was a very handsome toy, and was the pride of his heart just then, so I did not wonder to see his lips quivering and the tears come into his eyes.

"I'll try to fix it, darling, I said, "but I'm afraid I can't do it."

He watched me anxiously for a few moments, and said, cheerfully:

"Never mind, mamma. If you can't fix it I'll be just as happy without it."

Wasn't that a brave, sunshiny heart? And that made me think of a dear little girl, only three years old, whom I once saw bringing out her choicest playthings to amuse a little homesick cousin. Among the rest was a little trunk, with bands of silk paper for straps,—a very pretty toy; but careless little Freddie tipped the lid too far back and broke it off. He burst out with a cry of fright, but little Minnie, with her own eyes full of tears, said,

"Never mind, Freddie; just see what a nice little cradle the top will make."

Keep a happy heart, little children, and you will be like sunbeams wherever you go.—Young Reaper.

THE NATURE OF EVIL.

Luke 16: 19-31.

Either evil will continue forever or else there is a time somewhere in the future when the dismal reign of evil will be reckoned among the things that were. Which is the more preferable view? If the matter could be settled by our say so, on which side would we cast our ballot? Certainly with all our hearts we would say—"Away with evil! Give us a pure and holy universe, in which there shall be no sin or pain, or grief!" Even the boldest believers in endless torment when brought to the test lose their interest in the dogma, and wish in their hearts it could be otherwise. There are very few men who can stand by and see one of their fellows tormented without being moved to feelings of compassion and sympathy.

In Aug., 1871, there was a fire in Amboy, Ill. Among other things burned, was the city jail. In this building was a prisoner who was also burned to ashes. While the fire was enveloping the building and speedily doing its deadly work, the unfortunate man inside could be heard screaming for life. It was somewhat amusing to see people gather around that solemn spot and give vent to exclamations of pity and regret at the terrible misfortune that had befallen the prisoner; but as soon as he was dead they with one accord began to say—"It is well with him now; he is out of his misery!" But according to their view of evil, instead of being out of misery he was just introduced into it. For when he was burned up in the jail he was put into hell where the "fire is hotter than in any brick kiln," according to Edwards. I say it was diverting to see the people and hear the burning jail and rejoice at the "[illegible]" of hell! But hell is afar off and the jail was in hearing and seeing distance; and no doubt this was the reason. If these same persons could pay a visit to this awful place of imagination at present burning hell—they would exclaim—"Is this infinite? Must it continue forever?"

The idea that heaven is a place where there is no sympathy, and hence when the saints are translated to the heavenly state and become immortal, that they can look upon the misery of the eternally lost with complacency and joy is, to say the least, a barbarous, inhuman and unchristian idea. No such theory is taught in the Word of God. Some divine has said that "Christians in the heavenly state will be so very amiable that they can look with pleasing delight upon the misery and unmitigated anguish of the unfortunate dwellers in [illegible]." "Amiability!" If this is true (but, thank God, it is not), then this amiability must certainly be peculiar to the heavenly state of theology. I can speak from certain knowledge and say that no such amiability is known on earth. And I doubt if there were such a place as hell whether such could be found even there. On earth at least, men are moved to feelings and acts of pity and compassion when they see their fellows in need, and especially so when they see them suffering. The most illustrious examples of this spirit are to be found in the life and works of Jesus of Nazareth. He was a philanthropist, not a tyrant.

THE RICH MAN AND LAZARUS.

It is proper at this point and in this connection to briefly examine the above passage. I believe it is admitted that according to the popular interpretation this one comes nearer than any other passage in all the Book to teaching that the saints in heaven will be eye witnesses to the eternal torments of the wicked. If the passage teaches it upon a fair interpretation, of course we will accept of it; for we have long since learned to revere the Scriptures of truth as of supreme authority, and to regard their decision as the end of all controversy.

Is the passage historic or parabolic? If it be a history, then the following itemized facts are to be accepted without further addition or explanation.

[illegible] There were two men—a rich man and a poor man, living at the same time with each other. [illegible] At the end of their natural life both of these men died.

Are you not one of his servants [illegible] Only one of them, the rich man, after his death was buried. The other, the Beggar, instead of being buried when he died, was carried by angels into "Abraham's bosom."

5. After the burial of the rich man, and the transportation of the poor man to Abraham's bosom, the former found himself in "torments," while the latter was being "comforted."

6. Although the rich man "seeth Abraham afar off," yet they were near enough to converse with each other, and therefore heaven and hell (if this be the subject of the discourse) are within talking distance of each other.

6. Lazarus is the representative of the righteous. It therefore follows that this class instead of going to heaven at death, are safely and securely, and easily housed in "Abraham's bosom." This is what the passage teaches if it be a history, and this item in the narrative is just as true and just as worthy of our acceptance as either of the others. For an inspired document that is faulty in one point is unworthy of confidence in every respect.

7. The inhabitants of hell could not vacate their dreary and dismal home and escape into the more delightful and happy abode of the saved were it not for the fact that between these residences there is a "great gulf fixed," so that they which would pass from one to the other "cannot." A very happy arrangement indeed for the "comforted" inhabitants of "Abraham's bosom," but unfortunate enough for the unhappy and the unsaved whose eternal lot is cast in this awful lake of fire simply because of this impassable gulf, over which if they could cross they would enter the fields of indescribable bliss and felicity.

8. The request of the rich man and the reply of Abraham entertain the idea that in the heavenly state they have cold water. When the request is made the only objection urged is one respecting navigation. And the impression left is that if Abraham could only cross the gulf he would administer the wanted comfort. Query: If a drop (and that is as much as the "tip of his finger" could hold at once) of water would "cool" his "tongue," what would a bucket full of water do for him? Further, if a little water would put out part of the fire in hell, would not enough water extinguish the whole of it?

Such are some of the absurdities of the historic interpretation of this passage. And it will not meet the case to cry "irreverence." It is not treating the Scriptures irreverently to show the absurdities of a false interpretation of them. The greater part of the above facts is perfectly absurd and ridiculous. Still however they are facts and must be entertained as such, if the passage under consideration be a history. But the Scriptures do not teach absurdities, neither do they relate history that involves absurdities. We must therefore conclude that the interpretation of this passage as a history is a false interpretation, and misapprehends its true purpose.

The passage is in the Bible and I would be the last one to try to figure it out of the Bible. All I desire is to save it from the vengeance of a violent interpretation. It was not inserted in the Book of books without a design. The Lord is its author, and it must be respected.

Jesus spake to the Jews by parables, and without a parable spake he not unto them. We have information to this effect in the word of God. The sixteenth chapter of Luke was addressed to the Jews; therefore it is a discourse composed of parables. Perhaps some will say, this is a short way of disposing of the case. True, it is short; and it is also true that it is both a scriptural and a logical way of settling the point that it is a parable. But it is also admitted by many of the best Bible critics that it is a parable.

If it is a parable it does not mean what it says. Each element in a parable must be symbolic, i. e., used as a symbol in the parable. For instance, in the parable of the "wheat and tares," as it is familiarly called, does wheat mean wheat? Certainly not. It says wheat, but it means the "children of the kingdom." In the parable it is wheat; in the thing symbolized by that parable it is the righteous.

In the parable we are considering a rich man does not mean a rich man. "The rich man" is an element in the parable, and as such symbolized something else. So with the "beggar." So with "Abraham" and his "bosom." So with the "gulf." The "burial," the "carried by angels," the "torments," the "flame," the "comfort," the "five brethren," etc., are all elements in the make up of the parable; but, like every other parable, are used as figures to represent something else.

It is my purpose in this connection simply to develop the fact that the parable of Dives and Lazarus does not refer to the destiny of individuals and to their condition in the world to come, without going into a critical examination of what the passage when properly interpreted does teach. Whatever it may refer to it is located prior to the judgment. And a theory that gives man his reward before the judgment is manifestly an absurd and unsound theory. An officer that would hang a man until he was dead and then call a jury to try his case and see if he was worthy of hanging, would be regarded as injudicious and incompetent. When the Lord speaks of a judgment, and represents it as "to come" and as located at the last day, he is not indulging [illegible], but is dealing with living and veritable realities. And any interpretation of any other portion of the Savior's teaching that and (2) in producing [illegible] not yet [illegible] who have [illegible] weakened. Though they assent to their former views, they are not able to shake off the conviction that they may not be correct. And [illegible] a future victory.

[illegible] think that our labor has been lost. It is not so. We have made an impression through our widely scattered publications, that is of mighty magnitude. We have been undermining error, and its advocates are beginning to feel it keenly; and their labored efforts to prop up the tottering structure, will only augment the conviction in many minds, that current theology is out of harmony with the Bible, and opposed to sound logic. While the crop of truth already sown is thus maturing, we should not sit upon the stool of indolence, to watch the result of our past efforts.

NEW HEAVENS AND NEW EARTH.

[illegible] the ministers of [illegible] about the new heavens [illegible] They treat it with [illegible] though it were not in the Bible; [illegible] they persistently present themes, which if true, would invalidate this feature of Bible truth. Either this practice is to be deplored, or God's plan must be superseded [illegible] plans of [illegible] skies, conflict with God's plan to give the saints the new earth, whose plan will stand? Judge ye.

Said God through the prophet Isaiah: "For, behold, I create new heavens and a new earth." Isa. 65: 17. Again—"For as the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain." Isa. 66: 22. The apostle Peter, after describing the burning day, the melting of the elements, and the passing away of the [illegible] exclaims—"Nevertheless we, according to [illegible]"

According to reason as well as Revelation the "good and bad both [illegible] their respective rewards at the judgment; therefore the parable of the Rich man and Lazarus cannot relate to individual destiny, because if it does it is a history, and represents both good and bad as possessing their rewards immediately after death, which would negate all the other Scriptures on this point.

In view of all these facts, as well as many others that might be stated, it appears to me absurd and like the work of a [illegible] quote this passage in proof of the fact that the saints in the world to come will be eye and ear witnesses of the horrifying and eternal torments of the wicked. THE RANSOM.

G. W. STETSON.

The way to the [illegible]. The [illegible].—Rev. 21: 25.
Walk while you have the light. John 12: 35.
(Concluded.)

The life offered in redemption or a ransom price must be, and was, one unforfeited by sin, one upon which the law had no claim. But all life, from Adam to Christ, was of the first kind, under forfeit by sin. Consequently a new blood life had to be generated, upon which the law had no claim through sin, and this was done when Jesus was begotten by the Holy Spirit, and this life that was in the blood, Jesus gave on the cross to death, a sacrifice for sin, in order to redeem our life from death. But the eternal life is a spirit life and not a blood life, and as Jesus voluntarily gave up his blood life, he must be entitled to another life, or ever remain in death. This other life (the spirit eternal life) he got by purchase. He bought the birthright by obedience, or the right to a birth by the Spirit from the dead, which also gave to him the blessing of an eternal life. Rom. 10: 4, 5.

But the price of ransom must not only be paid, it must remain with whosoever or to whatsoever it is given in full satisfaction of the claim justly created in the forfeiture. To recall or take back (take again) the ransom, is to reestablish the claim by law, or forfeiture, and the unransomed would remain unredeemed.

Illustration. A forfeits his watch; B holds it. The forfeiture is five dollars. C redeems it by paying the ransom price (five dollars) into B's hands, but leaves the watch also with B for the time being. One hour or more after the transaction C calls again on B and asks him if he has any objections to his (C's) taking back that five dollars, paid as ransom for A's watch. B says he has not if C desires it, and C takes it back, and then (subsequently) demands A's watch as his (C's) by right of redemption. Now who is so simple as to affirm that B in justice is under any obligation to "deliver up" A's watch to C under such circumstances, or to say that C has any claim of right by purchase or otherwise upon the watch?

And this principle of right, of equity, is just as true when applied to our redemption by Jesus of Nazareth as when applied to the watch. So that, if Jesus took again that same life in ransom, he has recalled the purchase price, and no one therefore is redeemed.

But suppose the forfeiture on A's watch is twenty dollars, and C only pays ten to B but does not recall the ten. In such case redemption of the watch would fail equally as in the former case, but from different cause, inadequacy or insufficiency of ransom price. But it is affirmed by theologians that the demand of God's law upon the sinner as the penalty for sin is eternal torment in misery. But if that be the curse or penalty of the law then Christ must have paid that price in ransom (suffered eternal torment in misery) for our redemption, and if such be the penalty of forfeiture, and Christ has not paid that, then nobody is redeemed, and redemption fails by insufficiency of ransom price.

But "Christ has redeemed us from the curse of the law, having been made a curse for us," and yet has not paid the price of eternal torment in misery, therefore eternal torment is not the penalty of the law for sin. But does not the same difficulty hold if we make the second (or eternal) death, in an absolute sense, the penalty for sin? Certainly not, for Jesus made an eternal satisfaction to the claims of the transgressed law, when he gave to death (his divinely begotten) blood life eternally to remain there, in satisfaction of the law as a ransom price. He was made under (subject to) the law (Gal. 4: 4, 5), the transgression of which was sin and brought death upon man; and as man he died in obedience to the law voluntarily. But his power to take it (his life) again, as the Son of God, was clearly not in the righteousness which is of faith, but in that which resulted from his obedience to the same law, his Father's commandment (Rom. 10: 5), through which he acquired a perfected title to eternal life; and in receiving it he became the Son of God by birth of the Spirit when he through the Spirit was born from the dead. There is a truth here involved that cannot be made too plain.

As the Son of man, as the Son of Mary, the seed of the woman, the seed of Abraham, Jesus has a life precisely like that of all other men, except in its begetting and its sinlessness. But as the Son of God he had an endless life. There never was a time, however, in which he possessed both kinds at once. From his birth by Mary to the time of his death, he had "the life that is in the blood," only. From the time of his resurrection from the dead, he had the spirit or eternal life only, and both belonged to him by right. But at his baptism, there was superadded to him the Holy Spirit, constituting him Emmanuel, or God with man, as in Acts 10: 38; or "the [illegible] I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day . . . a Savior which is Christ the Lord." [illegible] "which is Christ," or the Anointed. In Luke 2: 25–30, [illegible] "And, behold, there was a man in Jerusalem whose name was Simeon; and the same man was just and devout, waiting for the consolation of Israel; and the Holy Ghost was upon him. And it was revealed unto him by the Holy Ghost, that he should not see death, before he had seen the Lord's Christ. And he came by the Spirit into the temple; and when the parents brought in the child Jesus, to do for him after the custom of the law, then took he him up in his arms," [illegible].

This Spirit of God that raised up our Lord Jesus from the dead, and by it, being thus given and joined to him as anointing, a part of himself (for "he that is joined to the Lord is one Spirit"), [illegible] this same Holy Spirit that came down from heaven to quicken the seed of the woman, that the word of promise spoken in the beginning might be made flesh; and this Spirit of God that in the beginning moved upon the face of the waters, was the creative energy by which the worlds were made, and without which there was not anything made that was made. This is that which was with Noah in his preaching righteousness to the spirits shut up in prison while the ark was in preparation. It was with the church in the wilderness; was the glory that was with the Father before the world was; was the glory of God manifested to Martha in the resurrection of Lazarus from the dead, and will quicken our mortal bodies as it did that of Jesus, when the time of the redemption of the purchased possession shall have fully come. This is that glory of the Lord that shall in fulfillment of his own oath yet fill all the earth. The superabundant and eternal weight of glory in reserve for us."

This superadded Spirit remained with and in him until he cried out on the cross, "Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani,... My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" At this point Jesus was left alone as the Son of man, to die for man, to suffer the penalty of the law, to pay the forfeit, to lay down his life, and then a "soldier pierced his side with a spear, and forthwith there came out blood and water." He then made his soul an offering for sin, he poured out his soul unto death, he laid down his life, and he never took that same life again. That was sacrificed. That was the ransom. That was the price demanded by the law in full satisfaction for its transgression, as an equivalent for the life of the world, redeemed; and having been redeemed, the world in consequence of redemption is entitled to a resurrection from death.

But if the Savior had retaken that sacrificed life, then he would have recalled the price paid [illegible]

[illegible] waters of the river, How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?" Dan. 12: 5, 6. This inquiry you will observe is made by an angel; at least this seems to be the fact; and the man clothed in linen (described in the 10th chap., vers. 4, 5, 6), "held up his right hand and his left hand unto heaven, and sware by him that liveth forever; that it shall be for a time, times and a half [or part, margin]; and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished." This declaration was made to the one who inquired after the end of these wonders. Daniel heard the inquiry, and the answer; but understood not. Did the one who made the inquiry understand it? He did not, if it pertained to the time of the Lord's coming, for Jesus says—"But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father. Take ye heed, watch and pray: for ye know not when the time is. For the Son of man is as a man taking a far journey, who left his house, and gave authority to his servants, and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch. Watch ye therefore: for ye know not when the master of the house cometh; at even, or at midnight, or at the cockcrowing, or in the morning; lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping. And what I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch." Mark 13: 32–37.

It seems that neither men nor angels had, at the time of the Savior's first advent, found out the time of his second coming. But, say you—"were they not to know it?" I think the Son will be informed; and angels will know it; and will come and inform those who are watching and waiting and ready, and when they do this, the church will have finished her warfare, and will be ushered into the marriage supper of the Lamb, and the door will be shut, and those who are not ready will fail to get ready, which fact is plainly taught in the parable of the ten virgins. Matt. 25.

Now, can the church be improved by the time of an event being given them, while they must prepare for it before it comes, and those not prepared before it comes are unable to prepare at all? Would they not serve the great end of their calling as well without time, as with it, while they, not knowing when it would come, must, to be safe, be ready at all times? Not knowing the time, their only safety is to be ready now. While, perhaps, if they were told when it was to come, and they should see it remote from them, they might be tempted to take advantage of it and risk a little time in the devil's service. Assure mankind that they will not die under seventy years of age, and how many will prepare for it at thirty-five? God in his wisdom has not allowed us to know when we are going to die; and then comes to us in his love and says—"now is the accepted time;" and his wisdom we should respect, and consider that ignorance of the time of death was our best condition, as a whole, and with the certainty of the event before us, we are admonished to prepare for it. So we being assured that judgment is coming, and ignorant of its precise time, are admonished to get ready, to watch, lest we are overtaken unawares or while unprepared.

"Does not the 7th of Daniel give us light upon the coming of Christ?" It does, and yet it comes far short of revealing the time. It shows proximity to the event, without giving the time of the event. And so with each and all the prophecies. They shine as a light in a dark place; and as each step on the journey is taken, they unfold a footing for the next, and so on to the end. Would it not be vain for a man to try to point out objects far ahead of a light, "in a dark place?" Those in immediate proximity only would be visible; so the unfoldings of prophecy light up the path of the church, and she can tell her footings by the light each succeeding event reflects upon them. She can measure the time passed on the journey, and see what is to be fulfilled in the future, and as she approaches the final events, she may know she is near the end, but just when will not be revealed till eternity's bell strikes twelve, and the blast of the archangel's voice shall shake heaven and earth, and the glory of God shall light up the heavens, revealing the sign of the Son of man, when all the tribes of the earth shall mourn, for they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. Then the holy will be holy still, and the righteous will be righteous still, and the filthy will be filthy still. No change after that from filthy to holy. O Lord! hide us in that dreadful day under the shadow of thy wing.

God and angels have done all the true time preaching in the past, and we are inclined to think they will conclude it. Noah preached the great event of the flood to the antediluvians, and God preached the time of it to Noah seven days before it came. Lot preached the destruction of Sodom to her inhabitants, but angel voices unfolded the time to Lot and angel hands led him out. We may preach the event of Christ's coming, but angels shall declare the time; not to the world, but to those ready to meet the Bridegroom. We may tell the world it is ready even at the door; and this they will not respect; but will scoffingly inquire—"Where is the promise [or evidence] of his coming?" 2 Pet. 3: 4.

Those who cannot be reached by the certainty that the event is coming will not be moved by anything as to the time. The church had to all the [illegible] of Noah, and he preached the event certain to come, and prepared for it himself, and God preached the time of it to Noah, and Noah went immediately into the ark, and stopped preaching. God has never given the world the time of judgments, as it would not help them. If they would not prepare for them not knowing when they would come, they would not prepare if he should tell them the time.

Again, if a man will not believe a statement embracing an event, without the time of the event being specified, he would not believe the statement with the time included. I can gather no reasons from the practical bearing of the time upon the [illegible] being given. I fail to see that its disclosure could be of any practical value to the cause, or to the world. A preparation for it, as certain to come, would be all that could be of any practical value, and as much so would the church would be as effectual in reaching men as to be able to tell them when it was coming. If they will not prepare for the judgment, not knowing when it is coming, they would not prepare by telling them the time. Man acts upon his faith, and if the world is so faithless relative to the judgment as not to prepare for it, not knowing the time of it, you may rest assured you will not elicit faith in them by telling to them that it is coming at a specified period, especially after you have proved yourself unable to determine the time by repeated failures. May God help his church to stand where his word puts her, and that is on the watch-tower; not knowing the time when her Lord shall come. This is her best position, for it is God's plan.

WOMAN FROM A BIBLE STAND-POINT; Or, DO THE SCRIPTURES FORBID THE PUBLIC LABOR OF WOMEN?

D. MATHEWSON.

(Concluded.)

But time sped on, evidencing the weakness of human resolutions, and proving the manna produced [illegible] Again and again did Israel sin, and provoke the ire of Jehovah; but when they humbled themselves before God, he wrought deliverance for them by various men, as Gideon, Sampson and Jeptha; but, like others in a backslidden state, they were restless, and often restive, and so completely filled with their own ways, they determined to be less peculiar in their form of government, and, directly opposed to the counsel of the Most High, they demanded a monarchial instead of a theocratical government; and when God's prophet reasoned the matter, and showed them it would be far better to adhere to their present form of government they were obstinate. Listen to their language—"Nevertheless the people refused to obey the voice of Samuel; and they said, Nay; but we will have a king over us; that we also may be like all the nations; and that our king may judge us, and go out before us, and fight our battles."

Sometimes they were favored with a godly king, at other times there were men on the throne who led them away from God, and hence involved them in much trouble. It was at such a point, when they had incurred the threatening of Jehovah by becoming more wicked even than the Amorites, that good Josiah came on the throne; and after laboring most sedulously in tearing down the idol groves and repairing the house of the Lord; seeking to remove every obstacle in the way of union with the true God, that a copy of God's law was found by the high priest, at which himself and Shaphan the scribe, were much perplexed, and when they read it to the king, he was so distressed as to rend his clothes. But a man of his high integrity knew that help only could come from God. Thus he said to Hilkiah the high priest, and Shaphan, the scribe, with five other important personages—"Inquire ye of the Lord for me."

But at this critical juncture, while involved in the deepest national perplexity, where did this important embassy go for counsel? Was it to some mighty prophet? No, to a prophetess. "And Hilkiah, and they that the king had appointed, went to Huldah the prophetess, the wife of Shallum the son of Tikvath, the son of Hasrah, keeper of the wardrobe (now she dwelt in Jerusalem in the college); and they spake to her to that effect. And she answered them, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Tell ye the man that sent you to me, Thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will bring evil upon this place, and upon the inhabitants thereof, even all the curses that are written in the book which they have read before the king of Judah: because they have forsaken me, and have burned incense unto other gods, that they might provoke me to anger with all the works of their hands; therefore my wrath shall be poured out upon this place, and shall not be quenched. And as for the king of Judah, who sent you to inquire of the Lord, so shall ye say unto him, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel concerning the words which thou hast heard; because thy heart was tender, and thou didst humble thyself before God when thou heardest his words against this place, and against the inhabitants thereof, and humbledst thyself before me, and didst rend thy clothes, and weep before me; I have even heard thee also, saith the Lord. Behold, I will gather thee to thy fathers, and thou shalt be gathered to thy grave in peace, neither shall thine eyes see all the evil that I will bring upon this place, and upon the inhabitants of the same. So they brought the king word again."

This also was under the Law. How much does this look like undervaluing female talent, and restraining the exercise of that gift with which nature or grace has endowed her? Are not these examples sufficient to deliver the Old Testament from the imputation of laws which degrade and enslave woman? More might be adduced did space allow. But as we desire to glance at a few more New Testament examples, we pass the prophetic Hannah, the pious constancy of Ruth, the wisdom of Persis, beautiful queen, just halting a moment with the prophet Joel, to read his prophecy concerning woman under the new or Christian dispensation, and see whether he circumscribes woman's talent within the domestic circle. "And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions; and also upon the servants and upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out my spirit." There

[illegible] wealthy territory. According to Arabian tradition, her name was Balkis, and has been handed down to modern generations with affectionate reverence. According to history, her dominion was the "Happy Arabia" of the ancients, and is the "Sabea and Araby the Blest" of modern poets. The modern name is Yemen. It is the southwestern division of Arabia, and embraces an area equal to the whole of New England and New York, and is especially distinguished for its beauty, fertility, and mineral [illegible]

[illegible] prophecy and its fulfillment is being expressly declared by the Apostle Peter to be on the day of Pentecost; and certain it is, according to the prediction and fulfillment, that women were gathered at the appointed time, were the recipients of prophetic gifts. No ambiguity here, but it is clear as the sunbeam it is that the handmaidens as well as the servants should [redacted] wonderful effusion [redacted] upon [redacted] and prophesied. And taking the definition as before given by Inspiration that it is "speaking unto men to edification, exhortation and comfort," it can but make public speakers of them; and allowing it only gave them power to foretell future events, it gave them a public office.

Nearly twenty years since I wrote several articles on this subject for different papers, which aroused opposition on this point, and one minister of superior talent to do away with the matter entirely, said that woman never filled any "office" in the church according to the Scriptures. I inquired whether there was any difference in the office of a prophet and of a prophetess? He replied, No; but declared that was not a public office. Yet talented as he was, arguments were minus with which to support such an idea.

Another minister adduced this argument against woman's preaching, that the gospel was never committed to women, but that it was committed to faithful men. The scripture here alluded to is found in Paul's second epistle to Timothy, and reads thus—"And the things that thou hast heard of me among many witnesses, the same commit thou to faithful men, who shall be able to teach others also." Can any one discern a single idea here that conflicts in the least with the former direction of this apostle, to assist women who were laboring for the salvation of mankind? No more than it debars women from the promises and penalties given to man. Man is the representative of the race, and God addresses him as such; but in Christ Jesus there is neither male nor female. They must receive Christ alike, and the gifts of the Spirit are to be used the same in male as in female.

It would extend the present effort at too great length to amplify upon all the circumstances of female labor mentioned in Holy Writ, as of the Marys, the deaconess Phebe, Priscilla, and Philip's four daughters, which four were all prophetesses. But quite a number of illustrations have been given from both dispensations, the Law and the Gospel, showing that no change occurred relative to this matter, but what was proper under the Law was also proper under the Gospel. Between the two dispensations, or, where we might say, perhaps, that the Law laps on to the Gospel, and yet, properly speaking under the Law, there appears a striking exhibition of female talent manifesting itself in the most public place the church of God held in their possession. I allude to the Temple at Jerusalem, a church of no inconsiderable moment, as all must concede. It was the religious meeting-house of the whole nation of Israel. At the time of our Savior's incarnation, a devout widow, who lived so near the Lord as to discern the unfolding leaves of prophecy, waited daily at this grand place of worship, not as a silent listener, but being a prophetess, the record informs us that she addressed the assemblies who congregated there upon the great subject of redemption through Jesus Christ. She understood that the promised One, who had been divinely proposed, was before her, and gave thanks to God for the sight of this precious gift. Her address to the people seemed to be received, no one questioning her right to speak in this conspicuous place. [illegible] Dr. Cuyler's church, and Miss Smiley had spoken one evening, the Council of the Presbytery would have been called to suppress the great innovation.

One more example under the Law, quoted by the Savior emphatically, but coupled with an awful denunciation upon that generation. According to the Savior's statement, one woman in the judgment of the great day will condemn a whole generation, on account of her pious energy in seeking to understand the heavenly wisdom. It is evident she knew the true God, ere she left her throne and people to perform this long and tedious journey. The record says she heard of the fame of Solomon concerning the name of the Lord, which undoubtedly incited her to prove him face to face with hard questions. And then her pious gratitude, manifested after seeing and hearing all that was said, proves her religious characteristics. "Blessed be the Lord thy God, which delighted in thee, to set thee on the throne of Israel; because the Lord loved Israel forever, therefore made he thee king, to do judgment and justice." She proves that she desired moral improvement above all [illegible] happiness; that crowns and royalties were slightly estimated, compared with heavenly wisdom. Listen to her exclamation—"Happy are thy men, happy are these thy servants, which stand continually before thee, and that hear thy wisdom." Her intelligence is apparent in that she was capable of proving the wisest man that ever lived, with hard questions. Her wealth is quite as manifest in the present she made to Solomon; "And she gave the king a hundred and twenty talents of gold, and of spices great abundance, and precious stones; neither was there any such spice as the queen of Sheba gave king Solomon." The energy of her character is transcendently illustrated in the journey itself. Says one writer, "Her journey then was equivalent to a tour now half around the globe, and must have been considerably more than twelve hundred miles over mountains and unbridged rivers, trackless deserts where the lion prowls and scorpion stings, and the poisonous simoon sweeps its blast, and the pillars and clouds of sand threaten the traveler with a living burial."

All this, and much more, a woman of her ability well understood, and that as many as sixty nights her tent must be pitched, and sixty mornings struck again, ere she reached her desired destination. And all this to know more of true Wisdom! Is it any marvel that Christ commends her? And yet she held the reins of government over a wealthy territory. According to Arabian traditions, her name was Balkis, and has been handed down to modern generations with affectionate reverence. According to history, her dominion was the "Happy Arabia" of the ancients, and is the "Sabœa and Araby the Blest" of modern poets. The more modern name is Yemen. It is the southwestern division of Arabia, and embraces an area equal to the whole of New England and New York, and is especially distinguished for its beauty, fertility, and mineral richness. It is famous for its gums, perfumes, and spices. It was of this country that Milton sings in his picture of Paradise. Much more might be given from history to prove that this woman reigned over an important realm, exhibiting great enterprise, justice, and prudence. But this is not so much the object, as to show that Christ highly commends a woman occupying a throne; and if this position had been a wrong one, it is quite obvious he would have made choice of a different example by which to condemn a whole generation.

It has now been shown that God himself has called a woman, possessing extraordinary gifts, to assist her two brothers in the difficult task of emancipating her nation from the galling yoke of slavery, acknowledging her a joint leader with them.

That he has placed another in the highest office of church and state over his own people, she proving herself equal to any occupying this exalted position.

Another acts as chaplain to the king, instructing the high priest and acting as theological professor in the college at Jerusalem.

A fourth, daily preaching in the meeting-house of the whole nation, with many others who were the recipients of prophetic gifts, with special directions as to their personal appearance when exercising these gifts. Is not this sufficient to prove that the Bible does not degrade and enslave woman, but allows her the free exercise of those gifts with which nature and grace may have endowed her?

Although man is the acknowledged head of the race, there are times and places where it is most fit and opportune, according to the Divine arrangement, that woman should occupy the highest places of honor and trust. The Old Testament, against which so many bitter invectives have been hurled relative to the rights of women, proves that in an emergency the counsel of wise and pious women was sought. It was a wise woman who concealed Joab, and prevented his destroying the city of Abel, while he sought the traitor Sheba. 2 Sam. 20: 16. Please read the whole account, and see if this woman did not possess great sway over the councils of the city, in delivering the head of this rebel to Joab, thus satisfying him of their loyalty.

Again, it was the privilege of women to appear at the Jewish court and plead their own cause, as in the case of Zelophead's daughters. Num. 27. It seems their father had died, and left an estate, which they were liable to lose. The record says—"And they stood before Moses, and before Eleazer the priest, and before the princes and all the congregation, by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation." They pleaded their own cause; and the Lord accepted their plea, and informed Moses they reasoned righteously, and their cause should be granted. If, as some claim, women had no rights or acknowledged talent under the old covenant, we should have expected these women would have employed one of the princes to have taken their case before this august judicature. But no impropriety is even hinted relative to their being their own lawyers; but they seem to be just as cordially welcomed, and listened to with as much attention, as though they had been the sons of Moses.

With these Biblical facts before us, with many others which might be adduced, is it not quite marvelous the idea has obtained to so great an extent that women must maintain universal silence in the assemblies of the saints, because of the apostle's restrictions; that she must not question or dispute with a preacher in public, and that she does not assume authority over the opposite sex in teaching? God by Jeremiah complains that the prophets prophesy wrong, and regretfully adds—"My people love to have it so." Has it not sometimes been the case, that women who have felt the promptings of the Spirit to expound the Word, exhort, or bear testimony for Christ, have tried to excuse themselves by a wrong explanation of the two texts referred to? Think you not it will be just as well at the last great assize for the man who hides his one talent as for the woman who does the same? Are we not plainly told there is neither male nor female in Christ Jesus? Those who dare go to the judgment not having done what they could, through indolence or fear of man, venture more than I dare to do. But, says one, let those who have a talent for speaking in public do so. It is not eloquent speeches the Master calls for. Cannot any woman possessing common sense bear testimony to what she knows? Elegance of diction is not to be taken into the account at all. What if it were reported of certain ones, claiming they have not the ability to testify for Christ, that they were incapable of witnessing in a court of justice; would they not feel indignant at such reports? "Ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord." What is the business of a witness? To tell what he knows of the case pending; no more, no less. Does one love God? If possessed of the powers of speech, such can say so. Indeed, persons can tell what they know of God just as well as what they know about other matters.

We are informed by Inspiration that woman was created as a help to man. Was she created to help in matters of the least importance? Does man need more help in temporal than in spiritual things? She can assist him much in spiritual as well as temporal things, if he will only receive her. Being formed from his side, it seems natural and easy that man should curve his arm in a direction to support her in this her proper place. But what if he make the curve so as to divide and elbow her at a greater distance from him, not accepting her assistance? He bruises his own flesh, acts against his own interest, consequently must be the loser.

Are we not always impoverished by thrusting any gift from us our Creator has bestowed upon us? How foolish for the ear to say to the eye, I have no need of thee; or for the foot to say to the hand, I have no need of thee. And is it not pre-eminently foolish for the Church to set the Labor of Women entirely aside, when all members, even the more feeble, are necessary for the edifying of the body of Christ? Heaven help us all to act wisely, that our accounts with our Creator may stand all adjusted, and we hear the sweet "Well done" from the lips of Him who shall admit us to an heirship with Himself.

CLOSE OF THE YEAR.

Another year has nearly run its rounds, with all its varied scenes. A multitude, who began it in buoyant hope are now slumbering in the silent grave. Mourners' tears have been continually flowing, night and day; and weary watchers are still by the bed-side of the sick and dying. Thus things must continue till Jesus comes. Those who wished us a happy new year at its early dawn have bidden us the death-farewell, and left their seat vacant in the home circle. How the loved ones are missed—the dear child, father, mother, brother, sister, husband, wife. The hours they made bright and sunny are now full of darkness. Earth seems dreary, and life almost a burden to those who remain to mourn on life's sad journey. But we most firmly believe this, night of weeping is near its close, to be succeeded by a morning of eternal joy. We can well afford a few tears and sleepless nights, besides the scorn and oppression of a wicked world, for the sake of eternal life in the kingdom of God, where sorrow's tears and anguish-riven hearts will be forever unknown. We have the best of reasons to believe we shall shortly greet those now resting in their deathless sleep in the quiet grave-yard.

O, what a glorious hope is ours. The riches, honors, and glory of this world are but vanity of vanities; fading as the dew, and as unsatisfactory as a fairy dream. Not so the christian's hope. When all else fails, this remains a steadfast anchor, holding him in the life-storm from the slough of despond, from the darkness of infidelity, from the murmurer's gloom, from the reveller's remorse, from the drunkard's delirium, from the adulterer's shame; the miser's folly, the emptiness of the proud, the disgrace of the vain, and all other wiles of the devil.

It is well to review the journey through the old year, as we approach its close, and if we see where we have failed, repent and reform, before we begin the new. Let us leave all bad habits behind, to be buried in the waves of oblivion. Let them remain forever in, the dead past, never to have a resurrection. Let no unkind words be spoken to sting the hearts of friends or foes; give all to Christ, and let the peace of God rule in the heart, and thus be ready to meet our coming King.

THE COMING OF CHRIST.

There is no event of greater importance to the Christian, than the coming of Christ. It is a very prominent subject in the letters of the apostles, repeated over and over again, as though it was continually in their minds. It has been a leading theme among the most devoted of Christ's followers from that day to the present. Whenever the church, or any part of it, has become cold and formal, the love and subject of the coming of Jesus have been put into the back-ground. The nearer we live to Jesus, the stronger our love for his appearing. This must be admitted by all of his disciples; hence Paul says—There is a crown of righteousness laid up for all those who love his appearing; implying very clearly, that if we have not enough of the Spirit of Christ in us to cause us to love his appearing, we have not enough to save us.

This love for Christ's coming is an excellent test when we wish to know whether we are ready. If we feel unwilling to have him come now, so far as we are personally concerned, it is quite evident that something is not right in our hearts. A person with a pure heart cannot help loving the appearing of Jesus. He cannot be pure till he is filled with the pure, Holy Spirit of God; and when thus filled, he has the "perfect love" that casteth out all fear. As this is the fruit of the Spirit, it cannot be enjoyed without the Spirit. Take away the Spirit from the heart, and the fruit no longer remains. Apples are the fruit of apple trees, peaches of peach trees, grapes of grape vines; and when the apple and peach trees are all destroyed, and the vines are no more, we must go without apples, peaches and grapes; so when the Holy Spirit is grieved away, its fruits of love, joy and peace are also gone; no matter how strongly we may hold on to the true doctrine. That without the Spirit will not save us.

Then it follows, if we wish to be ready for the coming of Christ, we must have his Spirit. "Now, if any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his." Rom. 8: 9. We would press the question upon every reader of this, Are you ready for the coming of Christ? Should he appear to-day, could we hail his coming with joy? We certainly should if we are living in harmony with his commandments.

That his coming is very near, we are most fully satisfied. The events transpiring all go to show that in a short time we shall see our dearest Friend. What a glorious sight, to see the King of kings, God's only begotten Son, coming in all his glory, attended by the holy angels, to set up his kingdom and immortalize his children.

"O hail! happy day."

Let us all be ready, with lamps trimmed and burning.

THE TIME CONFERENCE.

The time conference in Worcester was quite interesting and profitable. It commenced Monday, Dec. 16th, and continued through the week. A goodly number of preachers were present from various parts of New England, who took part in the examination of "the definite time argument," relating to the coming of Christ. A good spirit was manifested, which made the meetings pleasant. The main points investigated were those which related to the coming of Christ next year. After a careful and prayerful examination of the subject, the general conclusion appeared to be that the evidence was not of sufficient strength to warrant a firm belief that 1873 will witness the coming of Christ; but all seemed to be satisfied that we are near this grand and glorious event, and that those who are not ready should make immediate preparation, or it may be too late.

While a goodly number of able and devoted preachers at the conference, who have spent much time in the examination of the subject under consideration, have come to the conclusion that the teachings of Christ and his apostles do not favor the idea of knowing the definite time of the coming of Christ, till it will be too late to get ready; they are fully satisfied that events show that the coming of our Savior is close at hand. On this point all are agreed.

So far as the evidence was presented in favor of the time of the Lord's coming, we think 1875 had the chief support, as the year for the ending of the 1335 days of Dan. 12: 13; and that A. D. 540 was made to appear as the most probable time for the setting up of "the abomination that maketh desolate," spoken of in Dan. 12: 11; and that this was the point to commence the 1290 days; and that the 1260 days began in A. D. 519, with the union of church and state under Justin, the first Catholic emperor; and closed in 1779, just before the darkening of the sun, May 19th, 1780.

END OF THE SIXTY-NINE WEEKS.

If it can be clearly shown where the sixty-nine weeks of Dan. 9: 25 end, it will be equally clear where they must begin. There is no room for doubt that these sixty-nine weeks, or "sevens," as expressed in the original Hebrew, represent sixty-nine "sevens" of years, making 483 in all.

The prophecy reads: "Know, therefore, and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem, unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks and three-score and two weeks." There are but two points to settle, either of which will establish the other. They are these: the date of the commandment "to restore and to build Jerusalem," or the time when the Messiah appeared. It is immaterial which point is first settled; for if we fix the end of a given period of time, its commencement is as truly settled; and so if we can tell when it began, we can tell as well when it will end.

The period of sixty-nine weeks reaches "unto the Messiah the Prince." Then, if we can tell when the Messiah came, we may know when the sixty-nine weeks ended. We think this is an easy matter to settle, if we adhere to the Scriptures.

1. What is the meaning of the term "Messiah the Prince"? Messiah in Hebrew is from mah-shee agh, which is the word corresponding with kristos—Christ—in the Greek. The English word is anointed. The Hebrew word occurs thirty-nine times, and is rendered anointed thirty-seven times, and Messiah twice. These two are in Daniel 9: 25, 26.

2. At what time in the existence of Jesus was it proper to call him "the Messiah the Prince," or the Christ? If we should ask every intelligent person in the British empire at what time in the life of the king's son a given period would end, that was to reach unto the Prince, there would be a ready and universal answer—at his birth. He is born a prince, and continues as such till he becomes a king, when he ceases to be a prince.

3. Let us turn to the Scriptures and see if they are in harmony with this position. Says the prophet Israel—"For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of peace." Isa. 9: 6. What is the proper title of Jesus from his birth to his crucifixion? Says the apostle—"But ye denied the Holy One and the Just, and desired a murderer to be granted unto you; and killed the Prince of life, whom God hath raised from the dead; whereof we are witnesses." Acts 3: 14, 15. He was a Prince during his stay upon the earth, as he had not then received his kingdom. In Luke 2: 10–11, we read—"And the angel said unto them, Fear not; for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto us is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." As before stated, "Messiah" in Hebrew; "Christ" in Greek, and the "anointed" in English, all have the same signification. The last Scripture quoted shows that when Jesus was born he was called Christ, the Messiah, or the Anointed. It does not say, "unto you is born this day . . . a Savior which shall be Christ—the anointed;—but "which is Christ," or the Anointed. In Luke 2: 25–30, we read—

"And, behold, there was a man in Jerusalem whose name was Simeon; and the same man was just and devout, waiting for the consolation of Israel; and the Holy Ghost was upon him. And it was revealed unto him by the Holy Ghost, that he should not see death, before he had seen the Lord's Christ. And he came by the Spirit into the temple; and when the parents brought in the child Jesus, to do for him after the custom of the law, then took he him up in his arms, and blessed God, and said, Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word: for mine eyes have seen thy salvation."

This Scripture teaches very plainly that Jesus, when a child, was then the anointed one, or "Messiah the Prince." Matthew says Herod demanded of the wise men "where [ho Kristos] the Christ should be born." Matt. 2: 4.

Without citing more Scripture, we think the point is most fully settled, that any period which should reach only "unto the Messiah the Prince," must end at his birth. This, then, is the point where the sixty-nine weeks ended. Then it follows if we go back from these sixty-nine weeks of years, or 483 years, from the true date of Christ's birth, we must strike the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, issued by Cyrus, the Medo-Persian king. This commandment is so clearly expressed, that we see no room for doubt.—Says Isaiah—

"Thus saith the Lord, thy Redeemer, . . . that confirmeth the word of his servant, and performeth the counsel of his messengers; that saith to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be inhabited; and to the cities of Judah, Ye shall be built, and I will raise up the decayed places thereof; . . . that saith of Cyrus, He is my shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure; even saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built; and to the temple, Thy foundation shall be laid." "I have raised him [Cyrus] up in righteousness, and I will direct all his ways; he shall build my city, and he shall let go my captives, not for price nor reward, saith the Lord of hosts." Isa. 44: 24, 26–28; 45: 13.

Cyrus, and no one else, must issue the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem, for the accommodation of the Jewish captives released from Babylonish captivity. This must be done sixty-nine weeks, or 483 years, before the birth of the Messiah the Prince. Says Ezra—"Now in the first year of Cyrus king of Persia, that the word of the Lord by the mouth of Jeremiah* might be fulfilled, the Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus king of Persia, that he made a proclamation throughout all his kingdom, and put it also in writing, saying, Thus saith Cyrus king of Persia, The Lord God of heaven hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth; and he hath charged me to build him a house at Jerusalem, which is in Judah. Who is there among you of all his people? his God be with him, and let him go up to Jerusalem, which is in Judah, and build the house of the Lord God of Israel, (he is the God), which is in Jerusalem. And whoso remaineth in any place where he sojourneth, let the men of his place help him with silver, and with gold, and with goods, and with beasts, besides the freewill offering for the house of God that is in Jerusalem. Then rose up the chief of the fathers of Judah and Benjamin, and the priests, and the Levites, with all them whose spirit God had raised, to go up to build the house of the Lord which is in Jerusalem. And all they that were about them strengthened their hands with vessels of silver, with gold, with goods, and with beasts, and with precious things, besides all that was willingly offered. Also Cyrus the king brought forth the vessels of the house of the Lord, which Nebuchadnezzar had brought forth out of Jerusalem, and had put them in the house of his gods; even those did Cyrus king of Persia bring forth by the hand of Mithredath the treasurer, and numbered them unto Sheshbazzar, the prince of Judah." Ezra 1: 1–8.

"Now when the adversaries of Judah and Benjamin heard that the children of the captivity builded the temple unto the Lord God of Israel; then they came to Zerubbabel, and to the chief of the fathers, and said unto them, Let us build with you; for we seek your God, as ye do; and we do sacrifice unto him since the days of Esar-haddon king of Assur, which brought us up hither. But Zerubbabel, and Jeshua, and the rest of the chief of the fathers of Israel, said unto them, Ye have nothing to do with us to build a house unto our God; but we ourselves together will build unto the Lord God of Israel, as king Cyrus the King of Persia hath commanded us." Ezra 4: 1–3.

If we adhere to the Bible, the whole matter seems very plain that 483 years before the birth of "the Messiah the Prince," or 488 years previous to our A. D. 1, Cyrus issued the commandment to restore and build Jerusalem. The only objection, of any weight, raised against this is "Ptolemy's Canon," made by Ptolemy of Alexandria, about A. D. 139. He collected a catalogue of kings from B. C. 747 to A. D. 137. He lived from five hundred to eight hundred years after the kings in his catalogue; hence he was dependent on history for proof as much as we. Historians do not agree about the dates of events during that period. They differ from forty-four to 227 years. Is it proper to set aside plain Bible statements, and adopt such uncertain evidence in their place? To us, the only question to settle is this: Shall we follow the Bible, or Ptolemy's Canon? Which? If the Bible, we think the matter is forever settled; that it was four hundred and eighty-three years, or "sixty-nine weeks," "from the going forth of the commandment" of Cyrus "to restore and to build Jerusalem, unto the Messiah the Prince," or the birth of Christ the Anointed.

* And I will cause the captivity of Judah and the captivity of Israel to return, and will build them, as at the first."—Jer. 33: 7.

NEW HEAVENS AND NEW EARTH.

Why is it that, as a rule, the ministers of the day have nothing to say about the new heavens and new earth? They treat it with as much silence as though it were not in the Bible; nay, more; they persistently present themes, which if true, would invalidate this feature of Bible truth. Either this practice is to be deplored, or God's plan must be superceded by human inventions. If the plans of men for an emigration to regions over the skies, conflict with God's plan to give the saints the new earth, whose plan will stand? Judge ye.

Said God, through the prophet Isaiah—"For, behold, I create new heavens and a new earth." Isa. 65: 17. Again—"For as the new heavens and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain." Isa. 66: 22. The apostle Peter, after describing the burning day, the melting of the elements, and the passing away of the atmospheric heavens "with a great noise," exclaims—"Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens, and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." 2 Peter 3: 13.

John also saw the great white throne descend with its divine occupant, saw the atmospheric heavens pass away, saw the entombed dead arise, saw the judgment books opened and the judgment scene dawn, saw the wicked cast into the lake of fire, and then adds—"And I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea. And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven. . . . . And I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold the tabernacle of God is with men. . . . And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away." Rev. 21: 1–4. Some would-be-wise theologians try to reduce this vivid picture to a symbol of Christ's church in the gospel dispensation. But mark:—

1. This state was future in John's day, over sixty years after Christ's church was established on earth.

2. There has been death and sorrow since its establishment, as really as before; and tears have continued to flow.

3. Peter locates this state subsequent to "the day of the Lord," "in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat," and "the perdition of ungodly men" shall come—all of which is yet future.

4. The Revelator locates it subsequent to the resurrection, the judgment, and the casting of the wicked into the lake of fire—which events are still future.

The new earth state is not cotemporary with the history of the old earth, but subsequent to it, just as really as the present world is subsequent to the world that was overflowed with water. This earth is to be made new in the coming "regeneration" or renovation. In short, it will be a new world, after it emerges from its fiery baptism, divested of sin and sinners, and shall be peopled with immortalized and glorified saints. W. S.

UNBELIEF AND MISBELIEF.

The world is flooded with unbelief and misbelief. There is much pretended faith in the word of God, but when put to the test, much of it proves to be only faith in our interpretations of his word. Men are willing to let God speak if they are only allowed to tell what he means; so, much of the faith that passes current is both unscriptural and anti-scriptural. There is a scarcity of faith in right things, and an overplus of faith in wrong things.

1. Unbelief is no new enemy to the church, but proved the ruin of the Israelites in the wilderness; for unbelief developes itself in disobedience, and disobedience incurs the wrath of God. Practical unbelief, as well as theoretical unbelief, was evinced by the Israelites, even amid the miracles that were constantly being wrought to repel this element. When hungry, quails and manna were sent to feed them; when thirsty, the rock was smitten, and the pure waters flowed to slake their thirst; every day a pillar of cloud, and every night a pillar of fire overhung their camp, moving forward when they should move, and standing still when they should encamp. For forty long years their clothes on their persons, and their shoes on their feet never grew the worse for wear. These standing miracles should have kept all unbelief out of their hearts. But unbelief was nevertheless indulged in, and disobedience followed, and then the wrath of God fell upon them till they were nearly exterminated. This illustrates the proneness of the human heart to tolerate unbelief, as well as the divine aversion to it. And God's repudiation of unbelief is unabated.

2. Misbelief, or a substitution of error for the truth, has well nigh subverted gospel theology, fulfilling the apostle's prediction—"They shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." This prediction evidently met its fulfillment in the great apostasy, which deluged the church with error, and perverted the gospel; but many of those errors and theological fables are still deemed sacred by the masses, and pass current for truth; but they can pass unchallenged no longer. Misbelief must halt, and give the countersign. We will take matters for granted no longer. We insist on an examination. Misbelief must be disturbed by God's search-warrant.

It is too late in the day to raise the cry—"It makes no difference what we believe if we are only honest." Doubtless there are honest Mohammedans, and honest Mormons; but honesty never made either Mohammedanism or Mormonism true; nor will it make any other error true. "What is truth?" is a query which should not be suffered to die out. And the Savior's address to the Father—"Thy word is truth," should ever be remembered, and realized. Jesus, in settling the question as to the truthfulness of a sentiment said—"What is written? How readest thou?" It is safe to apply this rule anywhere. It will bring to light much misbelief, which has long been accepted as truth. W. S.

THE SPREAD OF TRUTH.

Error lifts its thousand heads in defiant attitude; and the friends of truth, with the sword of the Spirit in hand, should not hesitate to accept the challenge to combat. Error must be met by truth, and who but the friends of truth could be expected to meet it. It can be met not only by the living ministry, but by the spread of reading matter. Much has already been done in this direction, which has proved effectual (1) in leading many to renounce error and accept truth in its stead; and (2) in producing a wonderful lack of vigorous faith in old dogmas of theology, though not yet developed in their renunciation. Multitudes still try to cling to their former views, who have read our productions; but they do it with impaired confidence. Their faith is weakened. Though they assent to their former views, they are not able to shake off the conviction that they may not be correct. And this is one stage of a future victory.

Then let us not think that our labor has been lost. It is not so. We have made an impression through our widely scattered publications, that is of mighty magnitude. We have been undermining error, and its advocates are beginning to feel it keenly; and their lame efforts to prop up the tottering structure, will only augment the conviction in many minds, that current theology is out of harmony with the Bible, and opposed to sound logic. While the crop of truth already sown is thus maturing, we should not sit upon the stool of indolence, to watch the result of our past efforts. Our work is not yet finished. We have more of the same kind of work to do. The field is large. Sow the seed of truth in every nook and corner. Send a tract here, and another there. It costs money? Yes, but who has a better claim upon your money that the Lord? Are you not one of his stewards? And can the money be spent to any better purpose than in scattering God's truth? "Sow beside all waters." "Cast your bread upon the waters," and though it may appear to be wasted for a time, be assured it shall be "gathered after many days." Do not be dilatory or doubtful, because you cannot always sow and reap simultaneously.

We need to enter upon the work of scattering reading matter more vigorously than ever. We are not half awake yet on this point. We can be a power in scattering the light of truth, if we will unitedly take hold of the work. But it costs money to prepare publications. Shall it be poured into the Lord's treasury? Let this winter be a time of sacrifice for the spread of truth.

Now a word to distributors. Do not waste these productions, as though they cost nothing. It is not wise to cast pearls before swine. Do not scatter tracts promiscuously in a rabble, but give to such as are anxious to read; and do not present a dozen themes at once, as the mind will be confused, and so reject the whole. W. S.

ATTENDING MEETINGS PROMPTLY.

Many attend meeting, when they do attend it, on a wrong principle—simply to gratify their own fancy, and not to please the Lord; hence they are habitually remiss in attending worship, unless some minister from abroad comes along, when they are always on hand. God abhors the principle on which such professed christians act. Others attend quite regularly in fair weather, but allow a slight storm to keep them at home. On this point, Dr. Cuyler makes the following sensible remarks:—

"After twenty years of pastoral experience, I have come to divide all church members into two classes—fair weather, and storm-proof christians. This holds good through all the routine of religious life. The first is composed of those who rarely practice any self-denial for Christ. They not only dread a storm of rain and snow, but a storm of reproach or unpopularity. They are capital soldiers on parade days, but are not worth a rush before the cannon's mouth. They are loud in profession before a battle, and loud in exultation after a victory, but during the fight they are always missing. Demas is the representative apostle of this class, as Paul is the representative of the storm-proof disciple. Fair-weather christians are of no possible use, except to shame better men into better conduct.

Commend me to the christian who, when the Sabbath-bell rings, consults his conscience, rather than his barometer. Commend me to the follower of Jesus who chooses death or defeat rather than desertion. Commend me to him who, when duty sounds her trumpet, is always ready to answer 'Lord! what wilt thou have me to do?' He is Christ's minute-man. When at last the messenger of death shall call the roll, this man shall calmly and promptly answer—Here!

Unflinching punctuality in attending divine worship should not be restricted to the preaching of the gospel, but should also extend to the prayer meetings. Let us allow these thoughts to work a radical change in our practice. Remember we help make the meeting, and activity helps vitalize it. W. S.

OUR MINISTERS.

They are not all men of finished education, but they ought to be men of God, and men of activity; men who are well acquainted with the word of God, and have hearts filled with divine love. To be a minister of Jesus Christ requires two things, neither of which can well be dispensed with; (1) a knowledge of the cardinal truths of the gospel; for how can a messenger deliver a message when he has none? Or how can he deliver a right message when he has only a wrong one? Said Paul—"Study to show thyself a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.

When we run as messengers from God to the people, it is important that we have a message from God, and not a substitute, that we may manufacture. (2) It is equally important that we deliver God's message in the Spirit of God. How many use the gospel message as a means of self-aggrandizement, instead of using it simply to win men to Christ, that may be saved in his kingdom. Others use it simply as a theological rod with which to chastise those who hold theories differing from their own. This is a perverted use of the gospel.

Let the minister have the heart baptized with perfect love, and he will think less of self-aggrandizement, or carnal chastisement, and more about using the gospel to allure men from sin, and Satan, and error, to Christ and the truth, instead of driving them. W. S.

"GO WORK."—God wants workers, not idlers. "Go work in my vineyard," is the imperative command. "The laborers are few," and idlers abound. God calls us. Will we heed his call, and "work while the day lasts?" All can do something to help the cause of Christ; some in one way, and some in another way. The prevailing difficulty is, an unwillingness to do little things, if we lack the ability to do big things. We naturally want to do something that will speak well for ourselves, if we do anything. If we could preach with burning eloquence, that would secure the admiration of the multitudes, we would be willing to preach. That very gift, could we possess it, might prove our ruin. The praise of men might blind us to the motive that should prompt us to the work of God. Others would be willing to exhort and pray, if they could do it in a talented way. This is all wrong. Our aim should be, not to please or displease men, but to please God, whether by great or small acts. God looks at the motive, more than the talent. Work out of meeting, as well as in meeting. Say a few words, at the right time, to some friend. Scatter tracts. Do something. Work for God. W. S.

THE TRACT FUND.

The Advent Christian Publication Society, at a meeting on Springfield camp-ground, Aug. 22d, 1872, voted to raise Two Thousand Dollars for the free distribution of Tracts the ensuing year; and they invite the help and co-operation of all lovers of the Lord and of his truth, in the furtherance of the good cause. The times are ominous of coming events, and admonish us to diligence in the Master's work. The Lord is at the door, and what we do must be done quickly. Let the contributions be prompt, hearty, and liberal. The Lord will reward the liberal giver.

A FEAST.

What a feast was set before us, as we opened the December fourth number of the World's Crisis. First we read "Policy," by Bro. A. N. Seymour, and we held up both hands for the "Heavenly Policy" he recommends. Then we read "It Hasteth Greatly," by Bro. H. Pratt, and we said this is the true interpretation. It is the voice of God that is now speaking to us in judgment. Then came "The Resurrection," by Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe. Here we read, and rejoiced, and praised God, as we proceeded. Never did we see the subject of recognition in the resurrection set forth in such beautiful simplicity. The truthful simplicity is its greatness. It is the prepared balsam for the wounded heart. God bless the writer, and God bless the one in the office who selected that piece for the readers of the Crisis. It will stay up many a bereaved heart. The hope therein set forth is the antidote for every obituary since Eve mourned the death of Abel, and will be until death is swallowed up of life. Amen. Then we read "Paul's Boasting," by Bro. Burr, and we said, That is good; it is the complete view. Nothing can bring us up out of the mire of doubts and fears, moods and miseries, but this very laying hold of Christ's finished work for us, and standing upon it as upon a rock that neither sin nor Satan can devour.

The following, from a little work entitled "The Blood of Jesus," is so appropriate here, that I beg leave to extract a little. The author says:—

"It is noteworthy that the apostle Paul, who most strenuously upholds justification by faith in Jesus, always connects it with holy living, and frequently shows that it is the firm belief of the truth of the doctrine that leads to new obedience in the life. In his epistle to Titus, after speaking of 'Jesus Christ our Savior,' and 'being justified by his grace,' and 'made heirs according to the hope of eternal life,' he directs that the doctrine of salvation by free grace alone should be affirmed constantly, in order that believers might maintain good works (Titus 3: 4–8). And there can never be 'good' works, but on the principle of being 'justified by faith of Christ, and not by the works of the law.' Gal. 2: 16. We never do good works until we do them because we are saved, not in order to be saved.

A lively sense of many sins forgiven will make us love much, and show it practically. Luke 7: 47. And we should have such a vital connection with Christ, and such intimate fellowship with him, as will exclude all surmisings as to our acceptance. And this is a record of how he believed and lived—'I am crucified with Christ; nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me; and the life which I now live in the flesh, I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me.' Gal. 2: 20. We must be well assured of the love of God in Christ Jesus, to our own souls in particular, before we will be able to say, 'This one thing I do; I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.'

'Saving faith,' says one of the best of the old writers, 'has always a sanctifying and comforting influence.' The true believer does not divide righteousness from sanctification, nor pardon from purity. Yea, he comes to Christ for the remission of sins for the right end; and that is, that being freed from the guilt of sin, we may be freed from the dominion of it. Knowing that there is forgiveness with him, that he might be feared, he does not believe in remission of sin that he may indulge himself in the commission of sin. No, no; the blood of Christ, that purges the conscience from the guilt of sin, does also purge the conscience from dead works, to serve the living God. They that come to Christ in a scriptural way come to him for righteousness, that they may have him also for sanctification; otherwise, the man does not really desire the favor and enjoyment of God, or to be in friendship with Him who is a holy God. The true believer employs Christ for making him holy as well as happy, and hence draws virtue from Him for killing sin, and quickening him in the way of duty. The faith that can never keep you from sin, will never keep you out of hell; and the faith that cannot carry you to your duty, will not carry you to heaven. Justifying faith is a sanctifying grace. It is true, as it sanctifies it does not justify; but that faith that justifies does also sanctify. As the sun that enlighteneth hath heat with it, but it is not the heat of the sun that enlightens, but the light thereof; so that faith that justifies hath love and sanctity in it; but it is not the love and sanctity that justify, but faith as closing with Christ."

Here is the point—this closing with Christ, or being justified by faith in him, and then taking him as our daily and hourly sanctification. This is what gives the peace of mind, the pure heart, the holy life. It annihilates self, and exalts Christ. We never feel of ourselves that we are holy, but that Christ, who is holy, abides in us, by faith, and daily sanctifies us to his blessed service, even as the altar sanctifies the gold. O what a blessed freedom this gives—a freedom to do right; a freedom to walk boldly in the narrow path that leads to life; a freedom to know that we are the Lord's and he is ours; a freedom from the controling and condemning power of sin; a freedom from doubts and fears; and yet the blessed freedom to live in the fear of God all the day long.

This, dear brethren and sisters, we are happy to confess to you, to the glory of God, we are enjoying in this closing year, in the hope of immortality soon to be revealed in kingdom of God. Pray for us. A happy New Year to you all. Your sister in the blessed hope, E. S. WILLARD.

"GOOD AND EVIL."

H. BEADLE.

Good, in its relation to God, is an attribute, an eternal principle, and primarily as such it belongs only to God, as appears from the testimony of his well beloved Son, who on a certain occasion testified—"God only is good." To whom James tells us that evil in no sense appertains—"He cannot be tempted of evil, neither tempteth he any man."

God is infinite in goodness as he is in wisdom and power, each of which are related to him as eternal attributes or principles. Hence it follows, which we may remark here, that good is not an entity, a substance, or thing, having existence separate and apart from God, of whom it is simply a characteristic as a being; the same being true also as regards wisdom and power, justice and mercy. Therefore it follows that each of these attributes must partake of the same eternity as God himself.

Goodness and righteousness are synonymous in their signification, as appears from what is written—"Holy [good] and righteous art thou altogether," "and there is no unrighteousness in Him." Righteousness is love, or goodness in motion. In it is involved the idea of action; hence right action constitutes righteousness.

It being impossible for a being infinite in wisdom to err, so also is it impossible that a being infinite in goodness should do wrong. Therefore it follows that "evil," which we now come to consider, cannot appertain to neither does it come of God, as "no fountain can send forth sweet water and bitter."

Good as already considered belongs only to God. Good and evil under present consideration relate only to the creatures of God. They are abstract qualities pertaining to the same. Evil is the converse or antagonism of good, and in like manner it also is manifest only through or by action. Evil manifest is unrighteousness, or wrong doing, and it has relation only to the creatures of God, who, knowing his will and pleasure, do it not. Such is unrighteousness, which accords with that which is written—"Whoso knoweth to do good [or that which is right], and doeth it not, to him it is sin."

Whatever of good relates to the creatures of God is of him; while all evil is of the creature. Good manifest is the fruit of right doing, which is righteousness; while evil comes of or results from wrong doing, which is unrighteousness. The one or other of these qualities must characterize the action or doing of all the creatures of God. They are righteous or unrighteous according to their conformity or non-conformity to Divine requirement. Hence the creatures of God endowed with capacity for knowing and ability to do the will of God, are held by him to a strict responsibility as regards their choice or line of action in relation thereto, and any departure from righteousness or right doing on the part of creatures thus primarily endowed is "sin," upon which God does not and "cannot look with the least degree of allowance."

Good as first considered has its author as already noticed, in whom it is inherent. So also has evil its author, in whom, however, it is not inherent or an original quality. The author of good being eternal, it must therefore have existed from all eternity, as it certainly will to all eternity. The author of evil being finite or a creature of God, its duration must for such reason be limited to the appointed or allotted existence of its author. Hence we learn that evil, the antagonism of good, is not from eternity, neither can it run parallel with the same. And furthermore, that whenever and wherever in the realm or domain of God evil manifests itself, there it must perish with its author, together with all his works. As evil had no existence anterior to the creature, so also it can have no existence after its author shall have been utterly destroyed.

Such is good and evil considered in their correlations. As good and evil are antagonistic qualities, so also are their respective heads antagonistic persons. Satan, the author of evil, relating to his own race as well as that of man, is the adversary of God, whose great controversy is with Satan, the devil, and all his works; which controversy began when and where the author of evil left off to be wise, at the very point where he took his first departure from the path of righteousness or right doing; and the warfare will never cease until the adversary of God and the enemy of man shall "be no more;" till victory shall perch on the banner of the righteous whom the Lord our God will abundantly bless, when "the wicked," "evil doers," and all "workers of iniquity, shall be cut off."

Correspondence.

From Bro. L. Boutell.

BELOVED BRETHREN:—I attended the Time Conference, Wednesday and Thursday of the present week, and enjoyed it exceedingly. The preaching brethren from the vicinity were present with their various opinions relative to the time of our Lord's appearing, when a very free and full discussion of the evidence took place. All was done with the kindest feeling, so that brotherly love did continue. The meeting will, I think, result in good. It was calculated to equalize and centralize all minds to one all-important fact, that it is not so easy a matter to identify the spot (historically) of the taking away of the daily and setting up of the abomination that maketh desolate. The "wise" differed as to when the tribulation days ended; they did not understand alike with regard to definite time. But, from the fulfillment of events that justify the blessed Bible, they all believe the coming of the Lord is right upon us, and their heads are uplifted.

It was blessed to meet the old and young, who have trimmed their lamps and gone forth to meet the Bridegroom. It was soul-cheering to see a determination by grace divine to go through, by the track of events, if the time rails could not be seen. So I am among those that believe the "wise do understand." I was glad to see the spirit of early days in our history revived. This coming kingdom stock is the most valuable of any in the market. Let us do all we can to get others to take shares. The stock is not all taken. Tell them of the interest it will yield, daily, monthly, yearly—the peaceable fruits of righteousness, and in the end eternal life.

How blessed in such meetings to have one's will swallowed up in the will of Jesus so that you care for truth, the right, come from what source it may. The old heavenly ring was in the song, and I left feeling that I was benefited, and that the cause would not suffer by the gathering. O for more of that charity that rejoiceth not in iniquity but in the truth!

From Bro. J. Austin, Sen.

BRO. GRANT:—After receiving the Crisis regularly for fifteen years, I greet it weekly with the greatest pleasure. I love it next to my Bible. During my travels, I have distributed many numbers. Many read it with interest, and some have taken your address for the purpose of subscribing. I am now here spending the winter with my eldest son, on a sugar plantation. I left Vermont soon after the campmeeting at Bethel, coming by the way of Minnesota, where I passed a few weeks with my son, N. P. A., who resides at Austin, a thriving town in that State, one hundred miles south of St. Paul. From that place I came by rail to St. Louis, and then embarked on the steamer Belfast, which boat, after numerous delays—running aground near Cairo, sticking fast for two and a half days—finally run against a snag, near Memphis, and sank in fifteen minutes, with water only a little above the lower deck. The passengers were taken from the wreck by the steamer E. H. Durfee. After a perilous and tedious trip of fourteen days from St. Louis to this place, I am thankful that I have been spared.

The sugar crops here are quite small, on account of a long summer drouth. The laboring population here are mostly colored. The weather here now (the last week in Nov.) is quite warm and pleasant, windows and doors open. Within sight, and in full blast, are several sugar houses, smoking and steaming away, while planters and laborers are exerting themselves to secure the sugar crop before the frosted cane becomes fermented and spoiled by warm weather. Only two or three of the colored people here know how to read. One of them has given me two dollars to send for the Crisis. Would not this be a good field for missionary work? Are there none of the preaching brethren in this vicinity? Thankful for the sparing mercy of the Lord, and inspired with the blessed hope of the soon coming of the Life-giver, who will wipe away all tears, remove the curse of sin, and give life to the dead who loved Jesus, my trust is in the Lord, and my hope in the resurrection. May we all be prepared for the great day, is the sincere prayer of your Bro. in Christ.

Plaquemine, La., Nov. 27th, 1872.

From Bro. D. Cogswell.

BRO. GRANT:—In Crisis of Dec. 11th, you speak of the parable of the ten virgins. You say it is quite evident that the lamp represents the Bible, and the oil the Holy Spirit. If this is so, then would not every christian man and woman, that had the Holy Spirit and the Bible (that heard the proclamation), have gone out on the preaching of the Lord's coming at that time? Do you not think that there were many good people, that had the Holy Spirit and the Bible, that did not go out on that proclamation, simply because they did not have faith in the proclamation? [Yes.—ED.] Now, if they had the Bible and faith in that word, and believed the proclamation—Jesus is coming, then they would go out to meet the Bridegroom. When their oil, or faith, burns out, or goes out, then, of course, their lamps are out, for they have lost faith in his soon coming. Is not this the fact, as we see it now? [It looks so.—ED.]

Bro., this is not for controversy, but it does look to me to be the truth. O for wisdom, and the Spirit of the living God, to direct us all, as we near the breakers on the shore. Look to Jesus. Keep cool. Land ahead. God bless you and all the saints of God.

Danville, N. Y., Dec. 18th, 1872.

BRO. C. S. SHATTUCK writes:—"The Lord is still at work in Great Falls. Baptized three at my last appointment, and more are going forward at my next appointment, the first Sunday in Jan. Death is doing its work, and every heart is growing fearful, looking for the things that are coming on the earth; but the Lord is gleaning a few from among the lost and perishing of the last days. Pray for us, that the Lord may still work."

Obituaries.

WHITE. Died in Shirley, at the residence of his son, Dec. 17th, Barney L. White, aged seventy-seven years, ten months, and two days.

He was for many years a firm believer in the speedy second advent of Christ, and his death was a happy illustration of the faith which he had long held so dear. His mind upon this subject, though somewhat impaired by paralysis, was perfectly clear. He was an affectionate husband, and kind and beloved father, and his cheerful smiles will long be missed by a large circle of friends, who mourn his departure.

GLOVER. Died in Morris, Conn., April 6th, 1872, Sr. Ruth Glover, the mother of Bro. Samuel Glover, aged seventy-six years.

Also, at the same place Dec. 10th, 1872, Sr. Mariah Glover, wife of Samuel Glover, aged forty-eight years, leaving a husband and six children to mourn her loss.

They both sleep in Jesus. The last words of Sr. Mariah were—"Sing that hymn, so familiar,

'In expectation sweet
We'll wait and sing and pray.'"

Words of comfort at both funerals by the writer. A. ELLIOTT.

RICE. In Chicago, Ills., Dec. 11th, 1872, after a protracted illness, Emma Alfaretta Rice, daughter of Dr. L. C. Rice, aged thirteen years, formerly of Clinton, Mass.

Etta trusted in Jesus. We hope to meet her in the bright morning as she awakens to meet her Savior. FRANK N. BURR.

BLAISDELL. Died in Bath, Me., Dec. 7th, 1872, of consumption, Sr. Emma, daughter of Bro. John and Sr. Anna Blaisdell, aged nineteen years and eleven months.

This dear child was a great sufferer, yet she endured it with christian patience. They laid her away to sleep until Jesus comes. H. D. REED.

DAMON. Died in Portsmouth, N. H., Dec. 17th, 1872, of congestion of the lungs, Little Albion, son of Allen and Lucy A. Damon, aged three months and twenty-eight days.

Words of comfort were spoken by Bro. Martin Harmon, assisted by Bros. J. W. White and E. S. Moulton.

PAINE. Died in Suncook, N. H., Nov. 28th, 1872 (of scarlet fever), Clara Look, youngest daughter of Rufus H. and Mary V. Paine, and granddaughter of J. B. Paine, aged three years, six months, and twenty-five days.

"EVIL IN A CITY."

"Shall there be evil in a city, and the Lord hath not done it?"

This of course, refers to natural evil, not moral evil, and recognizes God's agency in the calamities which fall upon guilty cities. I have been strongly reminded of this passage of Scripture by the sudden and extensive sickness which has fallen upon our horses. They suffer, and, more or less, the whole community suffers with them. Every branch of business is touched. Nothing escapes. Nothing can escape when God stretches forth his hand in judgment. The plagues of Egypt extended just as far as the Lord had ordered, and no farther.

Man is prone to forget God and his claims upon the human race. He thinks his prosperity depends on his own energy and shrewdness; but in a day his arm is weakened in a way of which he had not thought.

There is something awful in this visitation. It shows us how easily God can send affliction, and sorrow, and sore trial upon the world, and bids us "fear God and keep his commandments." He is long-suffering and slow to anger; but who can escape his chastening hand, when he chooses to visit us with affliction?

We must humble ourselves before God, as did Nineveh of old, and "cry mightily" unto him, and "turn every one from his evil way;" and we may do it in hope, for he who had compassion on the "much cattle" of Nineveh is always ready to listen to the cry of penitence.—Christian at Work.

PROBABLE FUTURE TROUBLE.

The Republique Francaise, personal organ of Gambetta, predicts a serious parliamentary crisis when the Assembly meets in January. It says that the trimming tactics of the government only increase the disquiet of the country, and the acts of Ministers Defaure and Goulard endanger the government's popularity. The Assembly yesterday voted to continue the tobacco monopoly ten years. The two sub-committees of the committee of thirty sit with closed doors.

HONORS TO THE SO-CALLED INFIDEL.

On Friday a demonstration was made in Paris by three thousand students, in favor of Professor Robin, a distinguished member of the institute, who was stricken from the jury list in consequence of his disbelief in the existence of a God.

A LITTLE FLOOD.

The river Thames, which has already overflowed its banks at many places, suddenly rose nearly a foot to-day at Windsor. The Home Park is one vast lake of water, and thousands of acres of other land are submerged. The present inundation of the Thames is the greatest since the flood of 1852.

ARMS AT THE VATICAN.—The correspondent of the Nazione gives the following account of the arms stored for the present in the Vatican. In the magazines of the courts of Belvedere, there are six pieces of artillery, of old pattern but in perfect condition. In the gardens there are twelve large guns (Larochefoucauld); and in the armory,

Snider Rifles	N 8,000
Remington	" 1,000
Percussion guns	" 20,000
Arms of various patterns	" 20,000

forming a total of 18 cannon, 54,400 small arms and 20,000 swords.

In Brief.

—— It is reported that one thousand conversions resulted from the campmeetings held on the Atlantic sea-board last season.——The small-pox has appeared at Bangor, Me., and as a precautionary measure the public schools have been closed.——Three thousand Mormons have come from England, bound to Utah, during 1872.——A critical examination of Suspension Bridge at Niagara was recently made, and the cables and anchorages were found to be perfectly sound, although twenty years have elapsed since they were put in position. This assured stability of the structure was exceedingly gratifying to railroad men.——Japan is rapidly adapting herself to western civilization. The department of religion there has issued a document in favor of toleration to all religious creeds. They have, moreover, adopted the police system of the United States; and their first railroad was opened on the 14th October last from Yeddo to Yokohama, the emperor presiding over the ceremonies and passing over the road.——The empress of Russia is expected to visit Naples soon, accompanied by a fleet of Russian war vessels.——George P. Putnam, one of the first publishers and a well known author, died suddenly of apoplexy on Friday evening last, at his place of business, on the corner of Fourth avenue and Twenty-third street, New York city.

REST.

Long in unbelief I wandered,
Long from sin I sought release,
Long with inward foes I struggled
Ere I found the way of peace;
Oft I yielded to temptation,
Oft I did my Savior grieve;
Then to him with tears returning,
Found him ready to forgive!

I was hoping in his mercy
He would save me by-and-bye;
But I had not learned to trust him
As a Savior ever nigh;
Had not learned to trust him always,
In the dark days and the bright,
Resting wholly on his promise,
Though his face was hid from sight.

So my steps were slow and faltering,
And I faint and weary grew!
Heavier seemed life's daily burdens,
Yet no better way I knew;
Till a light shone on my pathway,
As my soul its need confessed,
And I heard my Savior saying,
"Come, and I will give thee rest."

'T was for rest I had been seeking
All those long and troubled years;
'T was for rest my heart was hungering,
Rest from all its doubts and fears;
Gladly to his voice I listened,
For he spoke so lovingly—
"I will keep thy feet from falling,
If thou wilt but trust in me."

"All in vain thy weary labor,
Vain thy struggles to be free;
I will do the work thou can'st not,
Only give thyself to me."
Small and worthless seemed the offering—
Would he such a gift receive?
Yet I gave it, only grieving
That I had no more to give.

He received me—oh, how freely,
When in simple trust I came;
Now he saves me—I will tell it,
To the glory of His name.
Now I find no heavy burdens,
Now I cast on him my cares;
Resting in his love unchanging,
I am saved from all my fears.

Now in His dear name I'm trusting,
Constant peace in him I find;
All my days of weary struggling,
All my doubts I leave behind;
I am trusting in His shadow,
Storm and tempest cannot harm;
I am safe within the shelter
Of the everlasting Arm.

NEWS FROM ABROAD.

(From our English Correspondent.)

French Agitation.

The condition of affairs in France at this time is very serious. There have not been more momentous days since the last of the Commune. The dailies are coming out with articles headed—"The Crisis in France," and all of them are anticipating grave and serious complications. The telegraph will have informed you of the stir caused by the threat of M. Thiers to resign his Presidency, unless a vote of confidence be given him. The three elements, Republicanism, Communism, and Imperialism, divide, weaken and cripple the French as a nation. They will never be welded strongly together, and Republicanism, although governmental form at present, may be changed in a few months at the caprice of the people. In fact, it looks strongly as if it is more than possible that Napoleon may soon be recalled to take the emperorship once more. One of our very first and most reliable contemporaries says concerning this probability:

"This crisis has brought the Bonapartists to the surface. The Imperialists are radiant with joy, and they have grounds to be. The 'forcible feebleness' on the part of the Monarchists, and the false position of the Republicans, tend to advance the cause of the fallen dynasty more than Napoleon III. and all his party put together. This fact is fully seen, if not appreciated, in Paris, and the return of the 'Man of Sedan' is talked of as the most likely thing on the cards."

We shall soon see if this will be the case.

European Prospects.

Peace! Peace! Not so. "Wars and rumors of wars" are floating on the breeze. The whole of Europe is highly ignitory. One spark sets the Continent in a blaze. Ambition is ill-concealed. The member of Parliament for Colchester has been sojourning in the adjacent countries during the past year, and now he has written home an address to his constituents from Geneva. He does not give the most hopeful account of the sense of security felt among the nations abroad. "It is war, sir; war fierce and terrible; war gigantic and awful!" He says:—

"I can see very clearly that the peace of Europe depends wholly upon the course taken by the peoples of its various countries. The crowned heads attempt to combine to limit arbitrarily the dominion each shall control; but to me it is quite clear that these combinations are far too frail to give any security for the continuance of peace. Austria is ill at ease, and whilst her financial condition improves, the old leaven of supremacy is driving her authorities to press for increased armaments. Italy is alarmed at this, and, over head and ears in debt already, doubts how long the people will tolerate the fearful increase of taxation. I have witnessed the intense irritation of France against Germany, and the intolerant spirit of Germans toward the French. All classes of Frenchmen speak openly of force as the only means of winning back their lost provinces. The condition of feeling in America adds not a little to the uncertainty of peace, for it can hardly be that America can be wholly excluded from European politics in her actual condition towards St. Domingo and Cuba."

Well, as it must come, let it come soon, that it may be the sooner, and

"A morning shall break o'er all the earth,
That shall know no setting sun," and no war forever! God hasten that day in his time.

"A Telegram"

Has flashed over to our country from Italy, one we have been waiting for. It concerns the suppression of the religious bodies of Romanism. Surely the plot thickens, ere the last dramatic scene of the day of the Lord. The clouds of vengeance are blacker and heavier, and the storm comes presently. The following is cut from the Echo:—

"Rome, Nov. 21.—The Bill for the suppression of Religious Corporations in Italy was presented to the Chambers last evening by De Falco, the minister of Grace and Justice."

"How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?"

The Bible.

Is true again. O, how trustworthy, that book! "Finds" are constantly taking place which give such collateral support to that book as confirms us more than ever in the assurance that it is no mere fable or fiction of man's creation. Its history is reliable; its testimony unimpeachable. Now "we hear that a most important desideratum in Biblical Archæology has been supplied by the diligence of Mr. George Smith of the Biblical Museum, who has discovered, among the Assyrian records, an account of a deluge similar to that recorded in Genesis. Mr. Smith will read a paper on this subject next month, before the Society of Biblical Archæology."

Thus shall every word of God, sooner or later, receive attestation of its truthfulness.

The Prayer Test.

Is it not sad to see the Church challenged as it has been of late on the efficacy of prayer? O that there were Elijahs to plead the cause of God, and show the people that "the Lord, he is the God; the Lord, he is the God," by reaching after him in prayer, and bringing down his answer. R. Glover, Vicar of St. Luke's, West Holloway, preached a sermon last Sunday week, in which he says:—

"Two leading men of science, in our own day, have actually written in some of our reviews. One presumptuously asks for a sign from heaven in this way. He says, 'Let us put the advantage of prayer, and of people being christians, to an actual test. Let the ward of some hospital be selected, and let all the Christians in Christendom be invited to pray for it, and let us see if there be less sickness and mortality in that ward than in any other.' And another, whose province is medicine and not theology, thus dares to deliver himself in this presumptuous style. He says: 'Missionary ships, and churches, and chapels, that are not more secure than other ships or than other churches and chapels that are not prayed for, and that the deaths advertised in the Record, which probably have been much prayed about, are not of a more advanced age than those advertised in the Times.'"

Thus the world moves on at a rapid pace in evil till it shall have filled its cup of iniquity to the brim.

Canon Lightfoot.

A dignitary of the Church of England, has delivered the first of three lectures on "Early Church History," under the dome of St. Paul's Cathedral. Speaking on Polytheism he says, concerning the time of the second and third centuries:—

"So far did this passion for deification go, that there was hardly a ramification of human action left unoccupied. Tertullian, with savage humor, paraded the names of gods and goddesses who presided over the birth and nurture of a child—Edula and Potina over its eating and drinking, Cunina over its slumbers in the cradle, Rumina over its suckling, Fabulinus or Locutius over its first lessons in talking, Statina over its first efforts at standing, with numberless others. Amid this multitudinous throng of deities, the position of the early converts must have been difficult indeed. To keep themselves pure from idols, as it was their most elementary duty, so also was their direst perplexity. No wonder that to the careless heathen they appeared morose, reserved, unsympathetic, in private life. After describing the brutalizing public games and amusements of that period, the lecturer concluded by eloquently describing the influence exercised by Christianity in bringing about the abolition of slavery."

Dr. Murray,

Of Cheltenham, has been here tickling the ears of the people with splendid sophism. He said on one occasion—"When I was a child, I used to be afraid of a shadow; but now I am a man, I am not afraid of a shadow. The 'shadow of death' does not frighten me." Alas! that he should know no better the meaning of the phrase he alluded to. He expected, according to his own statements, to have the curtain drawn a little aside, to allow him to pass through into glory at his decease. I have no hesitation in saying that expectation will "perish."

The Age of Shams.

Shams every where, and in every thing! Deceptions in the pulpit! Read this from a daily:—

"A person styling himself the Rev. Arthur Henry Morton, M. A., whose religious views are described as 'a strict prayer-book,' was on Tuesday last charged at the Worcester police court with having forged a certificate of ordination, purporting to have been signed by Lord Auckland, Bishop of Bath and Wells, in 1863. This certificate expressed that on the 23d September, 1863, the Bishop of Bath and Wells had ordained 'Arthur Henry Morton, M. A., of whose virtuous and pious life and conversation and competent learning and knowledge in the Holy Scriptures we are well assured, as a deacon, at the request of the Lord Bishop of Melbourne.' On examination it turned out that the name of the person ordained, and the word Melbourne, had been written upon erasures; that the 3 in 1863 had been substituted for an original 0; and that the certificate was, in fact, the certificate of the ordination of Mr. Lyne (Father Ignatius), of whose monastery the accused had formerly been an inmate.

The state of things which these facts disclose is really very alarming. In these days of adulteration and falsification, we have always comforted ourselves with the thought that at least our clergy are genuine. Happily, we know that such is all but universally the case, or Mr. Morton's trial might lead us to fear that we are just as likely to get a sham parson as a sham pound of coffee."

We have not inserted the above to spread the disreputation of any single individual. God forbid! Our only object is to show that the wickedness of the world is creeping into the desk. O God, defend!

Victoria.

The Queen of England has a mother's heart. She has always been beloved by the British. There are some who have defamed her, and tried to blot out her fair fame with imputations as unworthy of men as they are untrue of her. The death of the Queen would cause more universal sorrow in the empire than that of any sovereign yet deceased. Her charity is large; and her condescension not exceeded by any living ruler.

It was recently said—"Her Majesty the Queen has, within the last few days, visited considerable numbers of poor people in the neighborhood of Balmoral, and distributed among them blankets and other warm clothing."

Every patriotic "Britisher" unites in the popular cry, "God save the Queen!" Next to Jesus, we are well satisfied to live under the pacific rule of such a gentle lady. W. K.

RESURRECTION AND TIME.

M. CHANDLER.

(Concluded from Nov. 5th, 1872.)

This we understand is the fulfillment of the forty-ninth Sabbath. Then commences the jubilee, or fiftieth year, when every one goes to his lot or position; when the wicked dead are resurrected, and come up, around the city, fire comes down from God out of heaven. Now the fire of hell is kindled when the devil with all his works will be burned up, when 2 Pet. 3 will be fulfilled; when "the elements will melt with fervent heat, and the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burned up."

Now to go back to the coming of the Lord. When the Lord comes in the clouds of heaven, the just, resurrected, and all changed to immortality, they are caught away to meet the Lord in the air. The Lord now comes to the earth with all his saints, as we read in Zech. 14: 4. Then the sanctuary will be cleansed, or all the land of Palestine becomes a valley. That valley is filled up, and becomes a mountain. This is the Mount Zion where the Lord shall reign forever. He has long desired it. Ps. 132: 13. This is the Mount Zion of the restitution. Here the city comes down from heaven, and rests on this Mount Zion; the wicked are cut off so they are not; and the earth is made a desolation. Isa. 24. Read the whole chapter.

The heavens have rolled up like a scroll or parchment. Rev. 6: 14. The luminaries of heaven are darkened. The city comes down, and the saints dwell there during the sabbath, or thousand years. The Lord God is the light thereof, and when the time is finished the fires of gehenna are kindled. Now the earth melts. Here we have the fulfillment of Ps. 46. But the city is not moved, for God is in the midst of her. Here we have the fulfillment of Isa. 33: 14, when the righteous shall dwell in devouring flames, in everlasting burnings.

We shall then see the King in his beauty, and the Land who was very far off. Verse 19. We shall see a fierce people; no more a people of deeper speech—no more a language spoken that cannot be understood, but all will speak the language of Canaan. Read the balance of the chapter.

Blessed time! I want to be there. Let us labor for it. Let us keep unspotted from the world, and occupy till Jesus comes. Even so, come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly.

THOUGHTS FOR CHRISTMAS.

"Now when Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea in the days of Herod the king, behold, there came wise men from the east to Jerusalem, saying, Where is he that is born King of the Jews? for we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him. Lo, the star, which they saw in the east, went before them, till it came and stood over where the young child was. When they were come into the house, they saw the young child with Mary his mother, and fell down, and worshiped him: and when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts; gold, and frankincense, and myrrh."

More than eighteen hundred years ago the manger of Bethlehem cradled our King. Luke tells us his advent to the earth was heralded by an angel, accompanied with the glory of the Lord, so that the shepherds were sore afraid. The angel bade them "Fear not," for he came to tell good tidings of great joy, even the birth of a Savior, which is Christ the Lord. Suddenly there was with him a multitude of the heavenly host praising God and saying—"Glory to God in the highest, on earth peace, good will to men." Jesus came a babe—a holy child—a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief; poor, insulted, thorn-crowned, mocked, killed.

He lives, the first-born from the dead. He lives, and angels told his disciples that this same Jesus should come again. He will come to reign, crowned with glory, attended by angels. He was born to be a King. He will soon receive his promised kingdom. He says—"I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be." Rev. 22: 12. The time is short in which to obey the unseen, loved one; short in which to lay up treasure in heaven; short in which we may show our faith by our works.

On the day of his birth, Matthew says the wise men presented unto him gifts. Matt. 2: 11. Now, all over our land, people are preparing for the day they call Christ's birthday, or Christmas. It is not our purpose to discuss whether Christmas is observed on the right day or not. Enough for the present that people regard the 25th of Dec. as Christmas. How are they anticipating it? Making ready gifts for loved ones, too often forgetting Christ himself.

Now, brethren and sisters, beloved in the Lord, as Christians who are looking, waiting for Jesus to come to give us our reward, as our work shall be; to give us a home, mansions, to give us all he has promised, how shall we remember our absent, loved Savior on the coming Christmas day? Shall we give him the first and best gift?—ourselves, our supreme love, our undivided service, our will, our all?

"What can I give Him,
Poor as I am?
If I were a shepherd,
I would bring a lamb;
If I were a wise man,
I would do my part,—
Yet what can I give Him?
Give my heart."

This is right, but not of this do we purpose now to speak.

We give gifts to our friends, which cost time, thought, and money. Would it not please Jesus to give him the costliest gift in this direction?—a token of love, of remembrance on his birthday? Who will this year take the money they had designed for Christmas gifts, and give it to Jesus? Or, if they give to no earthly friend, who will remember in the way our dear heavenly Friend? It may not seem proper to speak of giving to Christ when we and all we have are his, when our all to Christ we've given. If so, then call it appropriating it to Jesus, or using it for the Savior.

Some may have laid aside something for the Lord's work, but if possible will you not give this extra? You will not be the poorer, nay, rather the richer; the more you give, the more you will receive from the great Giver. Try it and see. Trust him. We love him—his work. Shall we prove it?

Will Bro. Grant give a space in the columns of the Crisis for a few weeks, say to the middle of January, a space underneath Amer. Adv. Mission Society, for the acknowledgment of donations, with some appropriate heading,—Christmas Offerings, or whatever may be thought best? By thus lengthening the time, some may be able to send who have not the money now; also our California brethren and sisters, who would need some time to forward.

Will not each one influence the children to help? If they have no money, tell them to ask Jesus to show them how they may earn some. Ask them if they are willing to deny self for the children's Friend. Ask them who will be willing to go without tasting butter for a week or a month, or some other extra, which will not harm them, and thus save a little. Ask them if they will not take out some that they have saved in their toy banks. Any honest way. It is for Jesus. Tell them that in the Crisis Office they buy postage stamps, and if they cannot obtain more than three cents, two, or even one cent, if they will forward nice new postage stamps, undoubtedly they will buy them, and put the money value into the treasury.

What tiny child, old enough to lisp the sweet name of Jesus, but can, in some honest way, give even a one cent postage stamp? Jesus will accept the tiniest offering. A great many mites will amount to a great deal. "Drops make the ocean." But O! plead the cause of Christ so earnestly and lovingly with them, that they will gladly give not as little, but as much as they can. Will not every brother and sister who loves Jesus cheerfully respond in a gift or pledge? If you are willing, don't neglect it. It is very easy to purpose to do, but to fail by procrastination.

"They presented unto him gifts." Matt. 2: 11. God loveth a cheerful giver. 2 Cor. 9: 7. Who will accompany their gifts with prayer? Who will pray that the Lord will bless them, and cause them to be brought forth thirty, sixty, even an hundred fold?

The writer pledges $5.00 for Jesus, to be paid on or before Jan. 15th, perhaps, or before Christmas. The offering is small, very small, yet the Lord accepts it.

For a long time the one who pens these lines has been sick, unable to earn a living as formerly, too poor in this world's goods to feel justified in spending money for Christmas presents in the usual way; poor, yet rich in Jesus, and content; thankful that faith who hath the Lord helped; thankful for the hope of health again as a gift from the great Physician; thankful for trust, rest, and sweet peace. Jesus may direct whether it be applied to the poor, or to the Tract Fund, or Mission work, or divided between them. Please acknowledge it under the signature—Trust.

Will not others respond in articles for the Crisis relating to this subject? Some who would gladly give may not see these words, may not think of it. If the subject is kept before the readers of our paper by different writers for three or four weeks to come, new ones will read, and perhaps be interested. Some one might present essentially the same theme, under the heading of a "New Year's Offering"—giving Jesus the money used for New Year's gifts—commencing the new year by giving and trusting. If every reader of the Crisis would give extra in this way, thousands of dollars would flow into the Lord's treasury. If every reader should give ten cents, even hundreds of dollars would be gained. Let every one who can, give for himself or herself, and also for some of their poor brothers or sisters. Let every one pray in faith for the blessing and power of the Lord to open hearts and hands, and to accompany the gifts, and in the great day of reckoning, when all secrets shall be revealed, the result will be known. THE SABBATH QUESTION.

T. M. PREBLE.

"When was the Sabbath changed from the seventh to the first day of the week?"

For the sake of making myself better understood, I will change the form of the question thus: When, and how, did the "first day" of the week become the "seventh day?" In other words, when did the "first day" of the week become "the Sabbath," or rest-day?

A correct answer to this question, will depend upon the stand-point from which we look. If we look from the Saturday-Sabbath stand-point, it might be more difficult to satisfy the inquiry. For all those who look from the stand-point of believing in a regular, continued succession, or continued cycles of seventh-day Sabbaths from creation to the end of time, in harmony with that particular day on which the Lord rested, will look for that which has never yet been found in the Bible; as in its very nature it is a thing utterly impossible. But if we look from a Bible stand-point of this question, all will be plain, and provable.

How, then, do the Scriptures present the "seventh day," as being the Sabbath, or rest-day? Answer: Always, without an exception, it is the "seventh-day" which follows "six days" of labor, as a few examples will show.

1. When God "ended his work which he had made [in six days], he rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made." Gen. 2: 2. Thus we see, that God "rested" on the seventh day" which followed those "six days" of the creation. And be it remembered, that he worked only "six days" and then rested on the seventh day which followed.

2. The second example is that which is found in Ex. 16: 23–26, where "six days" were given for the Israelites to gather the "manna," and then the "seventh day" which followed these six days (and only six) was "the rest of the holy Sabbath," or as in verse 27th, "the seventh day," which was the Sabbath.

3. The third example is found in the Decalogue—"Six days shalt thou labor [and only six] and do all thy work; but the seventh day [after these "six days" of work] is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." Ex. 20: 9, 10. In the next verse the Lord gives the reason why they should do so—"For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day, [or rest-day], and hallowed it." What were they to "remember?" "Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy"—and never fail to do just as the Lord himself did—never work more than "six days," before resting "on the seventh day" which follows.

Now, to the answer of the question. It will be seen, by the foregoing, that if the "seventh day" following six days of labor, was, and always ought to be the Sabbath; then, if ever there was a time when the "first day of the week" became the "seventh day" following six working days, as practiced by the apostles and disciples of Christ; then and there was the time "when" the "first day" of the week became the "seventh day" after those particular six days of labor, in perfect harmony with the Lord's example, which we are called upon to "remember;" and according to that of gathering the "manna;" and also to that which is given in the Decalogue, as above shown.

Theoretically, Sunday is the first day of the week, in view of Jewish custom. But practically and scripturally, Sunday is "the seventh day" of the week, viewed in the light of Christian custom. And so the Saturday-Sabbath may be theoretically true, but practically it is false. And when this important point shall be duly considered, we shall have no more difficulty with this perplexing question.

If the Jews commenced their six days of weekly toil on the day we call Sunday, then Sunday would be the "first day" of their week's labor; and Saturday would be their "seventh day," or Sabbath, for rest.

But if Christians commence their labor on Monday, then Monday will be their "first day" of weekly toil; and Sunday will be their "seventh day," or Sabbath, for rest. Hence, it is seen, that the Christian's "seventh day," which falls on Sunday after their six days of weekly toil are ended, is surely "the seventh day Sabbath;" or God's rest-day, for us to observe; and not the Jewish Saturday-Sabbath.

One case will now be given, where it shows the men that Christians, in the apostle's day, did rest from labor on the "first day of the week" (Greek Sabbaton) as their "seventh day" after their week's labor was ended. This case is found in 1 Cor. 16: 2. The point is this: If, "upon the first day of the week" (Sabbaton) they were required to lay by them in store, "as God had prospered them," the conclusion is that they must have closed up their six days of toil on what we call Saturday night. For, otherwise, how could they know how God had "prospered" them through a week's labor, so as to lay by in store the required sum, "upon the first day of the week" (so-called by Jewish custom as above stated, to distinguish it from the Jewish seventh day), unless they had closed up their week's labor on the day before? This, I think, may be sufficient to satisfy the inquiry, but if not, I shall be more than willing to answer more fully.—Bible Banner.

Smith, Treasurer, reported as follows: Whole amount of receipts, $16.19. Amount expended, $12.10. Balance in hands of treasurer, $4.05.

Bro. Couch, chairman of ministerial committee, reported members of conference in good standing. Two brethren have the past year been set apart to the work of the gospel ministry. Bro. T. W. Piper, chairman of the Quar. Conf. committee, reported as follows: The first session was held at Hampton, Jan. 10th to 14th inclusive. Preachers present were Elds. Couch, Ross, Simpson, Churchill, Brown, Owen, Harmon, Leavitt, Smith, Parsons, Stewart, Randall, Morrill, Bickford, and Piper. Preaching by Elds. Stewart, Couch, Ross, Smith, Simpson, Owen, Parsons, and Piper. The dedication of the new chapel on Thursday was highly interesting, and the meeting throughout was spiritual and heavenly,—such an one we trust as honors God, and blesses men.

The second session was held with the church at East Rochester, commencing Feb. [illegible], and holding over the following Sabbath. Preachers present were Brn. J. C. Smith, G. W. Brown, J. Parsons, C. Couch, Chute, Wells, Libby, Churchill, [illegible] Preaching by Brn. Churchill, Smith, Brown, J. Parsons, Wells, and Piper. Brn. Chute and Wells were on Saturday, according to divine arrangement, set apart to the solemn work of the gospel ministry, by fasting, prayer, and laying on of hands. The good Spirit was present to bless through the meeting. The administration of the word, the warm exhortations, and the sweet songs of praise, made it truly a heavenly place in Christ.

The third session was held at Goffstown, commencing March 28th, and held over the following Sabbath. Preachers present were Smith, Simpson, Shattuck, Sargent, Fletcher, Thompson, and Piper. On account of much sickness in the place at the time, and the very unfavorable weather and condition of the roads, the attendance was small, and yet there seemed to be an ear for the truth. The Lord blessed his servants in preaching the word, and it is hoped that the good seed sown may yet, through the blessing of God, spring up and bear fruit.

The fourth session was held June 6th to 9th, at Sugar Hill, Lisbon. Preachers present were Elds. Couch, J. Parsons, Shipman, Gordon, and Piper. Preaching by Elds. Couch, Parsons, and Piper. Brn. Wheeler, Shipman, and Gordon, who are faithful men of God, and ever ready to help in the good cause, added much to the interest of the meeting. The church at Sugar Hill seems prospering under the faithful labors of their pastor, Eld. N. Wheeler. And although the weather was stormy and wet much of the time, yet the attendance was good throughout the meeting. Brethren and sisters came in from Whitefield and adjoining towns, with warm hearts, which with the many lovers of the truth at Sugar Hill, rendered the session one of great interest to all. The word preached was most heartily received by the lovers of truth, which made preaching delightfully easy. The Lord was truly present, and that to bless; and at the close, the church said "God bless you" to his servants, pocket deep, as also did all the churches before reported.

Agreeable to the earnest request of the church at Rye, an extra session was called at that place, May 22d, and over the Sabbath the 26th. At this meeting the new chapel at Rye was dedicated to the service of God. Preachers present were Eld. Couch, Lang, Owen, Harmon, Smith, Barbour, D. F. Leavitt, Sister Saulpaugh, J. Parsons, and Piper. Preaching during the meeting by Sr. Saulpaugh, Bro. Couch, Owen, Smith, Barbour, Leavitt, Parsons, and Piper. The Lord was truly present by his Spirit, to bless the administration of his word. The social meetings were some of the sweetest that it has ever been our privilege to enjoy. The church at Rye, as well as at Hampton, is very well united, and has done nobly in the erection of neat chapels, for which they owe little or nothing. The good cause seemed prospering at Rye. Your committee are happy to report the past year one of the most prosperous in this class of meetings ever experienced during their connection with this conference. The above report was accepted.

Bro. T. W. White, chairman of the tract committee, submitted the following report, which was accepted: Amount paid, $19.25. Expenses, $20.75. After remarks by several brethren, a collection and pledges were taken for a tract fund, amounting to $85.00.

Voted, that the following brethren be members of this conference: J. S. Ward, Rochester, N. H.; Sharlow Varney, East Rochester, N. H.; D. W. Davis, Sutton, N. H.; Amos Scripture, Greenville, N. H.; Stephen Dinsmore, Sandwich, N. H.; J. R. Chute, Rochester, N. H.; J. B. Paine, Suncook, N. H.; J. H. Bartlett and N. B. Sleeper, Lake Village, N. H.

Voted, that Bro. Caleb Richardson, at his request, be dismissed from this conference. Adjourned until the close of the A. M. service.

Met as adjourned, Bro. Couch in the chair. Prayer by Bro. L. A. Paine.

Voted, that we return our thanks to the brethren and citizens of Concord, for their kindness and hospitality during the annual session of our conference.

Voted, that we return our thanks to the superintendents of the various railroads for their reduction of fare.

Voted, to adjourn without date.

C. H. Fletcher, Secretary.

GATHER THEM IN.

Where the carcass is, the eagles gather. There must be an attraction to gather these scripture birds. There must be an attraction, to gather a congregation to hear on Bible subjects. I notice where there is a Sabbath School, there is an interest created by it that draws or gathers children who would not attend any place where religious exercises are performed. In many places nothing has so good an effect among careless sinners as to get their children into a Sabbath School. It will work on the mind of the children and parents. The children will think and talk about it, and their books will be read, and parents attracted to it, and become interested, and often attend, meeting in the forenoon in order to be at the Sabbath School at noon. This is the most proper time for the school.

Some have become interested in our doctrines in this way, and been converted to God and his truth by such simple means. The children are edified, and will never forget the lessons learned. Nine out of ten who attend Sabbath Schools will attend our meetings when grown up, and not be ashamed to have it known either.

In some out-of-the-way places, I know of their having started meetings in this way, and have meetings now, where they could not get a vote of the district for meetings in the house "for worship." Yet they could get a Bible class for all, nothing against, included, has done wonders in creating an interest in the neighborhood, and good resulted. Some cannot preach in any other way. There are many by places where something of this kind would interest the people, and good be done by such, who are doing next to nothing for the cause. I am not aware of it. I aim to do good, and be glad to help [illegible] a good way to preach the truth. [illegible] well managed Sabbath-School or Bible class [illegible] themselves useful [illegible] one of these ways. Sow the seed in all kind of ground, and some will surely catch.

WOMEN AND HEALTH REFORM.

One of the chief objections which people have to the health reform is, that it will not do to work hard upon such diet. It is not at all strange that those who have not tried it should think so. Always accustomed to depend upon animal food, three meals per day, it is very natural for them to think that without these they would have no strength to labor; hence they say that the reform will do very well for those who do not have to work hard, but not for those who do.

Now I know this statement to be untrue in the first place, that is not reasonable; for there is more nutriment by far in graham bread, beans, peas, rice, fruits, etc., than there is in meat. In the second place, in the last seven or eight years I have seen hundreds working hard as I ever saw, who have lived and flourished on this health reform. They have done as much or more work than their neighbors, have paid no doctors' bills, and have had good health.

I could name many instances of this among both farmers and mechanics. Though I am not a farmer or mechanic, yet I think I do as hard work as any of them. As an illustration, in looking over my diary, I find that in ninety-two days, embracing the months of July, August, and September, I have held one hundred and eighteen meetings, at nearly all of which I have preached from one hour to an hour and a quarter. This is an average of nine meetings per week all the way through. During the same time, I have every day visited from house to house, thus spending most of the day. While not doing this, I have been studying or writing. Now this is no exception, but what I have done for years, and this on the health reform too.

I am now stronger, healthier, and more able to work than when I began, years ago.

Contrast this with ministers who take their three meals a day, and live on tea, coffee, fine flour, pork, tobacco, etc. Generally they preach twice a week, about forty minutes each sermon, and attend a prayer-meeting. Many of them become weakly, pale creatures, get the consumption, bronchitis, or something else, and have to take a vacation to rest up!

Suggest to them that a diet of simple vegetable food and two meals a day would be good for them, and they have an answer ready: "Men who have so much intellectual and severe mental labor as they do, require a strong, nourishing diet!"

The Lord pity them and their flocks if they have what is good, strong diet really for.—D. M. CANRIGHT, in Health Reformer.

COLD FEET.—One of the most essential things in order to have health is a good circulation of the blood. This can only be had by living a life of temperance in all things. To insure warm feet, invigorate the general circulation, avoid over-eating, and the use of improper food. Secure plenty of sleep in a well-ventilated room. Keep the skin clean by bathing twice a week. Bathe the feet frequently, first in warm water five minutes, and follow with dry friction.—Health Reformer.

MOTHER IS DEAD.

"You will please, not to forget to ask the place for me, sir," said a pale, blue-eyed boy, as he brushed the coat of the man of leisure at his lodgings.

"Certainly, boy," said Mr. J., "I shall be going that way to-day or to-morrow."

"Did you ask for the place for me yesterday?" said the pale boy on the following day, with a quivering lip, as he performed the same office, and brushed [illegible] some [illegible].

"No, I forgot; but I will ask to-day; I will do it to-day."

"Heaven help my poor mother!" murmured the boy, and passed listlessly on the penny Mr. J. had in his hand.

The boy went home. He had to the hungry children with the loaf of bread he had earned by brushing the gentleman's coat at the Inn. They shouted with joy, and his mother held out her emaciated hand for a portion, while a sickly smile flitted across her face.

"Mother, dear," said the boy, "Mr. J. thinks he can get me the place, and I shall have three meals a day—only think, mother, three meals a day, and it won't take me three minutes to run home and share them with you."

The morning came, and the pale boy's voice trembled with eagerness as he asked Mr. J. if he had applied for the place.

"Not yet," said the man of leisure, "but there is time enough."

The same thing the morning was the same old story.

At last, Mr. J., "remembering" that he must keep his word [illegible] a thing, went to apply for the place.

The child was dead, as there was a stillness with weeping.

"I am sorry to disappoint you," said the man of leisure, "but the place in Mr. C.'s shop was filled yesterday."

The boy stopped brushing, and burst into tears. "I did not care now," he sobbed, "mother is dead."

Keep a Fire.—Little boys and girls often get tired when they try to begin to do anything, because it seems so long to them, and they "never can do it," they say; and then whine and fret, and scold and fuss; while if they should think nothing about how long it would take, but go to work and do it, it would be accomplished almost before they were aware of it.
